SENATE.

Tuesday, February 13, 1917.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m. The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer.

Almighty God, Thou hast taught us in Thy Word that if we are to look for a new heaven and a new earth it will be through the balance of the powers that Thou hast committed to us, powers of our civil, social, and religious life. The path of progress means the maturing of the full life of man, for Thou who didst send to us the message of life Divine hast said, I came that ye might have life and have it more abundantly. May we enter into such personal and intimate spiritual contact with God as that our lives may show forth that Divine conception of life and ever become fuller and diviner in its expression of service and sacrifice. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. James and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE. I present a resolution of the Board of Trade of Brookline, Mass., indorsing the action of the President in severing diplomatic relations with Germany. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD without reading. It is a very brief one.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BROOKLINE BOARD OF TRADE, Brookline, Mass., February 9, 1917.

Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir: It is with pleasure that I affix hereto a copy of the resolution which it was my privilege to present at the meeting of the Brookline Board of Trade last evening and which was unanimously adopted and ordered spread upon our records:

"Resolved, That we, members of the Brookline Board of Trade in meeting assembled, heartily indorse the action of Woodrow Wilson, President of these United States, in severing diplomatic relations with Germany, and fully realizing the possible consequences, but recognizing no lines of party, race, or creed, do hereby pledge our loyal, patriotic support to the President and the Congress of the United States in this grave national crisis."

Cordially, yours,

W. D. ALLEN. Secretary.

Mr. LODGE presented petitions of the Fitchburg Training School, of Fitchburg, and of Old Middlesex Chapter, Sons of the American Revolution, of Lowell, in the State of Massachusetts, praying for compulsory military training, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. OLIVER. I have here three short telegrams relating to postage on second-class mail matter, which I should like to have printed in the Record. The first of them I should like to have read by the Secretary.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD and the first one was read by the Secretary, and they were ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 12, 1917.

Senator OLIVER, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Change in second-class postal rates would seriously affect business of American Baptist Publication Society and cripple the work of over 12,000 Baptist Sunday schools. We seek a hearing.

GUY C. LAMSON, Secretary.

SMETHPORT, PA., February 12, 1917.

Hon. George T. Oliver, Senate of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

If proposed increase of second-class postal rate goes through it will be the rulnation of many hundreds of publications. Publishers simply can not stand any increase in second-class postal rate at this time. The increased cost of paper alone has already wiped out a large number of publications.

THE BOYS' MAGAZINE.

NEW YORK, February 12, 1917.

Hon. George T. Oliver, Washington, D. C.:

Can not protest too strongly against increase in postal rate at this time. Increased cost of paper and other manufacturing necessities threaten to cause many publications to suspend. A few rich corporations might be able to stand an increase, which would create for them a monopoly, because their poorer competitors would be put out of business. Very few religious publications are now able to make ends meet. If they are compelled to pay the increased rate it will be impossible for them to survive.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Mr. OLIVER presented a petition of the Socialist Party of McKeesport, Pa., praying that no further action be taken that would involve this country in war with Germany, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. JONES. I have a telegram here from Mr. J. F. Duthie & Co., of Seattle, and also one from the Chamber of Commerce, of Aberdeen, Wash., protesting against the proposed amendment to the shipping act by which vessels built here can not enter navigable waters until they become owned by American citizens. They are similar to the telegrams I submitted yesterday, which were printed in the RECORD. I ask that the telegrams be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They will be so referred.

Mr. JONES presented a petition of sundry citizens of Lake Samish, Wash., praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Referring to the statement of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] I desire to say that I have received a number of telegrams along the same line as those he presented yesterday and along the line of his statement this morning, protesting against the enactment of any law which might provide that no vessel now being constructed or to be constructed in the United States shall enter upon the navigable waters of the United States unless owned by citizens of the United States. I have not thought it necessary to print them in the Record, because I have received a good many from citizens in my State and I merely desire to call attention to

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I present a petition of members of Princeton University, Princeton, N. J., tendering military service. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GENTLEMEN: We, the undersigned, members of Princeton University, Princeton, N. J., hereby petition the Congress of the United States to enact immediately legislation establishing in the United States a system of compulsory universal military training. We, as men upon whom the burden of such training would naturally fall, believe that under actual existing circumstances the time has now arisen when such a step should be taken.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I present a telegram from A. A. Gray, of Chicago, Ill., protesting against an increase in rates on second-class postage, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, February 10, 1917.

Hon. James E. Martine, Washington, D. C.:

The associated business papers representing publishers of professional, scientific, industrial, and business journals of this country, respectfully request your assistance in opposing at this time any increase in rates for second-class postage. Our publications are all struggling under great increases in cost of paper, printing material, and labor. Any increase now would impose extra burden from which many publishers of very valuable publications, rendering great service to the country, could not recover.

A. A. GRAY. President.

Mr. MYERS. I present a memorial from the Legislaure of Montana, favoring the enactment of hydroelectric power legislation, which I ask may be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

of the United States assembled:

Whereas the waterways of this State abound in water power, it being conservatively estimated that about one-tenth of the total potential water power in the United States lies within the borders of our own State, a very small proportion of which is now developed;
Whereas the development of the various Government power sites in this State by private enterprise would add millions of dollars to our tax rolls and develop the greatest national resource we have;
Whereas the members of this legislative assembly believe that our forests and coal beds should not be needlessly exploited and the development of the Government power sites would help conserve two of our greatest natural resources;
Whereas an early development of the aforesaid water-power sites would induce manufacturing industries to operate in this State, would encourage railways to electrify their lines and would furnish electrical energy in such abundance that our people could cheaply electrify and heat their homes: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state of Montana to the Senate of the United States. And that a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state of Montana to the House of Representatives of the United States. And be it further

Resolved, That a copy hereof be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the State of Montana, with the request that they use every effort within their power to bring about a speedy action for the accomplishment of the ends and purposes herein indicated.

Mr. GALLINGER. For the purpose of relieving the pressure upon the columns of the Congressional Record I will state in very few words the substance of three or four telegrams I have in my hand.

The first one is from W. P. Davis, secretary of the Granite State Dairymen's Association, protesting against a reduction of the tax on oleomargarine; one from the National Housewives League, signed by Mrs. Julian Heath, in favor of the reduction of the tax on oleomargarine; and two telegrams, one from the Christian Herald and the other from Edwin R. Graham, chairman of some organization, both protesting against the increase of rate on second-class mail matter. I will not ask that they be printed in the Record, but merely make this statement to show that I have called attention to them.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I present a memorial, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Beaufort Chamber of Commerce, Beaufort, S. C., February 16, 1917.

Hon. E. D. Smith, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Hon. E. D. SMITH,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: We, the mayor and city council, chamber of commerce, and citizens of Beaufort, town and county, South Carolina, respectfully desire to call your attention, as our duly authorized representative, to the entirely defenseless condition of Port Royal Harbor.

This harbor is one of the best on the South Atlantic coast, and, though it is true that the town of Beaufort is small, the amount of property exposed to attack is limited in value, it is equally true that from a military point of view Port Royal would be of immense value to an enemy as a naval and military base, and was so utilized by the Union forces in the war of 1861-1865.

It is possible to take a vessel drawing 26 feet across the bar at the entrance to Port Royal Sound and to a point on the mainland known locally as Foot Point. From that point, within range of modern guns, are three trunk lines of railroad, the Atlantic Coast Line, the Southern, and the Seaboard Air Line, from Charleston to Savannah, crossing Broad River.

The city of Savannah is distant 21 miles in an air line, while Fort Screven, distant less than 19 miles, could be shelled in reverse.

At Fort Fremont, Port Royal's only defense, are four 10-inch guns, with absolutely no force to handle or protect them. The wharf for landing supplies has been allowed to fall to pieces to such extent that ammunition for these guns would have to be landed in small boats from a transport. An individual with a case of high explosives can now at any hour of the day or night go there and destroy these guns unhindered.

A large marine recruit depot lies open to attack within this harbor.

We have been informed that at least one commander of the Savannah artillery district has recommended that Port Royal be made the left fank of the defenses of which Brunswick, Ga., is the right and Savannah the center, and that a powerful battery of 14-inch rifles be installed at Fort Fremont, and that a railroad be run down St. Helena Island from Beaufort, water.

We are not in the least alarmed or excited in making this request, but respectfully submit that it is the duty of the General Government to protect so open a harbor from possible possession or aggression by a foreign foe, and also to protect us, its citizens, from danger and insult incident to such possession.

Yours, respectfully, fully,

CHAS. E. DANNER,

Mayor of Beaufort.

W. F. MARSCHER,

Member of Council.

W. E. RICHARDSON,

Member of Council.

J. B. Turner,

Special Committee from Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have two telegrams from Tennessee concerning postal rates on daily papers and some others. I ask that the first be read and that the others be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the Record, and the first one was read, as follows:

NASHVILLE, TENN., February 12, 1917.

Hon. John K. Shields, Washington, D. C.:

Amendment to Post Office appropriation bill increasing rates on newspapers, with enormously increased cost of white paper exacted by manufacturers, will mean that either the circulation price of paper must be largely increased or that the newspapers will have to quit publication. There would be no serious objection to an increase of postage rate outside of a zone of, say, 300 miles from point of publication, but to apply the advance otherwise would be ruinous to daily newspapers published in the South and other sections.

E. B. STAHLMAN.

NASHVILLE, TENN., February 12, 1917.

Hon. J. K. SHIELDS, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Regardless of the merits of the main question, this is no time to increase postage rates to publishers. A Government which is unable to protect us against an outrageous hold-up by paper mills should not multiply our troubles while we are engaged in a fight for existence.

Southern Agriculturist Co.

FRANKLIN, TENN., February 3, 1917.

Hon. JOHN K. SHIELDS, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I wish to call your attention to section 10 of the Post Office appropriation bill now pending in Congress (H. R. 19410), and also to a bill recently introduced by C. H. RANDALL, Member of Congress from California (H. R. 20204) "to establish rates of postage on second-class matter."

from California (H. R. 20204) "to establish rates of postage on seconuclass matter."

The purpose of these measures is to have certain papers and magazines delivered hereafter by parcel post, paying zone rates. This would greatly increase the cost of delivery and practically put many of them out of business.

You will realize that such a law would be a blow at the education and enlightenment of the masses of our people by curtailing their sources of information, a result, in a great measure, disastrous to progress. I believe that you fully realize the evil effects of such a law, and that you will use your influence and vote to defeat it should it come before the Senate.

Sincerely, yours,

N. O. Walker.

ATLANTA, GA., February 12, 1917.

Hon. John Knight Shields, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Thirty-five trade publications and allied printing interests of the South and their employees beg that you will not put a tax on intelligence and curtail the educational work these publications are doing for the South by increasing the cost of second-class postage.

SOUTHERN PERIODICAL PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 11, 1917.

JOHN K. SHIELDS, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We represent over 7,000,000 farmer subscribers to high-grade farm papers, and in their behalf and in behalf of our already overburdened publishers we vigorously oppose any disturbance of existing postal rates for second-class matter at this time. No one is now qualified to foretell the future. Wait until conditions are normal, then reorganize entire system. Give us a chance to be heard. Change now would work great hardship to all and rulnation to many and would not bring a gain to the Government.

Hon. John K. Shields, Washington, D. C.:

Executive committee of Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, in session here to-day, begs to bring before you the fact that newspapers already have had great burdens placed on them by enormous increase in cost of white paper and in all other expenses of publication. Hundreds have been forced out of business, and others probably will be if additional burdens are imposed. We protest against proposed increase of pound postage under bill reported by Post Office Committee in Senate. Subscriptions paid for largely in advance and with no anticipation of such an increase in postage. If advance is found absolutely necessary on second-closs postage, we believe zone system to be fairer and will not impose such unjust burdens.

Senate joint memorial 15.

To the honorable the Senators and Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the members of the Oregon Legislature, would most respectfully call the attention of your honorable body to an incongruity in our laws relative to naturalization and citizenship which works an injustice to quite a number of the citizens of the Republic.

Several States of the Union have adopted equal suffrage, whereby both men and women are accorded equal prerogatives and privileges in the exercise of the elective franchise. Under the law a woman having all the qualifications of a legal voter—in fact, she may have exercised the right to vote—should she marry a foreigner not yet naturalized is thereby disfranchised, while if the woman from a foreign country, ignorant of our laws, should marry a citizen of the United States she at once becomes a legal voter. This manifest injustice should be corrected, and we earnestly urge your honorable body to do so, either by amending the present laws or by some adequate enactment that will accomplish such desired result. All that we ask is that equal qualifications be required of and equal privileges granted to each individual voter, irrespective of sex or the marriage relation in the States adopting equal suffrage, thereby harmonizing the operation of our laws with the civic progressiveness of twentieth century civilization.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

The chief clerk of the senate is directed, upon the adoption of this memorial by the house and senate, to transmit copies of the same to the Members of the Oregon delegation in Congress.

Concurred in by the house February 2, 1917.

Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial No. 1C, relating to the recession to the State of Oregon by the United States of all its right, title, interest, and claim in and to "Lower" or "Little Klamath Lake" in Klamath County, Oreg., and all its right, title, interest, and claim in and to any and all of the lands surrounding said Lower Klamath Lake in Klamath County, Oreg., ceded to it by an act of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, approved January 20, 1905 (Stats. of 1905, p. 63).

Whereas the Legislature of the State of Oregon passed an act, approved January 20, 1905, of which the following is a copy:

"CHAPTER V.

An act to authorize the utilization of Upper Klamath Lake, Lower or Little Klamath Lake, and Tule or Rhett Lake, situate in Klamath County, Oreg., and Goose Lake, situate in Lake County, Oreg., in connection with the irrigation and reclamation operations of the Reclamation Service of the United States, and to cede to the United States all the right, title, interest, and claim of the State of Oregon to any and all lands recovered by the lowering of the water levels, or by the drainage of any or all of said lakes.

Be it enacted by the people of the State of Oregon:

"Sec. 1. That for the purpose of aiding in the operations of irrigation and reclamation, conducted by the Reclamation Service of the United States, established by the act of Congress, approved June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., 388), known as the reclamation act, the United States is hereby authorized to lower the water level of Upper Klamath Lake, situate in Klamath County, Oreg., and to lower the water level of, or to drain any or all of the following lakes: Lower or Little Klamath Lake, and the Tule or Rhett Lake, situate in Klamath County, Oreg., and Goose Lake, situate in Lake County, Oreg.; and to use any part or all of the beds of said lakes for the storage of water in connection with such operations.

"Sec. 2. That there be, and hereby is, ceded to the United States all the right, title, interest, or claim of this State to any land uncovered by the lowering of the water levels, or by the drainage of any or all of said takes not already disposed of by the United States; and the lands hereby ceded may be disposed of by the United States; and the lands hereby ceded may be disposed of by the United States; free of any claim on the part of this State in any manner that may be deemed advisable by its authorized agencies, in pursuance of the provisions of said reclamation act."

Approved January 20, 1905.

Filed in the office of the secretary of state January 20, 1905; and Whereas the Reclamation Service of the United States has not, during the 12 years which have elapsed since the approval of the aforesaid act, lowered the water level of said "Lower" or "Little Klamath Lake" nor used the bed of said lake for the purpose of storing water to use in connection with the reclamation of the land adjacent to said lake, and there are no indications that the Reclamation Service intends to ever reclaim the land, thereby accomplishing the purposes of the Legislature of the State of Oregon as expressed in said act of January 20, 1905; and

Whereas there is a large body of swamp and overflowed land surrounding said lake in Klamath County unfit for cultivation without reclamation upon the title to which a cloud has been cast by the abovementioned act, which it is necessary to remove before such land can be successfully thrown open to entry, reclamation, and cultivation: Therefore

Therefore

Resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That we request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their influence to have a bill introduced and passed by Congress and approved by the President of the United States, ceding back to the State of Oregon the right to use all or any part of the bed of "Lower" or "Little Klamath Lake" for the storage of water connected with the operations of the Reclamation Service of the United States, and also ceding back to the State all the right, title, interest, or claim of the United States in or to any of the lands surrounding or connected with said lake in Klamath County, ceded to it by the above-mentioned act of the Legislature of Oregon, to the end that such lake, water, and land shall be returned to said State as they were prior to the approval of said act, and be governed by the general laws by which they were governed prior thereto, reserving, however, to the United States the right to lower the water level in said lake as provided in said act.

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the Senate of the State of Oregon be directed to transmit by mail a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Oregon in Congress.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Finance, I present a favorable report on the bill (H. R. 20573) to provide increased revenue, to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and the Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes, with sundry amendments, and I submit a written report (No. 1039) thereon.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, does the chairman of the committee file a report with that measure?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I file a report with it.
Mr. PENROSE. The minority will file a report to-day or tomorrow and, of course, dissent from the favorable report of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is entirely satisfactory.
Mr. PENROSE. The minority were permitted to be in the committee room for about two minutes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania means that he stayed but two minutes. He was invited to stay as long as it was convenient for him to stay. Mr. PENROSE. I merely want to state, for the information of the Senate, that the minority have not yet had an opportunity even to have the bill read. They were permitted about two minutes yesterday to see the outside of the measure in the committee room. Hence their inability to frame a report in time for this morning's session.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think I probably ought to state to the Senate that, following the usual custom, I shall not be disposed to call this bill up until the minority has had reasonable time to examine the bill and to prepare for its discussion. I should like, however, to inquire now of the Senator from Pennsylvania, who is the ranking member of the minority on the Finance Committee, if it would be satisfactory to call this bill up on Friday? That would allow three days.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I am informed that there are eulogies set down for Saturday, and so I would suggest to the chairman of the committee the propriety perhaps of calling the bill up on Monday.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the bill is not called up on Friday I shall prefer to call it up on Thursday. I think that the time before the session expires is so short that we ought not to put it off the checked and the control of the checked and the che until Monday, unless it is absolutely necessary to do so.

I trust that some arrangement may be made by which the eulogies, referred to by the Senator from Pennsylvania, may be delivered on Sunday, instead of taking up Saturday for that purpose, because, after we once start with the consideration of the bill, I hope to continue its consideration until final disposition.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course, this is the first information that in the Senate whatever may have been the custom in the other House. I recall on a similiar occasion when the former Senator from Georgia, the late Senator Bacon, very vigorously protested against such an innovation as the holding of eulogy ceremonials in the Senate on Sunday.

So far as the minority of the committee are concerned, I am literally correct when I state that they have had no oppor-tunity even to read this bill. The hearings, such as were had, were had only before members of the majority. The minority members were certainly not invited to attend, and I do not know whether or not they would have been permitted to be present. I am not even informed as to whether or not the hearings were printed or whether stenographers were present to take down the hearings. I ask the chairman of the committee whether those hearings have been taken down by stenographers?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the hearings were open to the public; the press were invited, if they so desired, to attend. The hearings were all taken down stenographically, and the hearings, together with all the briefs that have been filed, will be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. "Will be," Mr. President,

Mr. SIMMONS. The hearings have been ordered to be printed. They have not yet been received at my office, so far as I am advised. I can not state to the Senator exactly when they will be ready for distribution and for the use of the Senate. They may be ready to-day, possibly not until to-morrow.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask the Senate to note the remark of the chairman—"will be printed." As the ranking member of the minority on the Finance Committee I have never received any official notice of these hearings, nor has any other member of the minority. I have no information, direct or indirect, as to when these hearings were held or who appeared before the committee, nor, Mr. President, have I any information as to how anyone wanting a hearing could obtain a hearing from the subcommittees of the majority.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania permit me a moment?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes, sir.

Mr. LODGE. All that the Senator from Pennsylvania says is quite true about our having no opportunity to be present; but neither was there opportunity given at any of these hearings to cross-examine the witnesses.

Mr. PENROSE. No.
Mr. SIMMONS. I beg pardon of the Senator from Massachusetts. I did not hear his statement. There is so much noise in the Chamber that we can not hear Senators.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I should like to have order, and I will repeat my statement. I said that not a member of the minority had any notice officially, direct or indirect, of the hearings, when they were to be held, the personnel of the subcommittees, or how hearings could be obtained. Some of the greatest manufacturers in my own State came to me to ask for hearings, and I was unable to get any information as to the time or the place of the hearings or how they could be obtained, and I told them to go home.

The chairman says these hearings "will be printed," and the minority are asked to agree on a date for the consideration of the bill when they have not even had an opportunity to read the printed hearings, much less to examine the printed bill, which only saw the light of day yesterday evening and was reported this morning.

It is not disclosing any confidential act of the committee to state that the most perfunctory session was held; the bill was not read; and the minority was simply afforded an opportunity to record their dissent.

I have been a member of the Finance Committee, Mr. President, for 15 or 20 years, and for a period of that time I was chairman of the committee; but I do not recall an instance where hearings, supposed to be open to the public and to those interested, held at the expense of the contingent fund of the Senate, with stenographers taking the testimony, were not held before the full committee, Democrats and Republicans. I myself know that when I was chairman of the committee hearings were held for months on the reciprocity bill and other tariff measures pending before the committee, and in every case the records of the committee will show that the then minority were invited and that many of them were glad to attend. The hearings were held with open doors, with scores of people present, the testimony taken, and that testimony will indicate that the then Democratic minority had ample opportunity to crossexamine the witnesses, and did so cross-examine them. I recall that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] was exceedingly active on more than one occasion in cross-examining business men who appeared before the committee; but we the minority have had no such opportunity or courtesy extended to us.

I do not rise, Mr. President, by way of complaint, because I have become somewhat calloused to these methods of the majority and cheerfully and thankfully take whatever crumbs may fall from the table; but I do feel that it is my duty to call the attention of the country to the methods by which this legislation comes before the Senate. It is an old story, and I shall not elaborate further on it.

When the chairman of the committee says that he wants to when the chairman of the committee says that he wants to bring this bill up on Friday and postpone the eulogies set for Saturday, transfer them in a flippant way to Sunday, I can not do more than record a mild dissent. Thursday certainly seems a remarkably early period, Mr. President; in fact, any sugges-tion of a time for bringing up the bill seems to me premature until the hearings have been printed and are before the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, with reference to holding memorial services on Sunday, it is well known that the other House has for many years adopted that as a custom and has followed it. I see nothing wrong about it. However, if there is an objection to doing that, an arrangement might be made by which the memorial services could be held Saturday night instead of during the day, so that we might have a continuous consideration of the revenue measure after we enter upon it on Friday until the end of the week.

Mr. President, the Finance Committee with respect to this measure has not pursued any different course from that which it has uniformly pursued with reference to tariff and revenue measures. There has been no concealment about the manner of our procedure and absolutely no secrecy about it.

When the tariff act of 1913 was prepared, the committee was divided into subcommittees, and those subcommittees were composed entirely of Democrats. The majority party was responsible for the legislation; it was regarded as a party measure, and the Democrats thought they had a right to frame it. We did so; and, in doing that, we were simply following the unbroken precedent, so far as I know, that had been set us by the Republican Party.

I have been a member of the Finance Committee for quite a while and was a member under both the chairmanship of Senator Aldrich and the chairmanship of the Senator from Pennsylvania. The tariff bill of 1909, the Payne-Aldrich bill, was framed by the then majority, just as the tariff bill of 1913 and all other revenue bills which have been passed since then have been framed by the majority.

The Senator complains that he did not have an opportunity to attend the sessions of the committee or to see the bill until it was presented to him for a vote on yesterday. Neither did I, Mr. President, in 1909, as a member of the Finance Committee, have an opportunity to see the Payne-Aldrich bill until the Democrats were called in at the final meeting of that committee, when the bill was laid down on the table, and we were told to take it or reject it. We have simply followed that policy.

Now, Mr. President, with reference to the hearings, they were exactly like the hearings held in 1913 and exactly like the hearings held on other revenue bills. They were open hearings before a subcommittee of the majority membership. Anybody who desired to be heard was given a hearing. I took extraordinary precautions this year to see that there should be no ground of complaint.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator give any valid reason why the minority were not notified of the meeting of the Finance I never received any notice.

Mr. SIMMONS. There was no meeting of the full Finance Committee until yesterday.

Mr. GALLINGER. The only information that came to me

Mr. SIMMONS. There was a meeting of the majority members of the Finance Committee for the purpose of framing the bill, and we did frame it in accordance with the unbroken custom of both parties. I do not care to enter into any controversy about that. We do not make any concealments about it. If there is anything wrong about it, we take the responsibility for it. Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me to make a very brief statement-and it will be only a few words-I wish to state that the only information I ever had that the bill was under consideration by the Finance Committee, or any part of that committee, was a newspaper item to the effect that the bill had been referred to three members of the majority. That is all I knew about it. I did not know officially as a member of the committee that it was being considered in any way.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state that upon the bill coming over from the House I proceeded, as chairman, almost at once to appoint subcommittees from the majority membership. I announced in the newspapers, the press of the country, and an-nounced to Senators who spoke to me about it before the publication was made in the newspapers, that these subcommittees had been appointed; that hearings would be given on a certain day and at a certain hour of the day before these two subcommittees; that anybody desiring to be heard would be given an opportunity to make his statement; and that if he had any briefs in addition to his statement which he wished to file, both the statement and the briefs would be printed. That notice went out to the country; it was put in the press dispatches and published in the local newspapers. I do not think there is any doubt about Senators knowing that these hearings were going Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, does the Senator contend for one moment that the minority members of the Finance Committee must rely upon press dispatches to learn when hearings are to take place before a subcommittee of that great standing committee of the Senate?

Mr. SIMMONS. I said to the Senator that we had pursued the same course that has always been pursued with reference to such matters. Up to the time the bill is reported to the full committee the majority members of the Finance Committee from time immemorial under all parties have framed the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Senator states that the minority had notice. I again repeat that we had no notice.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not say that the minority had special notice. I stated that the country and the Senate had notice both the minority and the majority-so far as the publications in the papers could give notice.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, Mr. President, I have not arrived at the state where I get my information regarding the proceedings of the Senate or the Finance Committee from the newspapers.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, all I desire is to have the facts before the Senate. We pursued the regular course and the precedents set us by the Senator's party. If we are wrong, they were wrong. I do not say that they were wrong. I think that both were right. I think the course that we pursued is proper, and I have no apologies to make for it. The majority members of the committee have no apologies to make for it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I challenge the Senator to cite an occasion when the Republican Party upon the Sabbath Day, or any other day, held a secret caucus upon a revenue measure.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not going to enter into a discussion with the Senator from Pennsylvania as to the morality of the Democratic caucus meeting on Sunday. If I wanted to get lessenger to the Synator from sons in morality, I certainly would not go to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. No, Mr. President; the conservation of Democratic morality would be too great a task for me.

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, Mr. President, that is a by-matter that I am not going to take the time of the Senate in discussing. I had understood, from the conferences that I had with Senators on that side yesterday and to-day, that there would be no disposition on the part of the minority to delay the taking up of this bill or to delay action upon it unnecessarily after it is taken up for consideration. I wish to ask the minority whether it would be satisfactory to them to take up this bill on Friday?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator can rest content that there will be no disposition on this side, certainly not any so far as I know, to obstruct the consideration of this bill at the proper time; but I want to fortify what the Senator from Pennsylvania has said, that the bill has only been reported this morning. The minority concede that the bill should have prompt consideration, but we surely ought to have access to the hearings in order to aid in the preparation of a minority report.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I think probably most of the hearings are printed now. If they are not, they will be put on the desks of Senators at some time during the day

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to suggest to my friend the Senator from North Carolina that I think if we get to this bill by Friday morning—there are other important matters before the Senate to engage our attention until then—the Senator ought to be content; and I feel sure there will be no objection to that on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. SIMMONS. Do I understand the Senator to say Friday morning?

Mr. GALLINGER. Friday morning.

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, that is the time I suggested.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator first suggested Thursday. Mr. SIMMONS." In my first inquiry I suggested Friday, and then on account of the eulogies on Saturday I suggested Thursday.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not understand the Senator to say

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not understand the Senator to make it Friday morning, I feel sure there will be no objection on this side.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say just a word about having the eulogies on Sunday. I once proposed that, thinking it would be a good change; but I recall that the late Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] made a very vigorous speech in opposition to it, and that he apparently had the sentiment of the Senate with him, and it was immediately abandoned. Now, I am not going to say that that may not be a good thing to do, and yet I think we ought to give it careful consideration before we make the change.

So far as the revenue bill is concerned, while those of us on this side who have given it some thought, and especially those of us who are members of the Finance Committee, deprecate the structure of the bill, thinking that better means should have been devised to raise the needed revenue for the Government, yet we know that the bill has gone through the Democratic caucus, and aside from one provision in it, as we understand, the Democratic Senators have been unanimous in support of it; and as a result we have no doubt that it will pass substantially as it has been reported.

I have been told, not confidentially, that the provision relating to the reduction in the tax on what is now known as oleomargarine and which hereafter is to be known as margarine was not agreed to in caucus to the extent that it bound the members of the majority. I am very glad to know that, because it is a very serious matter, so far as the interests of New England are concerned, as well as other sections of the country. I am glad that we are to have a chance to debate that proposition openly without having it foreclosed by caucus action. I feel confident that when that provision of the bill is debated and the facts presented to the Senate we will have votes enough on this side, aided by votes from the other side, to defeat that proposition; but I have little hope that we will be able to amend the bill in any other particular.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have just been informed by my clerk that the hearings will be ready to be placed upon the desks of Senators by 1 o'clock; that they were delayed by the failure of the dairymen to send in certain representations and briefs that they desired to submit.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very much gratified to learn that fact.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar. Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to inquire whether any arrangement has been made for taking up the revenue bill?

Mr. CHILTON. On Friday.

Mr. SIMMONS. I gave notice that I should seek to bring that bill before the Senate on Friday. Of course, nothing can be done until that time.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to state in that connection, Mr. President, that the Committee on Interstate Commerce has made a report of certain legislation, following the recommendations of the President, regarding the late threatened railroad strike. Those measures, two in number, one increasing the Interstate Commerce Commission with a view to enabling it to discharge its statutory duties, and the other-Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Wisconsin? Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Under what rule is this debate proceeding?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule of common comity.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the regular order. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada is out of order. Further reports of committees are in order.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. KENYON. I submit the views of the minority (Rept. No. 1020, part 2) on the bill (H. R. 20079) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes. I present it on behalf of five members of the Committee on Commerce, and ask that it may be printed.

I also present an amendment in the form of a substitute for that bill, which I ask may be printed and lie on the table and also that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the views of the minority and the proposed substitute were ordered to be printed and lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

table and to be printed in the Record, as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

Certain members of the Commerce Committee, unable to agree with the majority of the committee, submit a brief minority report.

There is no desire on the part of the minority to stop or impede the construction of those river and harbor improvements of benefit to the people of the Nation. A system has grown up in river and harbor appropriations resulting in waste and extravagance inexcusable, and in which national seems secondary to local importance.

The minority believe the present system of river and harbor appropriations should be changed; that a commission along the line of other commissions now rendering effective service in governmental matters should be created to have general charge of the construction and repair of waterway improvements and questions relating thereto and the full utilization of our water resources.

At a time when a search is being made for additional means of taxation of the people, and where a bond issue is proposed to be resorted to in order to meet an enormous deficit in the Treasury for the ensuing year, it certainly is no time to indulge in such waste and extravagance as the present river and harbor bill now reported to the Senate.

The minority therefore will propose, during consideration thereof, a substitute for said bill, said substitute to provide a lump sum of $25,000,000, to be expended by the Army engineers upon such projects already approved by Congress as the Secretary of War shall deem advisable, and also authorizing expenditures, under direction of the Secretary of War, upon certain improvements not as yet approved by Congress but which are of pressing naval and commercial importance, such as some of the projects of New York Harbor, East River, Boston Harbor, Mobile Harbor, and San Juan Harbor at Porto Rico. Sald substitute will also contain a provision for a waterway commission, as hereinbefore referred to.

The minority believe that this plan will not cripple any legitimate waterway improvem

H. R. 15644. An act for the relief of James S. Risher.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. Mr. BRYAN. I ask that the Senate resume the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19410) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes

3 of Rule XVI.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I wish to give notice now that in case the motion to suspend the rules in reference to the rate on second-class mail matter is agreed to I shall offer to the paragraph which has just been stricken out on a point of order an amendment, on page 4, line 20, after the word "matter," to insert "except newspapers"; and, on page 5, line 6, to strike out all of the proviso after the word "newspapers," so that that proviso will read:

That nothing contained.

My object is to except newspapers from the operation of this I think the committee is fully agreed that the magazines and those publications which carry just a minimum of reading matter, the majority of which is not desirable, and a maximum of advertising matter, should bear their share of the loss entailed in carrying that class of matter,

I think that perhaps no question has been deliberated over and the equities involved gone into more than this question of the burden of postage and the losses entailed and the profits which are made. The $88,000,000 loss in carrying second-class matter, the bulk of which is pure advertising, is a business proposition, pure and simple.

Mr. RORINSON. What does the Senator say is the loss?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Eighty-eight million dollars, It means that first-class matter, the ordinary letters, the rank and file of the people in their communication socially and in a business way, covering all the desires of the people to communicate with each other, must bear a rate approximating 35 cents a pound in order to make up the deficit that these gentlemen who flood the country with their advertisements may be enabled to carry their published matter without a loss themselves. But I do differentiate between them and the newspapers, which are a necessary evil. We have to depend upon them for the dissemination of news. We have learned in the past to discount the personal equation that the writers of newspapers inject; but I do think at this time they should be exempt perhaps from the operation of this tax, because I think they fall in the category of necessities, just like first-class matter.

If we do not at this time raise the tax on the proper secondclass matter and put 1-cent postage on drop letters, as is now proposed in this bill, you will not hereafter raise the postage on the one or raise it on the other, and the Post Office Department will be face to face with an absolute loss in the prosecu-tion of its business. I am not an advocate of the Post Office Department making money, but I am glad that there is a condition where by the use of sound judgment and fair dealing it can be made to pay its way and give the people the proper service.

If the motion to suspend the rule prevails, as a member of the committee, acting on my own initiative, I shall make the motion to amend that I have referred to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that if the amendment relative to the rate of compensation providing that after July 1, 1917, drop letters shall be mailed at the rate of 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof is defeated while the bill is in Committee of the Whole, I shall reserve the right to offer that amendment in the Senate; that is, I am not reserving the right to offer the amendment increasing the second-class postage rate, but I shall reserve the right to offer the amendment that drop letters shall be mailed at the rate of 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof. At the time I offer the amendment I shall submit whatever remarks I wish to make.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the notice given by the Senator from South Carolina does not, in my opinion, by any means remove the objection to this proposed amendment. is, in any event, an attempt in the closing days of Congress to enact revolutionary legislation upon an appropriation bill. While it avoids revolution as far as the newspapers are concerned, it proposes the revolution as far as the magnzines and the weekly publications of the country are concerned, without giving them an opportunity and without giving the country an opportunity to be heard upon it.

Mr. President, the 1-cent per pound rate of postage was established in 1885 after a considerable discussion and after a great deal of agitation. It was established by an overwhelming vote; the vote in the Senate was nearly 2 to 1; and it has been in uninterrupted effect throughout the country now for something like 32 years. Under it the whole publication business of the United States has been built up. To attempt to revolutionize this by an enormous change in the cost for transportation means to revolutionize the publication business.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President— Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will not submit to an interruption just now, if the Senator will permit me. It means to revolutionize the publication business in the United States. When it was proposed in the Congress to reduce the second-rate postage on magazines, weeklies, and daily papers the claim was made that it would involve a loss. That was admitted. The country knew it was a loss. The country knew that it was proposed to carry these daily and weekly papers and these magazines at a loss for it was accepted as a desirable thing to do because of the tremendous educational effect that would result to the country. The predictions then made, Mr. President, have proven true Since that time the publication of newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals in the United States has constituted a great educational institution. It is as much an educational institution as our public schools. It has had a tremendous effect not only in spreading intelligence among the American people and making them the best advised and best informed and most intelligent people in the world but it has had a tremendous material effect upon the American people.

The daily paper now which goes upon the rural route to the farmer gives that farmer the market that he must appeal to within a few hours after the close of the day. I do not know how it is with farmers in the South and in other parts of the country, but I know that in the West and Northwest there are millions of farmers taking these daily papers upon the rural routes and depend upon them absolutely for their price quotations on live stock and on farm products at proper seasons of

It has a tremendous effect also, in a material way, in bring-ing together the vendor and the purchaser, the manufacturer, and the consumer.

Mr. President, the newspapers can adjust themselves to these things, the magazines can adjust themselves to the change after the shock, but they will do it by increasing the price to the subscribers just as they reduced the price to the subscribers when the low rate of postage was put in. The average newspaper in the West, at least, goes out six days a week to all subscribers upon the rural routes, and there are millions of them. Heretofore it has been paying for that paper approximately a little more than 2 cents a pound, but not much more.

Now, we propose to charge that paper as much for the transportation of it as the paper costs the publisher. It is simply an outrage, in my opinion, and it is an outrage which ultimately is going to fall upon the newspaper subscribers.

Mr. President, this great interest which has been built up in this country, embracing some 1,200 daily papers or more, and approximately 15,000 weeklies, the large number of religious publications, the large number of trade publications, form a part of the very body of American civilization. It has entered into our daily lives, and it is proposed in this eleventh-hour legislation upon an appropriation bill to uproot that whole

Do you think that the subscribers of these papers, who have been getting them at the low price for the last few years, are going to be content to see their subscription prices increased $1 a year, as they probably will be if this is put in effect, and as they must be? The fact is well known fo-day throughout the country that thousands of publications are in serious straits because the cost of print paper has been violently advanced 50, 60, or even 70 per cent. This year there are newspapers and magazines and weeklies and monthlies upon the ragged edge of bankruptcy because of the increased cost in the price of paper. Many of the wiser ones have already advanced their rates; others may be compelled to do so. For the others that are attempting to meet the situation; that are attempting still to bridge over the serious difficulties that confront them; that are still attempting to maintain the cheap $4 a year rate, or $3 a year rate, for the six-day paper, shall it be made impossible for them to do so by this violent increase in the price of postage without a hearing, without warning, simply because the president of some weekly publication has informed the Post Office Committee that he is willing to concede it?

Mr. President, this cheap newspaper postage does not involve the loss to the Government of the United States which has been stated here upon the floor of the Senate. I know that Senators who have stated it have the warrant of the so-called Hughes report made upon figures something like 10 years ago, but I have every reason to believe, and every newspaper man has reason to believe, that those estimates are reckless. Our whole bill for railroad transportation for mails of the United States is between fifty and sixty million dollars a year. All the post-office transportation for all classes of mail all over the United States is $60,000,000 a year or less. There is very little actual expense incurred by the Post Office Department for the transportation of newspapers that does not consist of the payment to the railroads for the haul. You mail a letter here in Washington in a box on the street. A letter collector comes and empties that box, takes your letter to the post office, and there it goes through one or two hands and is distributed, is put in the mail, sent to the town, is taken out, and it is delivered by a carrier, or it is put in a box in the post office. There is no such performance with newspapers, either daily or weekly. The overwhelming majority of newspaper mail is either delivered at the post office sacked in bags and routed upon the routes, or it is actually delivered at the railroad station and thrown into the railroad car, the papers themselves furnishing all that trans-

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And furnishing the work in their own offices, their own mail clerks in their own mail department, doing all the work that the Government does in the post offices in preparing the mail.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is very true. Every newspaper of any considerable size maintains a small post office of its own. It has got to know the routes over its own territory, and it has got to put the paper into sacks which it procures from the post office, and in a very large proportion of the cases it delivers those sacks to the railroad train and they are thrown upon the railroad train, 200, 300, or 500 papers in a sack. When those sacks are opened the packages for each town are found there, and the railway mail clerks only throw those packages off at the proper town when it is reached. To say that that sort of service is anything like the service which is given in letter transportation is absurd. Practically the only expense of any amount which the Government is put to in the transportation and delivery of newspapers is the railroad transportation. It is not within the possibilities that any such enormous loss can be figured out as that which has been computed; but I am willing to say, Mr. President, that if there were a loss as high, or even 50 per cent higher than has been stated here, it would be a good investment for the United States.

This was a proposition which was placed upon the statute books when the eyes of the country were open. It was admitted here upon the floor of the Senate in that discussion that it would involve a loss, and the people were willing to bear the loss because it was predicted that the price of newspapers and of magazines would be reduced to consumers and that there would be a great spread of intelligence. All that has occurred. Newspaper subscriptions are not one-half so high as they were at that time. The penny paper has come into existence since that time; and the farmers since then have been able to secure a daily paper delivered at their doors and to get in close touch with the markets of the country. So I say that every prediction that was made as an inducement to the cheapening of newspaper postage has come true, and the whole system has become part of the web and the woof of American life. Now, it is here proposed, without any due consideration, without any hearings that amount to anything, without any debate that can be at all thorough, without any statistics that are less than 10 years old, to tear that whole system up, and to compel thousands of publications in the United States to do what? Not necessarily to go into bankruptcy, but to increase their subscription price to their millions of subscribers.

I say that such legislation is reckless; and while I have spoken particularly of the newspaper, because it is the newspaper that I understand and know something about, I would be equally unwilling to see this thing done as against the magazines of the country or against the weeklies of the country. I believe that this system under which we give free distribution to the weekly papers within the county lines is a good one. I believe that the 1-cent rate is a wise one. I do not deny that there ought to be some discrimination. I believe that the great magazines that are transported throughout the country a thousand miles, 2,000 miles, 3,000 miles, 4,000 miles across the country, that only go once a month and flood the mails at that time and make extra work, should pay some higher cost for transportation than the paper which circulates in a comparatively small area every day as an actual necessity of life. But I do not believe that it is just to those magazines nor that it is just to those weekly newspapers to make this change without proper hearings and without consideration.

I have telegrams received from various publications. I have one here from Edwin R. Graham, who signs himself as chairman, and he says:

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 12, 1917. Senator G. M. HITCHCOCK, Washington, D. C .:

The religious press of America earnestly protest against the passage of Senate amendment increasing second-class postage. It will work hardship to publications of Protestants, Catholics, and Hebrews, many of which are published without profit. It will discontinue many of these publications, thus removing their influence for moral and religious training in the homes of America, where the foundations for better citizenship are laid.

EDWIN R. GRAHAM. Chairman.

I have a similar telegram from the Christian Herald, of New York, to this effect: G. M. HITCHCOCK, Washington, D. C.: NEW YORK, February 12, 1917.

Can not protest too strongly against increase in postal rate at this time. Increased cost of paper and other manufacturing necessities threaten to cause many publications to suspend. A few rich corporations might be able to stand an increase, which would create for them a monopoly, because their poorer competitors would be put out of business. Very few religious publications are now able to make ends meet; if they are compelled to pay the increased rate it will be impossible for them to survive. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Those papers have a nation-wide circulation, and while I be-Those papers have a nation-wide circulation, and while I believe that the lowest rate ought to be given to the local publication with its own constituency, yet I would not localize the whole thing. I think we must have national publications, and I believe it would be a very foolish thing for Congress, without proper hearings, to inflict this change upon them.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. Kern] hands me a telegram from Frank B. White, managing director Agricultural Publishers' Association, to this effect:

CHICAGO, ILL., February 11, 1917.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 11, 1917.

JOHN W. KERN,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

We represent over 7,000,000 farmer subscribers to high-grade farm papers, and in their behalf and in behalf of our already overburdened publishers we vigorously oppose any disturbance of existing postal rates for second-class matter at this time. No one is now qualified to foretell the future. Wait until conditions are normal; then reorganize entire system. Give us a chance to be heard. Change now would work great hardship to all and ruination to many, and would not bring a gain to the Government.

FRANK B. WHITE.

FRANK B. WHITE, Managing Director Agricultural Publishers' Association.

Mr. President, that is the case. I made the point of order against the amendment, first, because it is legislation on an appropriation bill and ought not to be there; second, because it has not had any due consideration; third, because it proposes to uproot, practically without debate or discussion and practically without any demand, a law which was put upon the statute books 32 years ago after a general discussion and after popular education upon the subject.

Senators may think that they are only discriminating against the publications, but, as a matter of fact, they are legislating against the millions who subscribe for these publications, because it is to those millions that the rates will inevitably be raised.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8092) confirming patents heretofore issued to certain Indians in the State of Washington.

ENROLIED RILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 8092) confirming patents heretofore issued to certain Indians in the State of Washington.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT-CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SHIELDS. For the managers on the part of the Senate, I desire to submit a report of general disagreement on Senate bill 3331. I ask for the approval of the report and move that the Senate ask for a further conference, and that the Chair appoint conferees to continue the conference with the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee submits a conference report, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the report as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3331) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce, having met, after full and free conference hereby report to their respective Houses that it is impossible for the managers on the part of the respective Houses to agree upon any report that would secure legislation in the premises

They find themselves at such variance on the provisions of the Senate act and the House amendment thereto that they have agreed on a general disagreement, and hereby report to the Senate and House that they can not reach any agreement upon the Senate act and the House amendment thereto under consideration.

JOHN K. SHIELDS, J. H. BANKHEAD, KNUTE NELSON. Managers on the part of the Senate. W. C. ADAMSON, T. W. SIMS, JOHN J. ESCH, Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. I move that the Senate request a further conference with the House and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. GALLINGER. As we have agreed to a report stating that the conferees can not agree, and have ratified that fact, I do not know that it is in order

Mr. SHIELDS. I can not hear the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest as the conferees themselves have reported to the Senate that they can not agree and have asked us to ratify that fact it seems to me a little singular that a new conference should be created on a bill that is in hopeless disagreement. I do not know whether there has been a similar case heretofore; it may have been done in some cases, but it looks to me as being rather anomalous.

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not think the situation is hopeless. I think some good will result from a further conference. It is very important legislation, and almost all of those with whom I have consulted desire that a further effort be made to adjust differences and agree upon a bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not at all antagonize the Senator's desire, but it struck me as being rather unusual; that was all.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I understand, the situation is this: Conferees were appointed on this bill some time ago—I do not remember exactly when—and when they went into conference it was developed that there was some misunderstanding on the part of the conferees of the House as to what could be done with reference to this bill without going back to the House before making any agreement at all. At a recent conference it was agreed that the only thing left was to report a general disagreement, have the matter go back to the House, and request a further conference without any limitations or instructions. That was the trouble with which we were confronted in the original conference. I do not believe that there is going to be much difficulty in securing an agreement when we get down to a real conference on this bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

Mr. BANKHEAD. One moment. The report of the conferees on the part of the House is on the table; it has been adopted by the House, and I suggest that it be read.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suppose the indications of the situation are that the conferees are going to write a new

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I do not think so. I think the conferees will be perfectly able to take the two bills—the Senate bill and the House substitute for the Shields bill—and after they have had an opportunity to sit down around a table and consider the matter they will be able to work out a bill, taking the best parts of both bills.

Mr. BORAH. There will be the same bill and the same conferees, and I do not understand how they are going to make progress unless they propose to write a new bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have just said that we have never had a real conference. The conferees have met, but it was understood at the time that the House conferees were in such a situation, owing to some conditions that were imposed by the House on the conferees of the House, that they were not at liberty to go into a conference with a view of agreeing upon a bill. So we have reported a general disagreement; the matter has been sent back to the House, and the House has adopted the report with a view of allowing the conferees to have a full and free conference. Under these circumstances, there will be no trouble perhaps in reaching an agreement.

Mr. BORAH. I think I understand. Mr. SHIELDS. I desire to assure the Senator from Idaho that there is no disposition, at least so far as one of the conferces making this report is concerned, to write a new bill. There are some matters in the Senate bill that could be compromised and adjusted.

Mr. BORAH. The conferees would have ample precedent for writing a new bill. It has come to be more or less customary here for conferees to write new bills. I was not criticizing this particular conference, but was simply trying to keep up with the procession, and note incidents in the establishing of this rule.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Alabama if I understood him correctly to say that the conferees were embarrassed because of the fact that the House by action that it took on certain provisions of the bill bound the conferees of the House to a certain line of procedure?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; it did not bind the conferees, Mr. President, but the chairman of the conference on the part of the House stated to the House that he would not consent to changes in the House bill without going back to the House and making a report.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, was that agreed to? Did that procedure take place?

Mr. BANKHEAD.

As I understand, the bill was ordered to conference on that statement of the chairman of the conference committee on the part of the House. I want to say to the Senator from Idaho that I think we understand the rules, and that if we were to undertake to write into this bill something that was not in conference we would at once get into very considerable trouble.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is perfectly familiar with the fact that that has been done quite often.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, I think it has been done.

Mr. BORAH. It is growing into quite an established custom here.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I know.

Mr. BORAH. And I felt justified in making the observations I did for two reasons-first, because it has become a custom, and, secondly, because it was not quite clear to my mind how the conferees would make progress under the peculiar conditions here as they have been outlined. That was the reason why I made the suggestion.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think we will have no trouble in making

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. OWEN. Referring to what has been said by the Senator from Idaho that it is becoming the custom for conference committees practically to write a new measure, I do not think the practice of the Senate ought to be regarded as established permitting that, because obviously that would lead to very serious consequences if it were conceded to be the practice. I assume it is said in a critical aspect rather than in the sense of regarding it as really an established practice.

Mr. BORAH. Well, I trust it will not become any more thoroughly established; but the Senator is quite familiar with might yet be accommodated.

the fact that that precedent has been partially established. It is not necessary to go into the discussion of it. But some bills coming back into the Senate within the last 90 days have been practically rewritten, and, so far as I am concerned, I want to see a halt called on it.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to have it understood that the conferees representing the Senate are not at liberty to write new bills or to do anything more than to reconcile existing differences between the two Houses. That I understand to be the practice, and the established practice, from which no variation should be permitted; and I hope that that will be regarded as the established practice in dealing with such questions.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There will be no question about that. Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that we understand the rules of the Senate exactly as he does-that the conferees have no power or jurisdiction except to adjust the differences between the two Houses that have been committed to them for consideration.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; I only wanted to have that understood, because I think otherwise it might have led us into some unpleasant consequences

Mr. SHIELDS. Oh, I think so. It would be entirely wrong to do so.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not think a single instance makes a custom any more than that one swallow makes a summer. I recall only one instance of the kind to which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borahl] refers, although I do not pretend to say that there may not have been others. The one which I recall occurred when the conference committee on public lands reported the so-called 640-acre live-stock homestead bill. For the purpose of securing an agreement, new matter was inserted in the bill and reported to the Senate as such. The committee stated at the time that they had exceeded their authority. They also informed the Senate that they had so stated at the conference to the House conferees, and of course the bill as reported was subject to any objection that might have been made to it. During the discussion it was distinctly stated by those who protested against it, and I think accepted without question, that it was not to be considered a precedent under any circumstances. It was permitted to become a law because of the benefits which would flow from the bill and because of the impossibility otherwise of having a bill upon the subject at all.

I feel in some degree responsible—perhaps I should say guilty-of making or joining in the making of such a report contrary to the usual practice and powers of a committee of conference; and I should greatly regret if that incident should ripen into a custom, notwithstanding the great benefit it has conferred upon the people of the West, who have very largely even now availed themselves of its provisions.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think I can say for the conferees on the part of the Senate that they understand what the rule is with reference to conference reports. Our only purpose and hope is that we can reach a conference in which we will be able to adjust in a measure the differences between the two Houses, retaining, of course, the provisions of one or the other of the bills. We certainly will not attempt to write any new legislation into this bill, nor will any absolutely new legislation be contained in the report. Mr. President, the purpose of a conference is to adjust differences, and there are differences between the House and the Senate that I believe can be adjusted to the satisfaction of both Houses, and I believe we will be able to frame a report that the Senate will adopt.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am very sure that general regret would be felt if the differences between the two Houses should be found to be entirely irreconcilable, as would appear from the report of the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, let me say for the information of the Senator from Montana that the only reason why there were irreconcilable differences between the two Houses is just what I have stated-that the chairman of the conference committee on the part of the House stated to the Senate and the House conferees, for some reason, I do not know what, that he would not concede any of the provisions of the House bill until he had made a report back to the House. Now, that is what we have done. We have reported a general disagreement, with the understanding in the conference and in the House, I think, that a further conference might be held in order that we might have an opportunity to work out these differences without any strings being tied to the matter.

Mr. WALSH. That is what I rose to inquire of the Senator from Alabama-what recommendation he had to make in the matter and what hope he could hold out that the differences

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana means to ask me what my views are and what I am going to concede in the conference and what I hope to work out of the conference, I will frankly tell him that I can not state. He knows enough about the work of a conference committee to know that it is always a matter of give and take. That is the purpose of the conference. No conference on the part of the Senate can hope to go into a conference with the conferees on the part of the House and sit down and say, "Here is what we will accept, and we will not accept anything else." That is not a free conference. What we want to do is to have an opportunity, as we have not had for the reasons I have stated, to sit down around our conference table, take these two bills, compare them section by section, and agree upon what the conferees will report, with the hope and expectation that when we have made that report it will be accepted on the part of the House and the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I merely wanted to find out from the Senator what line of action he felt he could recommend to the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not hesitate to say that as one of the conferees I shall adhere as closely as I can to the provisions of the Senate bill. We may not be able to retain, without some amendment or some change, some of those provisions; but the general principle involved, I think I might say with confidence, will be retained.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, one of the great projects the development of which was contemplated by the legislation which it was hoped the Congress would enact is in the State of Washington. It contemplates the development of a site capable of generating over 400,000 horsepower. In anticipation of action by the present Congress, steps had already been taken looking to the development of that great project. For the purpose of indicating to the Congress now the tremendous loss to which the country is subject by reason of the failure of Congress to legislate on this important question, if the Senator from Alabama does not object, I should like to send to the desk and have read y the Secretary a clipping from a recent paper telling briefly about the property and the importance of it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection. The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair understands, the mo-ion is to request a further conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees. Is that correct?

Mr. SHIELDS. That is correct.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. Shields, Mr. Bankhead, and Mr. Nelson conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask that the newspaper extract to which I refer be read from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Tacoma (Wash.) Daily News of Saturday, Jan. 27, 1917.] MILWAUKEE PLANS STIR-FEDERAL OFFICIAL BRINGS NEWS OF GIGANTIC PLANT-RUMORED THAT 500,000-HORSEPOWER PROJECT ON PRIEST RAPIDS, WHICH TACOMA UNITED STATES ENGINEER INVESTIGATES, MAY FURNISH CURRENT FOR ELECTRIFICATION OF MILWAUKEE ROAD TO THIS CITY.

The development of 500,000 horsepower at Priest Rapids, 9 miles from Beverly, the crossing of the Milwaukee Railroad on the Columbia River, is planned by the Washington Irrigation & Development Co., according to G. L. Parker, district engineer in charge of the United States Geological Survey headquarters for Washington, in Tacoma.

The total horsepower development in the State now aggregates only 400,000; so that the contemplated plant will use more power than all the present plants. It is said that an expenditure of between $25,000,000 and $30,000,000 at a minimum will be necessary for construction.

TACOMA ENGINEERS CALLED.

TACOMA ENGINEERS CALLED.

The company, a New York concern, through its consulting engineer, Mr. O. Leighton, of Washington, D. C., is cooperating with the State and Government geological surveys on the preliminary work of determining the stream flow at Priest Rapids. The company is paying the expenses and the Government salaries of the men employed. Mr. Parker spent several days there outlining the work, and J. E. Stewart, of the Tacoma office, returned from there to-day. C. G. Paulsen, assisted by John McCombs, from here, are in charge of the work, and will be on the ground until the survey is complete. Mr. Parker was not at liberty to state the use to which the power would be put.

The geological survey here is also cooperating in the development of a great power project at Metaline Falls on Clarks Fork, or the Pen d'Oreille River. Hugh L. Cooper, of New York City, consulting engineer, is representing the firm which proposes to develop eventually 600,000 horsepower. The first installation of machinery will care for about half that amount. This company already has spent $175,000 for investigation. The dam proposed at Metaline Falls will be 375 feet high, 25 feet higher than the present highest dam in the world—the Arrow Rock Dam near Boise, Idaho. Mr. Cooper built the Keokuk Dam on the Mississippi River, one of the greatest engineering projects in the country.

A third power development is being investigated on the Snake River near Almota, but the Tacoma office is not cooperating with them.

Action, which it is expected Congress will take within 30 days, may determine the location of the power plant to supply hydroelectric power for electrification of the Milwaukee from Othello to Tacoma.

The mountain electric division of the company is supplied from the Montana Power Co. This power is now under Government control, but the rights are privately owned, and passed to the company before Government regulation of the water power of the country was taken up.

LEGISLATION RESTRICTS.

The incorporation of the Intermountain Power Co. is said to be a branch of the Montana Power Co. Another report is that the company proposes to supply power to mines in Idaho, while it is also believed the same plant may supply the Milwaukee.

Government agents have been investigating the Priest Rapids project recently. The development of water power at this point has been retarded the last three years, say water-power experts, since it is now possible to obtain only a 10-year lease from the Government of water-power projects, and restrictions are such that capital has hesitated to enter the business.

CONNECTED WITH MILWAUKEE.

It is said it will take several months for the Milwaukee to work out the preliminary details of the proposed electrification of 200 miles to the coast, and in the meantime action is expected to be taken by Congress which will aid the development of such projects.

The Priest Rapids project often has been associated with the Milwaukee in its electrification work.

The fact that Government representatives are investigating the Priest Rapids project at this time makes it evident, according to water-power men in this State, that legislation is forthcoming soon to warrant the development of this project.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am quite sure it will interest readers of the RECORD to learn about the success which has attended the electrification of the Milwaukee road. the desk and ask to have printed in the RECORD, without reading, a newspaper account of that. I also send to the desk a resolution recently passed by the Legislature of the State of Montana, praying Congress for the enactment of legislation upon the water-power question, and ask that that be incorporated in the Recorp without reading.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ELECTRIFICATION OF "MILWAUKEE" TO BE EXTENDED—PREPARATIONS UNDER WAY FOR MANY MORE MILES OF "JUICE" TRACKAGE—COLD HELPS ELECTRIC ENGINES—GREATEST ELECTRIFICATION PROPAGANDA NOW IN MONTANA IS WORKING O. K. DESPITE SEVERE COLD—THEY BUCK THE SNOW DRIFTS.

Electrification of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway completed through the Rocky and Belt Mountains and nearly finished in the Bitter Roots will be extended to the Pacific coast. Announcement of the plans was made by C. A. Goodnow, assistant to the president of the Milwaukee system, who has had charge of the electrification work, according to P. H. Scanlan, local Milwaukee agent.

Success of the electrification already completed has been so phenomenal that the electrified line will be extended through the Cascade Mountains. Surveys have been made and the improvement will be completed as soon as possible.

HAS 416 MILES NOW ELECTRIFIED.

HAS 416 MILES NOW ELECTRIFIED.

Four hundred and sixteen miles of the St. Paul's Puget Sound line in Montana—from Harlowton to East Portal—is now under electrified operation, and work on the 24 miles from East Portal to Avery, Idaho, is to be completed in February. This will furnish the original electrification program of 440 miles.

This work was done in four units, the third of which, from Deer Lodge to Alberton, was completed about two months ago. Winter weather has somewhat delayed the work on the fourth unit, but already electric engines are in operation from Alberton to East Portal, and a month is expected to bring completion of electrification across the Bitter Root Mountains.

EASE OF OPERATION IS FEATURE.

The outstanding feature of the success of electrification is the ease with which heavy freight trains are handled on the mountain grades. Five trains of about 62 cars each are moved daily each way across the mountains by the big electric engines, and estimates are that four hours are saved by each train on each 100 miles.

Recently Louis W. Hill, president of the Great Northern, and J. M. Hannaford, president of the Northern Pacific, took a trip over the 339 miles of the electrified line and they were greatly interested in the sight of electric engines hauling heavy freight trains up the steep mountain grades at a speed of 15 miles an hour.

NO TROUBLE THIS WINTER.

"We have had no trouble in maintaining schedules over our electrified lines this winter, for cold weather helps rather than hinders electric engines, which also buck through snow drifts which stall the steam engines," says Mr. Scanlan. "The time we save on the mountain division has helped insure delivery of freight and passengers on time. Electrification with its increased comforts has brought a marked growth in our business.

"The ease of operation, the time-saving, and other advantages already brought out have led the management to take up the extension of electrification. It is hoped that soon the difficulties of the Cascade Mountains will be solved as have been those of the other ranges. Power can be developed in the Cascades just as it has been in the Rockies. Engineers are now at work on other problems of the improvement. It is a big undertaking, but the system hopes to push it to completion soon."

House resolution 2. (Introduced by Mr. Scott.)

To the honorable PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES: We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, do hereby respectfully submit the following resolution:

Whereas there is now pending in the Senate of the United States a bill for an act providing for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto; and Whereas the State of Montana is desirous of the reasonable development of its resources under such laws and regulations as will effectively conserve the public interest, is vitally interested in the consideration of such water-power bill; and

"Whereas there exists in our State an urgent need for the opportunity of developing its water power as an aid to its industrial growth and progress; and
"Whereas there are situated within the State of Montana many large streams and natural power sites of magnitude and great potential possibilities, the early development of which, for the production of hydroelectric energy and other kindred uses, depends in large measure in the attitude and action of the National Congress in connection therewith: Now, therefore, be it "Resolved, That we, the House of Representatives of the State of Montana, respectfully ask, in connection with the water-power bill now under consideration in the Senate of the United States, for immediate legislation such as will permit, fully and freely, the development of water power in the streams and power sites on the public lands, and on the Indian reservations in Montana, under such rules and regulations as the Congress of the United States may prescribe.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19410) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I do not know whether the Chair will be willing to rule proper the matter in advance on rather than I take the constant of the cons ing to rule upon the matter in advance or not, but I take the liberty of putting the question.

If the motion now pending is agreed to, will the amendment proposed by the committee and referred to in the motion be open to amendment in the same way and to the same extent as though it were originally in order? I think that parliamentary question will determine some votes upon the suspension of the

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I do not think there is any doubt that the amendment will be open to further amendment.

We set a precedent for that recently.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The opinion of the Chair is that if the rules are suspended for the purpose of enabling the Senator from Florida to offer an amendment, which is general legislation, that opens the door for all amendments upon the particular subject embraced in the amendment of the Senator from Florida, but does not open the door for all general legislation on the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. But any amendment pertaining—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Any amendment which has to do with newspaper, periodical, and letter postage.
Mr. CUMMINS. Anything pertaining to letter postage would be in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 8148) to define and punish

Mr. OVERMAN, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to laying aside the unfinished business temporarily for the purpose of proceeding with the Post Office appropriation bill? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to discuss the merits of this amendment, either as it has been proposed or as it may, by reason of other amendments, come before the Senate; but no one could have listened to the statement of the selate, but no one could have instelled to the statement of the able and courageous Senator from Florida [Mr. Bryan] without knowing that there is an evil here to be remedied, that there is an injustice to be righted. The only thing that I desire to say is that it seems to me to be the clear and unmistakable duty of the Senate to openly and candidly meet this question, and to that end that we should suspend the rule to enable the matter to come directly before the Senate for disposition.

I do not commit myself at this time as to what particular method should be pursued in order to remedy the wrong, but I am very clear in my mind that some legislation ought to be had, and that the Senate can do no less than to meet the situation by suspending the rule and enabling it to come before the Senate. When it comes properly before us we can work out the detail, but that something should be done I have no doubt.

There has been a great deal said upon this subject from time to time. There is one extensive and illuminating report in regard to it; there have been hearings; and I am rather of the opinion that most Senators have made up their minds in a general way as to what ought to be done. It does not seem to me that we need to take very considerable time to dispose of it. I do sincerely hope that the Senate will suspend the rule and enable us to meet this matter and dispose of it. Let us not shirk the responsibility.

I have received during the last 48 hours, as every Senator in the Chamber no doubt has received, a great number of telegrams, and I have received some most extraordinary communications, communications which make it all the more desirable upon my part that we should come out in the open and dispose of it. do not want them writing to me as a Senator of the United States and saying that it is a dangerous matter as a political proposition to touch or deal with this subject, and to call my attention to the fact that some who have undertaken to deal with it have been punished politically for doing so. If there is that kind of a threat pending over this body, it ought to meet it by disposing of this question, and I sincerely hope that we may do so.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am very glad the able and patriotic Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] has made that statement. I am not in any way interested in the publication of a newspaper, and, therefore, what I say will not be colored by personal interests. However, I have devoted a good deal of my life to the newspaper business. I know the difficulties, trials, and tribulations of the country newspaper because I have been a part of it. The country newspaper does a great service to mankind. Its editor lives in close contact with his subscribers; he is familiar with their wants, moved by their necessities, sympathizes with them in their sorrow, and renecessities, sympatmizes with them in their sorrow, and re-joices in their hour of happiness. His columns are devoted to the protection of their interests. He supports the measures that will promote the interests of the toiler, publishes the news useful and helpful to his subscribers in the management of their affairs. He stands for measures of reform and inculcates moral truths, all of which is for the public good. I would not have this Congress enact a law that would in any way hinder or engagement the honest newspapers in the performance of its or encumber the honest newspaper in the performance of its proper function or deny to its owner a fair return from the money invested in the plant.

I realize the very great advantage which the people of the country derive from the circulation of a great, clean, intelligent, brave newspaper. The opportunity of the editor to serve gent, brave newspaper. The opportunity of the editor to serve his country and help his countrymen is greater than any other function in modern society. I realize also that the rural mail delivery and all the facilities provided by the Government for the distribution of newspapers have wrought a wonderful work in the matter of education.

The able and learned Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCH-COCK] spoke of the great newspapers that have grown up under this system which was established many years ago. He referred to the fact that newspapers are sold cheaper now than heretofore. That is all very good and very true; but the newspaper did not reduce the subscription price to serve an altru-istic purpose because of any special desire to benefit the reader. That was not the sublime purpose that inspired the newspaper manager's soul. The price was reduced that all people might be able to buy it, the circulation increased, and the value of its advertising space enhanced. The newspapers do not make any money on the subscription price, any way, but every subscriber added to the list increases the rate charged the advertiser.

Now, to say that the American people should be forced to give this subsidy to the newspapers to the amount I think the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] said of about $80,-000,000 a year is not fair, it is not just to the other taxpayers, and the Senate can not afford to be intimidated in the performance of its manifest duty because perhaps you may incur the displeasure of some newspaper publisher who would resent cutting down his profit. I can not think there is a Senator in this Chamber who would be deterred from the performance of his duty by such an ignoble consideration.

The same argument made by the Senator from Nebraska would apply against revising the tariff, because all the great business enterprises of this country grew up under the foster-ing care of a protective tariff. Shall the abuse be permitted to continue when we know it is a subsidy, when we know we are giving it to an enterprise, that it is not altruistic in its purposes, that it is not a charitable concern by any means, but rather a cold-blooded business undertaking?

To-day in the United States the large newspapers are making more money than they ever made before; they are getting larger prices for their advertising space and therefore better able to bear a part of the enormous expense of government at this time.

The newspapers of the country are responsible more than any other agency for the creation of the public sentiment that has caused Congress to make the unprecedented, unparalleled appropriations that have created the deficit in the Treasury.

I submit, Mr. President, it is not fair to the American people to further increase that deficit by voting this undeserved and unnecessary subsidy to the metropolitan newspapers and magazines of the United States.

The motion made by the Senator from Florida ought to prevail, the rule should be suspended, and the amendment proposed by the committee should be adopted because it is right. We owe by the committee should be adopted because it is right.

it to the American people to do that.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, the question of doing something to regulate the large newspaper corporations of the country and to discourage and destroy if possible the venality which now so largely controls them is a very grave question before the American people. I have recently become aware of an instance that I think exceeds in corruption and lack of patriotism on the part of many of the large newspapers of the country anything that ever happened before in the history of the press. Some years ago I saw a ballad, possibly by Kipling—it ce tainly was Kiplingesque—entitled "The Russian Battleship," story of a battleship that had been built, equipped, and paid for out of the Russian treasury, and yet never existed at all. The books of the Imperial treasury were balanced, so to speak, by entering, according to the ballad, against the entries for this fictitious ship, charges against the resources of Russia, the simple statement, "Lost at sea."

Mr. President, this story, poetical or imaginary, as it may be, of corruption in the Russian naval administration was doubtless smiled at, in rather a superior way, by the English-speaking peoples who read it. Such a thing happening in the Russian Navy or the Turkish Navy or the Chinese Navy, from our standpoint of Angle-Saxon superiority, could not possibly happen to our navies.

Yet, Mr. President, something as bad as that or worse has been attempted and, so far as many of our great newspapers are concerned, has happened within the last three or four weeks, and I am under the impression that the Members of the Senate, so skillfully has this matter been concealed, are hardly aware of the point of the matter. This thing that was acceptable to so much of the press of the country not only implied the loss of one battleship, but it implies the possible destruc-tion of our whole fleet. It implied, in effect, leaving our coasts undefended by our battleships, and, in the face of the great movement for preparedness, shows a combination between the venality of a great corporation and the assistant venality of Yet the incident itself has escaped the attention and understanding of the American people as well as of many of their legislative representatives here in Washington.

I refer to the question of the quality of shells for the Navy. What good is there in having a Navy, in having educated naval officers, in having expensive battleships, in having great guns upon those battleships, and manufacturing your powder with expense and care when, by a conspiracy for profit, defective shells must be used in meeting an enemy fleet?

Mr. President, the policy of having defective shells to fire at an enemy, which has been defended by some of the great shellmaking corporations in this country has been covered up, in its horrid details, by venality and suppression of news in many of our great newspapers, evidencing a willingness to disarm our fleet and leave our country undefended, if carried to the conclusion that these people evidently desired.

But fortunately we have a brave and honest man at the head of the Navy Department in Secretary Daniels. He had been caricatured by these very people who would disarm our fleet, extensively caricatured, because they knew the type of man they had to deal with. They sought to break him down, knowing him to be too well informed and too courageous for We have also brave and able officers in the their purposes. control of our Navy, officers standing behind an honest Secretary, and they were all willing to expose this thing as far as it lay in the power of the Secretary and the officers of the Navy to expose it, when most of the press of the country was endeavoring to conceal it.

Mr. President, money seems to have passed. This betrayal of our Navy by the press was apparently paid for. The head of the great concern that made most of the defective shells put in the newspapers of the country expensive advertisements attacking the Navy Department for giving this contract to a foreign company. Immediately after that the Secretary of the Navy prepared a bulletin, and that bulletin gave the details of this defective-shell business, but the heart of that bulletin was cut out by the newspapers of the country. I have mentioned the matter to a half dozen Senators and none of them, with one exception, had any knowledge of the actual facts in the One great newspaper, the New York Times, had a full statement of the Navy Department bulletin. public service if it could be exactly ascertained just what papers accepted the advertising and suppressed the most convincing details of the Navy Department bulletin. So far as I am advised a great number of the papers of the country have suppressed the vital portions of that bulletin.

Mr. President, does the country understand that the Bethlehem Steel Co., out of thirty-four 14-inch shells submitted for test, could only pass three of them, or, in other words, that an American battleship firing 34 such shells at an enemy would be firing only 3 perfect shells? So it went through the list. One company, however, got up to 73 per cent of good shells.

On the other hand, the foreign company that got the contract qualified every one of its shells, or 100 per cent; so that using those shells every one fired at an enemy would be good, and our Navy would at least have an equal chance with a navy equally well provided with good missiles in its great guns.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield? I desire to ask him a question for my own information. I understood him to say a moment ago that a foreign company had made the test with its shells.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The foreign company qualified 100 per cent. So the Secretary of the Navy says. I will read from this statement very briefly, the main part that was apparently suppressed by the newspapers, so that the Senator, who naturally may not have seen what had been suppressed, will understand the situation:

stand the situation:

In 1913 the Bureau of Ordnance, convinced by reports from abroad that the makers of shells for foreign navies had succeeded in perfecting an armor-piercing shell which could pass more severe tests than those we were stipulating up to that time, increased the severity of our own requirements, and, convinced that there was no good reason why our manufacturers could not manufacture shells of equally good quality, raised our test requirements. There was an immediate storm of protest from those companies enjoying practically the monopoly of this business, although it was pointed out that these conditions were no more severe nor even as severe as those enforced abroad, and that shells that could meet these tests were actually being manufactured abroad and could be manufactured here. Some American companies seemed to think that it was our duty to let them go ahead in the same old way, manufacturing shells inferior to the best rather than to expect them to improve their product. Of course, their pleas and even their thinly veiled threats to go out of the business if we did not concede this right to them were ignored.

Now. Mr. President, here come the deadly actual facts. Here

Now, Mr. President, here come the deadly actual facts. Here come the facts that the press quite generally, so far as I am informed, suppressed, the very newspapers that received the large advertisements from this great corporation a few days before. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Vardaman] said just now that the newspapers to-day are not running on their subscriptions, that they are running on their advertisement accounts, and this is a pretty good illustration of how completely they are running on their advertisement accounts, especially when dealing with a matter that is absolutely vital to the defense of the country. The Secretary of the Navy, continuing this bulletin, says:

I regret to say that these companies, apparently secure in the belief that we would have to take whatever kind of shells they manufactured anyway, and at any price they saw fit to make, have not improved their projectiles to meet the real requirements. I would be most reluctant to publish these figures did I not believe that they were well-known abroad, and in view of this I feel no harm can be done in letting our own country know the facts.

Out of thirty-four 14-inch shells submitted by the Bethlehem Steel Co. for test 3 passed, a percentage of S.S. The Crucible Steel Co. managed to get 37.7 per cent of the sample shells submitted passed, and the Midvale, which apparently showed more enterprise and real desire to bring up the standard than others, passed 73 per cent, a most gratifying improvement over the others, and which shows that our contention that American companies can produce good shells is well founded. Of the shells submitted by the Hadfields (Ltd.), consisting of three sample shells and six additional test shells, not a single one failed to meet all the requirements.

Mr. President, I would like to put this entire bulletin from the Navy Department in the RECORD, and if there is no objection I will not read it further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Brandegee in the chair). Without objection consent is given.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT FROM NAVY DEPARTMENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 20, 1916.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT FROM NAY DEPARTMENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 20, 1916.

Several newspaper comments on the recent award of armor-piercing shells to an English firm, evidently based on a complete misunder-standing of the situation, and a particularly silly article in the Daily Metal Reporter of January 15 convince me that a concise statement of the experiences of the department in obtaining shells equal in quality to those used by foreign navies at a reasonable price is necessary to those used by foreign navies at a reasonable price is necessary to the to those used by foreign navies at a reasonable price is necessary to the price of the third price of the strain of the British Government to create a panic in the American steel market, so that the British purchasers of steel could batter down the prices. Aside from the patter absurdity of the strain of the British Government to create a panic in the American steel market, so that the British purchasers of steel could batter down the prices. Aside from the patter absurdity of the same shells at that time. When certain was able to forecast the situation to-day, as Hadfields put in their original bid for practically the same shells at that time. When certain American manufacturers learned in 1914 that Hadfields would submit bids, they reduced their price from $500 to $515 each on 14-inch shells and on other sizes in Navy to effect a saving of $1,077,210 on the one order. The department wishes to give all its orders to American manufacturers whenever they quote reasonable prices and furnish shells that meet Navy requirements. When the average and furnish shells that meet Navy requirements of the Government to build a projectile factory and give a construction of the Government to build a projectile factory and give a construction of the Government of the host patients and the papers with advertisement criticising the Navy Department, admits in its latest advertisement criticising the Navy Department, admits in its latest advertise of defense, when the fate of the battle may easily depend upon this single element, can not possibly be expressed by any amount of money, however large.

In 1913 the Bureau of Ordnance, convinced by reports from abroad that the makers of shells for foreign navies had succeeded in perfecting an armor-piercing shell which could pass more severe tests than those we were stipulating up to that time, increased the severity of our own requirements and, convinced that there was no good reason why our manufacturers could not manufacture shells of equally good quality, raised our test requirements. There was an immediate storm of protests from those companies enjoying practically the monopoly of this business, although it was pointed out that these conditions were no more severe nor even as severe as those enforced abroad and that shells that could meet these tests were actually being manufactured abroad and could be manufactured here. Some American companies seemed to think it was our duty to let them go ahead in the same old way, manufacturing shells inferior to the best rather than to expect them to improve their product. Of course, their pleas and even their thinly veiled threats to go out of the business if we did not concede this right to them were ignored.

I regret to say that these companies, apparently secure in the belief that we would have to take whatever kind of shells they manufactured, anyway, and at any price they saw fit to make, have not improved their projectiles to meet the real requirements. I would be most reductant to publish these figures did I not believe that they were coll known abroad, and, in view of this, I feel no harm can be done in letting our own country know the facts. Out of thirty-four 14-inch shells submitted by the Bethlehem Steel Co. for test, three passed, a percentage of 8.8. The Crucible Steel Co. managed to get 37.7 per cent of the sample shells submitted passed; and the Midvale, which apparently showed more enterprise and real desire to bring up the standard than others, passed 73 per cent, a most gratifying improvement over the others, and which shows that our contention that American companies can produce good shells is well founded. Of the shells submitted by the Hadfields (Ltd.), consisting of three sample shells and six additional test shells, not a single one failed to meet all the requirements. ments.

In view of this record and of the necessity of having our ammunition equal to that of other countries, I felt that I would have been criminally negligent, even if no question of price were involved, in refusing to accept the bid of the Haddelds. I am determined that our Navy shall have as good ammunition as any other nation and, if possible, better ammunition, and will buy such ammunition at any time and any place that it can be best obtained.

As I have repeatedly pointed out, all questions of price or profits being eliminated, a monopoly invariably leads to stagnation. It is only human nature for a firm certain of getting an order to avoid the expense of the experiments and improved processes required to improve the quality of its goods. This is exactly what has happened in the manufacture of armor-piercing projectiles. Nothing could better illustrate the necessity of competition if we are to keep abreast of other Governments and of the soundness of my contention that if competition can not be secured otherwise the Government itself must compete.

As to the contention that by establishing a Navy plant we are going to force private manufacturers out of business, it is an absurd and untenable theory. Our requirements, with an ever-increasing Navy, will of necessity be greater each year than the year previous. There will always be plenty of work for the private manufacturers so long as they are willing to improve their product so as to keep abreast of foreign Governments and to quote a just and reasonable price for what they make.

I have never had in mind a Navy plant of greater capacity, working make.

I have never had in mind a Navy plant of greater capacity, working one shift of men, than one-third of the total amount required by the Navy. The two-thirds left for the private manufacturers, with our new ships in commission, will be greater than the whole amount of a few years ago. Only in case of an utter failure on the part of the private manufacturers to keep their product abreast of the times or to quote prices in any way reasonable would it be necessary for the Navy, by working three shifts instead of one, to manufacture enough material to cover our entire needs.

In recent years the Navy has built some of its own ships, has manufactured a large amount of its own powder, and has also undertaken to manufacture a number of smaller articles which are also purchased; yet to-day we have more work for the shipyards than they can handle; the powder manufacturers are still receiving contracts; and in the smaller materials we have no complaints from the private manufacturers that we have driven them out of business. The theory that a Navy plant will result in a Government monopoly has been proved false by what has happened as well as being obviously unsound.

Mr. THOMAS, Mr. President I morely wish to say if the

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I merely wish to say, if the Senator from Maryland will permit me, that the suppression of important information which is detailed in that bulletin is not an isolated instance. During the existence of the present Congress the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], and myself, upon more than one occasion, called attention to the testimony of certain naval officers, presumably experts upon the subject, to the effect that before the outbreak of the European war the Navy of the United States ranked second in strength to all the navies of the world; in other words, that our naval strength was only second to that of Great Britain at that time; and the same statement was made two or three times from other sources. I have never been able to observe that that information was given to the public; yet it is a very important matter.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I will briefly conclude what I have to say on this subject, as I do not expect to vote for the amendment suggested by the Senator from Florida. I do not believe, Mr. President, that this matter of newspaper postal rates, which should go with some regulation or provision for fair journalism, ought to be taken up in this way. I think the question of these rates is a very large and a very grave question. I think it is so large a question that it has got to be dealt with more completely than is possible on an appropria-tion bill and under the circumstances which now confront the Senate. I am convinced that the whole matter has to be more fully gone into, and the question of the rates dealt with at a time when the Senate and the American people can pay full and proper attention to it. It is a subject really most vital to the interest of our country. I do not think it can be disposed of under circumstances such as those that confront the Senate and on an appropriation bill. It should be broadly considered and the whole matter disposed of as a matter of general legislation, and in a way that will protect the interests of the country, and not be brought up here under an extraordinary motion to be handled on an appropriation bill in the expiring days of the Congress. It is a large matter, as I have shown, going to the very vitals of the defense of the country. We really do not know where this proposition comes from about increasing these rates. I would rather see the rate of one and a half cents a pound stand than to increase it to 2 cents and not know what the effect is going to be in shutting the door to the little crack of light that does come through the darkened journalism of the country to enlighten the consciences and inform the voters of

Very frequently propositions fatal to liberty come to us veiled with the suggestion of economy. I would go on and bear the burdens we are bearing rather than close down upon smaller newspapers or the possibility of slashing newspapers and periodicals through which the news may creep out to the people.

Nor do I believe, Mr. President, that this is the time to reduce the rate of postage on the postal matter mentioned in the first portion of the amendment. It is better to raise that money under present conditions in the way that it has already been raised, and if there is a surplus let it go to relieving the burdens that will fall on the people of the country in other respects in the Postal Department and in other departments of the Government.

This is a very broad question, Mr. President, and I am disposed to vote against the motion of the Senator from Florida, because it is so large a matter that I do not believe it can be wisely settled by this type of an amendment on an appropriation bill.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I shall vote for the motion of the Senator from Florida and wish to give my reasons for doing Certain things have been established in this debate very clearly, namely, that there is an injustice in our postal rates; and that the second-class matter is not carrying its part of the burden. Just what portions of the second-class matter are receiving benefits or favors or subsidies, call it what we may, is a difficult point in my mind to determine, but I will vote to set aside the rule in order that the whole question may be thrown open and see if we can not reach a just basis. My vote on this question does not indicate my vote on the amendment pending.

Certain it is that the magazines of the country are receiving favors from the Government in transportation that they should not receive. It has been cited here that the distribution through the mail of the Saturday Evening Post is costing the Government something like $3,000,000 more than the Government receives for the service. That is wrong. I do not know just the way to correct it. There is a difference, it seems to me, between the magazines and the newspapers. I think there should be some differentiation in the newspapers themselves and postal Many of the large newspapers of the country with heavy advertising can carry an increased burden without any difficulty. On the other hand, there are a great many small papers just struggling along, and especially just at this time, educational papers, religious papers, agricultural papers that may have to suspend publication if their rates are raised. I do not know whether that is true or not. If true, it would be very unfortunate; and it is claimed by many of them that it is true.

Of course, the diffusion of knowledge is the argument that is always presented, and it is a strong one. I would be in favor of the Government bearing a very great burden to carry knowledge out to the people, and perhaps to do more in that respect than at first glance might seem to be a proper thing to do. You go into the homes of this country on the farms or the homes of the great mass of the people who toil and you will find they gather around at night and take up the papers. They become acquainted with the events of the day. A home without a newspaper is a pretty barren and desolate place. They are instrumentalities to diffuse knowledge.

When, however, we come to talk about subsidies I think we ought to go a little further and consider how we are subsidizing ourselves in the mails, and whether or not there should be some remedy as to that. You can go by the offices in the Senate Office Building and other places and find sacks and sacks of free material amounting in the aggregate to tons that are going out free into the mails of the country, burdening the mails by the excessive exercise of the franking privilege. If we are going to stop subsidy, we had better stop subsidizing ourselves.

However, I merely rose to say that I shall vote to suspend the rule in order that the whole subject may be thrown open here, and, if possible, that we may reach a fair measure which will place the burden where it properly belongs as to second-class

postage rates

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was necessarily absent from the Senate during all of yesterday, and have not heard nor had an opportunity to read the debate as it has progressed on the question now pending.

I intend to vote for the motion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. Bryan]; and yet in the end, if it prevails, and the amendment that the Senator has offered—which I take to be the same amendment which appears on pages 4 and 5 of the bill—is to come to a vote and I am required to vote for or against the amendment without change I shall vote against it.

The amendment consists of two distinct propositions. is that after the 1st of July next so-called drop letters may be mailed for 1 cent instead of 2 cents in cities where there is delivery of the mail. Of that proposition I have been in favor for several years. It seems to me that a letter mailed in a city, a letter that is not to be carried on the railroads or over a star route, but is simply to be delivered in the city, ought not to require the same amount of postage as do other letters. tain it is that at the rate of 1-cent postage there would be a very large profit to the Government in the business. I think the estimates which have been made at various times as to the loss are erroneous, because there is no doubt that that change of the law as to rates would vastly increase the number of letters of this kind. Business men in all the cities of the United States would avail themselves of the opportunity which it would present to do a vast amount of business through the mail which they now do through the messenger service. I think it is conceded by everybody that at 1 cent there would be a large profit. So I should favor that proposition under practically any kind of circumstances. It seems to me that it is but justice.

Now, as to the remainder of the amendment, that part which provides for increasing the rates on second-class mail matter from 1 cent to 2 cents, although it takes two years to finally reach that rate, it seems to me that the form of the amendment will not accomplish what those who favor it desire to accomplish. I am favorable to an amendment that would properly increase some of the charges that are made against secondclass mail matter. The instance given by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kenyon] a few moments ago, of the Saturday Evening Post, it seems to me is absolutely unanswerable. The publishers of that paper ought to be required to pay something nearer the actual cost of the transportation which the Government furnishes. It is not right that the Government should subsidize one publication to the vast amount that it is claimedand, so far as I know, admitted—goes to that publication and to all similar publications. But the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida and also the amendment proposed by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads seek in their effect simply to double the rate, to raise it from 1 cent to 2 cents.

Mr. President, as I look at it, that would simply extend the territory over which the express companies could operate with a profit in the handling of these publications. As I understand, even at 1 cent, a large amount of second-class mail matter is sent by express within reasonable territorial limits of the place of publication. I understand that the publication referred tothe Saturday Evening Post—sends a large amount by express at a rate even less than 1 cent a pound. It seems therefore that the Government of the United States, in carrying secondclass mail matter at 1 cent a pound within certain limits, makes a profit on the business. I do not want to make any profit out of this business; I would not complain if there were a small deficit. So it seems to me that when we simply increase the rate from 1 cent to 2 cents we extend the territory over which the express companies can operate. The result will be that the profit of a part of the business will be done by the express companies and the unprofitable part of it will be handled by the Government; in other words, the publisher of a magazine will, of course, patronize the express company-and I am not complaining about that; that is what I would do; that is what any business man would do-wherever he could do that and save money by the operation. So, if we increase the rate to 2 cents, we have simply added to the territory in which express companies can operate; and when it gets beyond the limit where the express company can not carry the papers at a profit, and will therefore refuse to carry them, then the publisher will utilize the United States mails. Therefore, where these publications are carried at a loss, we shall do all the business, and where they are handled at a profit the express companies will do it all.

It seems to me that a fair way to do would be to base the postage upon the zone system similar to the parcel post, and in that connection in the first zone I think it ought to be a decreased rate; it ought to be less than 1 cent. Perhaps it should also be less in the second zone. That would depend, of course, upon the size of the zone; but, at least, we ought to so regulate it that we should get paid in some degree for the amount of work and labor involved in the transportation proposition, which the Government performs. It is not right that we should carry a carload of Saturday Evening Posts from Phila-delphia to New York and carry another load from Philadelphia to San Francisco and charge the same rate, the same amount of money in both instances.

It strikes me, Mr. President, that what we ought to do is to reach, if we can-and we can do so, comparatively speaking, of course, not definitely in all conditions, but we can do it in a similar way to that by which it has been done by the Parcel -gauge the price by the service. No man ought to object to that.

There is another proposition involved in this which I should be glad to meet if we could. I think it might be possible to differentiate between publications that are published for profit and those that are published for charitable or for other similar The Senator from Mississippi, it seems to me, has well said that the newspapers-and he said it without criticism; and I say it in the same way, without criticism-are not published, at least a large majority of them are not published, as a matter of charity or of philanthropy, but as a financial proposi-tion by the owners and publishers. On the argument that the Government ought to do something toward the dissemination of information, it might be that the Government could afford to pay, or ought to pay, some subsidy. That, I think, is a question that has two sides to it; but it strikes me that when we come to pay the enormous subsidy that the Government is paying for some publications, it is so far beyond reason and justice that it ought not longer to be tolerated.

I shall vote for the motion of the Senator from Florida on the theory that, if the matter comes before the Senate, it will be subject to any relevant and material amendment, and in the hope that we may be able to get out of it something that will be practicable and fair.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the first question that will come before the Senate in connection with this matter is the motion to suspend the rules. I do not think that the usual objection to a motion of that kind applies in this case. I think the rule which prohibits legislation upon general appropriation bills is generally a good one and serves a good purpose, but the reason for its application in this case, I think, does not apply This is no new question; it is a matter that has been discussed for a great many years. It has been generally conceded that we are paying for the carriage of second-class mail matter many millions of dollars more than the revenue derived from it. I never heard the loss to the Government estimated so high as it has been in this debate; but it seems that the higher figures are based upon reliable information.

Like the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], I would not object to paying something more than it costs the Government to carry these publications. I think they serve a very useful purpose. I do not think it is the intention of the Post Office Department to make money out of the service it renders, but, in spite of all that, the people of the country should not be required to pay such tremendous sums over and above what is derived from the service rendered various publications.

So I hope that the motion to suspend the rules will be adopted, in order that the Senate may have an opportunity, at any rate, to pass upon the various questions involved in this amendment and in the amendments which may be proposed to it. I do not think we ought even to appear to hide behind this rule in order to prevent a vote upon the merits of the question presented. As I have said, the subject has been considered more or less in Congress and out of Congress for a great many years. Commissions have been appointed to investigate it, and one commission especially made a very thorough investigation and reported the facts. The amendment now proposed was prepared by the committee having jurisdiction of this subject matter. The committee has no doubt given it careful consideration, and it brought the amendment into the Senate as a part of the Post Office appropriation bill. It went out on a point of order, and now the committee itself is endeavoring to have it considered under this motion to suspend the rules. So all of the reasons for the application of the rule are really obviated by the conditions and the circumstances under which this motion is made.

The only consideration that makes me hesitate in regard to voting for both of the propositions concerned in the amendment is the present condition of things. If conditions were normal, I would not have any hesitancy about voting upon the substance of these propositions. I might like to see one or two changes or amendments made in some respects; but as to the merits of them, the principle of them, and the substance of them, under normal conditions I would vote for them without any hesitation whatever. I hesitate to vote for a proposition to reduce postage rates on certain first-class matter to 1 cent because of the effect it would have upon the revenues. It seems to be conceded generally—not by all, but by many—that it would involve a loss in our revenues of possibly $15,000,000 or $20,000,000. That is a very serious matter at the present time and under present conditions.

Then it is claimed by those who know that the conditions under which the newspaper and magazine publishers are working are very bad, almost desperate, and that to increase the postal charges, even by so small an amount as it is proposed to increase them by the amendment, will work very great hardship. These, however, are questions that we can consider upon their merits, and will be open to consideration if we suspend the rule. In order to get the matter before the Senate, in order to have an opportunity for us to vote one way or the other upon the different propositions and pass upon them on their merits and that the Senate may take a position upon them, I myself am going to vote for a suspension of the rule, without indicating especially how, under the peculiar circumstances, I shall vote upon the different propositions.

In line with the last suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] in regard to a zone system with reference to secondclass mail matter, which appealed to me somewhat, to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether that has been given consideration by the committee? In that connection I will read a telegram which I received this morning from one of the leading newspaper men of my State:

SPOKANE, WASH., February 12, 1917.

Senator W. L. Jones, Washington, D. C.:

Proposition for blanket increase second-class postage to 2 cents destructive to all local publishing enterprises. Unjust to carry competing publications from points 2,000 or 3,000 miles away into our territory at same rate charged us for 25 or 50 miles in our immediate field. If increased rates necessary, zone system only fair method. Government now makes profit on short haul on local publications at 1 cent pound; loss is on long haul.

W. H. COWLES,

W. H. COWLES,
For the Washington Farmer, the Oregon Farmer, and the Idaho Farmer.

It seems to me that there is considerable force in the suggestion contained in that telegram, and I should like to ask the Senator from Florida what consideration the committee has given to that phase of the subject?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I intend to refer to that before the debate is concluded.

Mr. JONES. Very well. Then the Senator can state that when he makes his address. I think I have said all that I care to say at this time. I believe we ought to have an opportunity to vote on the merits of this proposition and not suppress it by voting against the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have never voted to suspend the rules for the purpose of placing legislation upon an appropriation bill. Since I have been a Member of the Senate I have refused to do so whenever that question has been before the Senate of the United States. I have said on several occasions that the only condition under which I would vote to suspend the rules in order to put legislation on an appropriation bill would be in the case of legislation of vital interest to our country requiring immediate consideration. I see no reason, Mr. President, why I should change my position, and I make this statement so that my vote will not be misunderstood on this or any other motion made to suspend the rules. I should not vote to suspend the rules even if I were deeply interested in the subject matter, and therefore, Mr. President, under the statements I have made in the past, which position I maintain to-day, I shall vote against the suspension of the rules in this instance.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I undertook on yesterday to call attention to some of the objections to the proposition which comes from the Post Office Committee, but if I presented my views as unsatisfactorily as I find them in the Record they carried but little impression to those who heard them.

I am opposed to suspending the rules to consider this subject, because I do not think the Post Office Committee has presented us a proper mode of handling it. I believe that we ought to change the rates, at least as to quite a large part of second-class mail matter; but the rates should be increased based upon the service rendered to the various publications and the cost to the Government of that service. The difficulty about the suggestion which comes from the committee is that it provides a uniform increase of half a cent a pound the first year and then of a cent the second year, without regard to the service rendered or the cost to the Government.

As I sought to bring to the attention of the Senate on yesterday, there are two elements of cost to the Government incident to the handling of second-class mall matter. First, the handling proper; that is, the handling at the place where the mail is received, the handling incident to the collection from the boxes, the handling in the post office, the handling on the train, the handling at the office of destination, and the handling out of that office by carriers to the parties to whom the mail is directed. That is one element of the expense. The other is the cost of the haul from point to point, which the Government is called upon to pay to the railroad companies. Until recently the Government paid the railroad companies a flat rate per pound for the haul. Now I think the rate is computed by space, but I suppose, computed by space, it is practically the same as it was by pound per mile.

The cost to the Government under the old system was a cent a pound for approximately each 200 miles hauled. I think I am right about that. I will inquire of the Senator from Florida

[Mr. BRYAN] if that is not correct?

Mr. BRYAN. I am not sure. I have sent to get the figures. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It was approximately that; it was perhaps a little over 200 miles that a pound was hauled for a cent by the railroads. Now, if the haul was the only expense to the Government for the transportation of a particular kind of second-class postal matter, then it did not cost the Government a cent until the haul had reached a distance of at least

There is a class of publications which the Post Office Department informs me has an average haul of 907 miles. The average newspaper published in the smaller cities-I do not mean the great metropolitan papers of New York and perhaps of Chicago and one or two other large cities, but the average haul of the average daily paper is less than 100 miles. That paper puts a burden of only half a cent on the department for the haul, even if the average haul be a hundred miles, while publications such as the Ladies' Home Journal, the Saturday Evening Post, and Colliers—so I am advised by the Post Office Department—have an average haul of 907 miles. Those are the figures given me by the department. The average cost to the department to haul them, therefore, is at least nine times as much as the average cost of the paper in Iowa, Indiana, Georgia, New Jersey, Maryland, Nebraska, or Kansas, and nine times as much cost for haul falls on the department from many publications as falls upon the department from the average daily newspapers. What I object to in the proposition of the committee is that it makes no distinction in its proposed increase of rates based upon the cost to the department of the service rendered.

Again, a large part of the service rendered to the daily papers in the States, other than the few great metropolitan papers, is nothing but haul. As a rule, the newspapers in the cities of ordinary size, and I suppose in the very large cities, have their own mailing departments in their own buildings. They employ men expert in preparing their mail, just as they do in the post office, and those experts in the office of the newspaper make up the newspaper mail. The Government has nothing to do in the post office of the place from which the newspapers start with the expense of the preparation of the newspapers for their The Government furnishes the newspaper mail bags journey. just as they are used in the post office; and expert mailing clerks, paid by the newspaper, in the offices of the newspaper, classify the papers, route the papers, and wrap them in separate The newspaper proprietors do all the work preparing the newspapers for shipment, which as to ordinary mail is done

I know, as to some papers with which I am familiar-growing out of the fact that at one time I was considerably interested in a daily paper, though I have no interest in any newspaper nowthat newspaper companies, after preparing their papers for the mail and putting them, properly classified, into a mail pouch, transport them with their own machines to the train, and, as a rule, put them into the mail coach. The men in the coach simply take the pouch and throw it off at the station to which it is destined, and there again employees of the paper take the pouch and distribute the papers to their carriers-not postal carriers but newspaper carriers—who at once distribute the papers throughout the cities. I do not mean that this practice is universal among newspapers. I know this practice prevails on some papers.

Of course, where the mail goes out on rural routes to the country, then the paper would receive from the Post Office Department the services of the rural distribution throughout the country. But as to a large part of the service rendered to the newspapers in the States such as I have mentioned, the haul is all that the Government does for the paper, and that haul does not average 100 miles, and the cost of that haul to the Government is not over half a cent, while, on the other hand, the magazines that go across the entire continent, a 3,000-mile haul, cost the Government 15 cents a pound for the haul. The news paper with which I am illustrating costs a half cent, and the magazine with which I am illustrating costs 15 cents just for the

I object to the report of the committee, because I do not think it discriminates properly between the different classes of publications, and I think it puts upon one class a burden in excess of the cost to the Government of the service rendered. I which these varying publications place a charge upon the Post

I think no system should be adopted which does not take into complete recognition the increased cost to the Government from the length of haul, and that just as in the parcel-post service we have zones of charges, so in this second-class postal service, where weight is a great element of the expense to the Government, and where length of haul fixes the cost of the haul, the length of the haul should be fully considered in connection with the charge by the Government. There ought to be, perhaps, a zone of 50 miles with a certain charge, and another zone of 200 miles; but a zone system, with increasing charges for increasing distance, is the only fair plan, the only equitable plan, by which to fix these charges. I am in favor of increasing them where the Government has had a loss, but I am not in favor of increasing them where the Government has not had a loss.

I desire, Mr. President, to send to the desk as a part of my remarks a telegram from the Christian Herald of New York, a telegram from the managing director of the Agricultural Publishers' Association of Chicago, and I will read a telegram received from Chattanooga, Tenn.:

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., February 12, 1917.

Hon. Hoke Smith, Washington, D. C .:

Executive committee of Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association in session here to-day begs to bring before you fact that newspapers already have had great burdens placed on them by enormous increase in cost of white paper and in all other expenses of publication. Hundreds have been forced out of business, and others probably will be if additional burdens are imposed. We protest against proposed increase of pound postage under bill reported by Post Office Committee in Senate. Subscriptions paid for largely in advance and with no anticipation of such an increase in postage. If advance is found absolutely necessary on second-class postage, we believe zone system to be fairer and will not impose such unjust burdens.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What does the Senator wish done with the telegrams he sent to the desk?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish them printed as part of my remarks. I do not care to stop to have them read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The telegrams are as follows:

NEW YORK, February 12, 1917.

HOKE SMITH, Washington, D. C .:

Can not protest too strongly against increase in postal rate at this time. Increased cost of paper and other manufacturing necessities threaten to cause many publications to suspend. A few rich corporations might be able to stand an increase, which would create for them a monopoly, because their poorer competitors would be put out of business. Very few religious publications are now able to make ends meet. If they are compelled to pay the increased rate, it will be impossible for them to survive.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 11, 1917.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 11, 1917.

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

We represent over 7,000,000 farmer subscribers to high-grade farm papers, and in their behalf and in behalf of our already overburdened publishers, we vigorously oppose any disturbance of existing postal rates for second-class matter at this time. No one is now qualified to foretell the future. Wait until conditions are normal, then reorganize entire system. Give us a chance to be heard. Change now would work great hardship to all and rulnation to many, and would not bring a gain to the Government.

FRANK B. WHITE.

FRANK B. WHITE,
Managing Director, Agricultural Publishers' Association.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, Senators have said that they could not be driven into opposition to this increased rate. I hope no Senator could be driven against his judgment into any vote. I hope every Senator exercises his own judgment, is guided by it, and follows it.

It is because, as a matter of fact, I believe the increased rate unjust to a certain class of publishers I am opposed to it. It is because I believe that if the recommendation of the committee be adopted we will place upon some publishers a charge in excess of the cost to the Government of carrying their publications, and upon others we will place an increase that does not approximately reach the charge to the Government of carrying their publications, that I am opposed to it.

I think the plan is not equitable; that it is not fixed to meet the facts; and it is the facts with reference to the mode in Office Department that I bring to the attention of the Senate and urge as a reason why this uniform increase does not meet the needs of the situation.

I believe we should undertake to bring this second-class postal matter to rates that will substantially make each publication bear the charge which the distribution of its matter places upon the Post Office Department; but certainly we ought not to load down those who are now paying for all the Government does for them to meet the excessive contribution by the Government to others that do not approximately pay the expense they place upon the Post Office Department.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate only a minute. I have received a large number of telegrams and letters opposing an increase in the postage on second-class matter. I have not submitted them for printing in the Record because other letters and telegrams of like character have been printed, and I thought it was unnecessary.

Personally I am opposed to the increase of postage on secondclass matter. I mean by that the proposed amendment as it now stands. I think second-class matter should be classified, and that newspapers, religious, fraternal, and other magazines composed largely of reading matter should be placed in one class and that magazines that are issued largely for advertising purposes should be placed in another class and should pay a larger rate of postage. If an amendment of that kind were prepared by the committee I would gladly support it. I am in favor of reducing the postage on drop letters to 1 cent. I think that should be done, and if I had a chance to yote upon that amendment separately I should vote in favor of it.

Before I close I desire to read a telegram which I have received, stating that the Kansas Editorial Association, at the annual meeting held at Topeka, Kans., on January 27, which was the largest meeting of editors ever held in the State, adopted by unanimous vote resolutions opposing the increase in rates. Of course the reasons for their objecting to the increase in rates have been stated here time and time again, and they object to it at this time especially because of the increased cost of print paper. There is not a Member on this floor but who knows that many of the smaller papers are having a hard time to get along because of the increase in the price of print paper.

I am going to oppose the motion of the Senator from Florida to suspend the rules, because I believe it is unwise to suspend the rules to put general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I am in favor of 1-cent letter postage as an independent proposition. I am not in favor of it, however, at the expense of religious, agricultural, and fraternal publications, many of which have a Nation-wide circulation and afford the masses of the people the only opportunity they possess of keeping in touch with national affairs, and many of which are circulated almost, some entirely, at cost.

It may well be that the rates on certain forms of second-class matter should be increased. I am not in favor, however, of making the decrease in the rates on first-class matter dependent on an indiscriminate increase of the rates on second-class matter. I think it unfair to the great movement for a decrease in rates on first-class matter for 1-cent letter postage to make it dependent on and to tie it up with a proposition for a general increase on all forms of second-class mail matter.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I had hoped that I might remain in my seat the entire session. It was not my intention to rise to discuss any proposition that might come before the Senate during the session. But when a hardship is about to be inflicted on any industry or enterprise in my State, I feel it a duty to rise and oppose the proposition.

I am opposed to the suspension of the rules in this case. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks pro and con on this question. I happen to come from one of the rural communities which have been mentioned by some of the Senators on the floor. I know something about the post-office regulations in those communities of farmers; and I realize, as every Senator here does, that since we increased the post-office service by rural carriers, to every farmer comes the daily paper every morning, as sure as the sun is to rise. I assume that the founders of this Republic never intended to make the Post Office Department a money-making proposition. There are other departments connected with this Government that are not money-making propositions, but I can conceive of none which gives such tremendous facilities to all the people of the entire country as those offered by the Post Office Department.

I think I know something about the rates connected with this department. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] only yesterday, and again to-day, told you of the rates that are charged by the great railroad and transportation companies of this country, and I know that the figures presented and offered by the commission must be tremendously misleading. As a matter of fact, those figures were made up or reckoned by the pound of postal matter carried. Now, every Senator here knows that every star route in this whole country is not leased or let out by the pound, but it is so much per trip, and the man must go whether he carries any second class matter or not.

Now, what happens to the rural post offices? In the first place, the fourth-class postmaster gets his revenue from the cancellation both of the first and the second class matter. The Government does not have any extra expense incurred upon it by that postmaster. The only charge is in the carriage; and, Senators, the man gets his pay for the carriage whether he carries any postal matter of the second or third class or not. He is obliged to make his trip. He is paid so much per trip for going and carrying whatever mail there may be. So in that instance the Government has no extra charge; and I am very much in doubt about these figures that it costs the Government $88,000,000 for second-class matter. They have been proposed because of a pound rate, so termed. Now, suppose that from a small rural community there were sent eight letters weighing altogether a pound, or 2 ounces each, and in that same mail there were 19 pounds of second-class matter. The carrier would get $3 for his trip of 20 pounds. According to that proposition, the Government would be charged up with $2.84 for the 19 pounds of second-class matter as against 16 cents for the first-class matter. It is an unfair and absurd proposition, so undiscriminating that I consider it exceedingly unjust.

The Senator from Georgia has told you in the Senate of the expense of the carriage per hundred miles. Now, Senators, if a package were to be sent by express 600 miles the charge would be less than 2½ cents per pound. These papers are put up in bundles, as you have heard so often here this afternoon. They are sent without any extra charge by the postmaster; they are delivered to the train; and from the train delivered at its destination to the carrier without any charge to the Government, so far as postmasters' charges may be concerned.

Why, Senators, if you wish to build up the greatest monopoly that was ever known in this country, vote for this proposal, because we are all going to read. The fact that a few small daily papers which disseminate knowledge to all the rural communities in this country are put out of existence will not stop us from reading. It is a matter of which we are all exceedingly proud that every farmer in the rural community may read his morning daily paper. It has its great moral, political, and religious influence upon this country of ours; and I believe the founders of this Republic intended that the dissemination of knowledge should be made so cheap and so low that everybody could have his magazine and morning paper.

I am willing to admit that it is quite necessary to have a difference between daily papers and magazines which go for many miles. I am ready to admit that there ought to be a difference; but I am not willing to suspend the rules to bring this matter, in such a crude form, before the Senate.

As I say, Senators, it has been the judgment of the people in the past few years that we ought to avoid building up monopolies; but if you put the small papers out of business—which you are sure to do under this proposal—you will build up great newspapers in this country that will have a monopoly of the entire field. Instead of having the hundreds of daily papers which may be sent to the farmers and rural communities around home, you will have a few large papers; and after the field is cleared the 2-cent papers will be made 5 cents, and then you will have built up here just what we are all trying to avoid.

I am opposed to this proposition, and I shall vote against suspending the rules.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have been disposed to favor the motion made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. Bryan]; but I do not intend to vote for it because I accept the report of the department with regard to the cost of performing the service with respect to the second-class mail matter. I intend to vote for it because I think that an appropriation bill is the proper place to legislate upon this subject; for if we do not readjust our system upon an appropriation bill the chances are that we never will readjust it, in view of the constant pressure we observe in Congress. I do not vote for it because I am at all satisfied with the readjustment proposed by the committee. I think it is inadequate. I think it is based upon misinformation and does not place the burden where it should be placed.

I do not believe in the theory that each class of the mail should be compelled to sustain its own cost, for there are a great many other considerations which enter into the service rendered by the Government in the distribution of the mail.

When the Senator from Florida alleges that the Government lost last year $85,000,000 or something like that in the transmission of second-class mail matter, I know that he does it upon the estimate of the department; but he has only to examine that estimate in its details to know that it is founded upon a theory that no reasonable man can accept. I dwell on that particular subject for a moment because if this motion be adopted I intend to contribute what little I can toward a fair and reasonable readjustment of the various classes of our mail matter.

This matter has been investigated a great many times, and I beg to state how, as I am informed, the conclusion stated by the Senator from Florida is reached. In the first place the department—and I am not speaking of this particular administration, because the same error was made in even a more exaggerated form by a prior administration—the department en-deavors to ascertain what the Government pays the railways of the country for the carrying of mail. These payments are made, as everybody understands, according to weight, with a very slight modification. Possibly 10 per cent or 5 per cent of the entire payment is determined by either space or in some other way than by weight, but practically speaking the Government pays the carriers of the country according to the weight of the mail without any regard to the service performed by the railway companies or the cost to the railway companies for a particular class of the service. In that way it ascertains the cost per pound, so far as the railway compensation is concerned, and charges up each pound of mail matter carried according to that computation. There then remains what might be called the overhead cost, the cost of maintaining the Post Office Department in Washington, the cost of conducting all the post offices of the country, the railway-mail clerks, the rural-route carriers, and all other expenses incident to the conduct of the department.

I have not examined the particular estimate made recently upon this subject, but formerly at least this entire cost was then divided among all the pounds of mail carried throughout the year, and, with some allowances which were obviously demanded on account of the peculiar service rendered in the letter department, the cost of handling a pound of mail is the result. The number of pounds carried in the second-class service is known, and thus is determined the entire cost of that service.

Just to show how uncertain the department has been in that respect I read a brief extract from a report made by a Joint Committee on Postage on Second-Class Mail Matter and Compensation for the Transportation of Mail, which was made a public document August 31, 1914. This committee was a joint committee of which I think originally Senator Bourne, of Oregon, was the chairman. After examining a great many subjects pertaining to railway pay I find in Chapter XI this statement:

While we regret to criticize any branch of the Government

He was not speaking expressly of the present administration; he was speaking of a former administration, and therefore I can use it without any charge of political prejudice.

Mr. BRYAN. Does not the Senator from Iowa think there is a little irony in the statement he has just read, of which the author was Senator Bourne, that he regretted to criticize the department?

Mr. CUMMINS. I know the former Senator from Oregon very well and I have never thought that he was addicted to irony. He always seemed to me to be very direct and earnest in all his statements. I read again:

While we regret to criticize any branch of the Government and it is unpleasant to believe that public business affairs are carelessly conducted, yet we believe that the country and Congress are entitled to know the facts. We would hesitate to discuss this subject, if our own experience were unique—

I may say that this part of the report receives the approval of all the members of the committee, as I understand it.

Mr. BRYAN. No; if the Senator will look he will see that several members agreed only to a certain part of the report.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think a majority of the committee joined in this part of the report:

We would hesitate to discuss this subject, if our own experience were unique, but in the course of our work we have learned that other commissions which bave studied postal problems have had similar experiences and that the formation of satisfactory conclusions by them was made difficult or impossible by the unreliability and inadequacy of statistics furnished by the Post Office Department regarding its own activities.

As already stated herein, the subject of railway mail pay was studied by a congressional commission from 1898 to 1901. While the result of that commission's work was under consideration in the House, Congressman Moody, of Massachusetts, afterwards justice of the United States Supreme Court, declared in an address in the House of Representatives that during hearings before the commission the Post Office Department submitted statistics showing that the railroads were paid on an average 6.58 cents per pound for transporting mail, averaging 40 cents per ton-mile, with an average haul of 328 miles, whereas a special weighing demonstrated that the average payment was, in fact,

2.75 cents per pound, averaging only 12.56 cents per ton-mile, with an average haul of 438 miles. Commenting upon these statistics, Congressman Moody said:

"In other words, we were not paying one-third as much as the Post Office Department had led the people of the country to believe we had been paying."

Very similar was the experience of a commission appointed in 1911 to investigate the subject of postage on second-class mail matter, of which commission Justice Hughes, of the Supreme Court, was chairman. Repeatedly the statistics submitted by the Post Office Department were shown to be erroneous, and the department changed its figures when compelled to do so by the demonstration of their inaccuracy. So numerous and so glaring were the errors that the commission commented upon some of them as follows:

"It seems hardly worth while to include subsidiary tables from which these results are taken or to criticize the details, as the commission has little confidence in their accuracy."

The Hughes Commission also said in its report, in commenting upon the effort of the Post Office Department to present statistics showing a proper apportionment of general post-office expenses to the different classes of mail:

"In view of the errors and inconsistencies in which the returns of the post offices abound (we do not extend this report to review them), our examination has convinced us that the computation is not sufficiently accurate to base an apportionment of the cost of the general post-office service."

I read this extract from the report which I have named, not

I read this extract from the report which I have named, not so much to criticize the department as to furnish a basis for the statement which I make without any fear of successful contradiction. It is utterly impossible for the Post Office Department to determine how much it costs to transact the business relating to any particular class of the mail. The very best that can be done is to make an estimate with regard to each part. I have no doubt the estimates are made in good faith, but in my judgment-and I have given some study to the subject at a former time, indeed, not now-the estimate with regard to the second-class mail matter generally is exaggerated, and when it is applied to particular classes of second-class mail matter it is absolutely unfounded and necessarily misleading.

I would not comment upon this at this time and upon this motion were it not for the fact that I intend to vote for the motion, and I want it distinctly understood that when we enter upon the work of readjusting the postage upon letters and upon second-class mail it is a serious undertaking and will require a great deal of time and much consideration if we do it justly and intelligently. I do not believe in reducing letter postage to 1 cent unless all letter postage is reduced. If I must choose between drop letters and general letters, I am in favor of reducing the postage upon general letters instead of drop letters, for those who are least able to bear the burden will receive an advantage in the reduction of postage generally far more than in a reduction in drop letters. Everybody knows with regard to drop letters that those who will be principally benefited are the large business institutions, the banks, the great factories, and other institutions of that kind which deposit regularly in the mails vast number of letters for distribution either in the city in which such an institution may be located or in the immediate vicinity.

Mr. BRYAN rose.
Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Florida desire to interrupt me?

Mr. BRYAN. I merely wished to ask the Senator a question before he got too far away from the discussion of the estimate of the department. The department states that the receipts from second-class mail matter amounted to eleven million three hundred and some odd thousand dollars. The Senator does not question that statement. The department can easily ascertain that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would think that could be easily ascertained.

Mr. BRYAN. That could be easily ascertained, of course. Now, the Senator has not any doubt, whether the estimated loss is $80,000,000 or not, it is a great sum, amounting to much more than the receipts?

Mr. CUMMINS. I was about to say that. Leaving for the moment the question of reduction in postage on letters, and I have said all I desire to say upon that, notwithstanding the inaccuracy and unreliability of the estimate with regard to the cost of performing the service relating to second-class mail, I have no doubt that we are performing this service for much less than we are receiving for it.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] stated that it cost 1 cent to carry 1 pound of second-class mail matter 200 miles, and that it cost that before certain increases on account of the parcel post were allowed by the department. It is more than 1 cent now. It is a small fraction, it is true, but that small fraction when applied to tons makes a considerable difference. The fraction given-I think it was figured out; in fact, I am sure it was-was thirty-two one-thousandths. If the Government only got the $20, as it would under the 1-cent rate, it would lose 64 cents on every ton, and when carried into the enormous amounts of second-class mail we would find even that small fraction of a cent would amount to many millions of dollars

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not dispute at all the correctness of the figures just given by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. Just one word further. If the Senator from Georgia is correct, he showed that for the transportation alone there would be a large deficit. The transportation of railroad freight is not the whole of this cost by any means. It is a small part of it.

Mr. CUMMINS. But, answering the statement just made by the Senator from Florida, I beg that he will remember that the cost of transportation to which he refers contemplates a haul of 200 miles, very much beyond the average haul of newspapers.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator referred to the report of the Bourne Commission. I think it was a very able commission and it made a very able report. The report of that commission re-ferred to the report of the Hughes Commission. The Hughes Commission states that the average distance the daily newspapers are carried throughout the country-of course, speaking of them altogether-is more than 200 miles.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not so understand the report of the Hughes Commission.

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Hughes Commission did so state, it adopted an erroneous plan for the computation of averages. did not include the number of papers distributed, I am sure, because that would be contrary to the observation of every

Mr. BRYAN. I was surprised that it was so great a mileage, but I have no reason to question the report prepared by men admittedly of the character of the gentlemen composing the com-

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not able to refer to the part of the Hughes Commission report that deals with that matter. It is before me, but it would require more than the report of the commission to convince me that the average transportation of the daily newspapers of this country was as great as 200 miles.

But, Mr. President, that possibly would be better dealt with at a little later time. I agree with the Senator from Florida that the whole subject of second-class matter ought to be now dealt with, and he is proposing that it shall be now dealt with. not agree with him, first, that all kinds of second-class matter should be made self-sustaining, for I think there is a great public consideration that must determine in some degree the postage that should be charged for the service. I think there ought to be at least five different classes in the matter now embraced in second-class matter, and we can not deal with the subject justly unless we do divide it into something like five separate classe

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield. Mr. VARDAMAN. If the motion to suspend the rules should prevail, I hope the Senator will present his ideas in the form of an amendment and give us an opportunity to correct the defect which he has outlined. I think it is a matter that ought to be thoroughly and exhaustively discussed. Now is the time, as the Senator says, to settle it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think so, and for that reason I intend to vote for the motion. I have no doubt it will require several days to settle this matter as it should be settled, but that makes no difference. We ought to settle it, and I think we might as well settle it now as at any other time.

The first division of the second-class matter should be the county newspapers. I understand that it is not proposed to change the law with regard to them. Why, Mr. President, are the county newspapers, with their circulation within the county, relieved of all burden of postage? I want Senators to ask themselves that question. It will be easily answered. We have relieved them from all the burden relative to the distribution of the mail, because we believe their existence is essential to the welfare of the people of the various communities of the country. Have you any reason to doubt it? Is there any Senator here who desires to change the policy of the country with regard to them? Yet in the language of my friends from Mississippi and from Florida we are subsidizing the county newspaper every year by contributing for the distribution of their papers a large sum of money, how much no one knows. I for one believe that the public welfare can not be better promoted than by continuing this policy.

We pass to the divisions, and these ought to be distinct classes, not all grouped as second-class matter. The secondclass is, of course, the daily newspapers, which are usually published in the larger cities, but there is not a single consideration which has led us to give county newspapers free circulation that does not apply in some degree to the daily newspaper. We have never intended that they should pay the entire cost of that service. Why? Because they are doing a part of the work which the Government is bound to do. It is rather difficult to tell just how much of the work, but they are doing just the same sort of work that the instructors whom we send out from the Agricultural Department and from the Department of Commerce, the educators in every field, and whose compensation and expenses we pay. They are doing in part that work; they are the allies of good government; and without them it would be utterly impossible for us to sustain our Government for a half decade. Therefore this consideration ought to be taken into account when we determine the postage which they should pay in order to secure the widest circulation.

Nor is it any answer that they occasionally circulate a falsehood, that they occasionally misrepresent what takes place here or what takes place elsewhere. There are some men in the newspaper fraternity who may be utterly unworthy. but that does not impeach the general standing of the newspapers or the general value of the work which they are performing. That is the second class.

Now, the third division, and it is a distinct class, are what might be called the publications of societies and organizations which have been brought together for mutual help, mutual advantage, mutual upbuilding, the fraternal orders, and all such associations of men and women who are doing a purely altruistic work, who have no hope of profit. Their publications ought to be distributed by the Government for less than it costs the Government to distribute them. They are also doing a work without which the Government would find it difficult to pursue the even and peaceful tenor of its way.

The fourth division would be composed of the periodicals and the magazines which are of real value, which are filled with real instruction, in which literature of real merit can be discovered even though they are published with the hope and with the expectation of profit. That is the fourth class; and I think it ought to bear the expense incident to the circulation or the distribution of their material, although it be very worthy material.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. Ought there not be and might there not be made a still other line of distinction in the latter class the Senator has referred to, between those which contribute to information. Take, for instance, the agricultural journals. They are putting out the same kind of information we are putting out through the publications of the Department of Agriculture. It seems to me that there ought to be, under the analysis the Senator has made, at least five classes instead of four.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am coming to another class.

Mr. CLAPP. Is it within those fields?

Mr. CUMMINS. The class I have in mind will not embrace the suggestion of the Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. That is what I was getting at. Among those classes which appeal for special consideration it strikes me that, as to the fourth class enumerated by the Senator, an effort should be made to divide that into two classes

Mr. CUMMINS. That may be possible, Mr. President, and the suggestion is well worthy of thought, but I had believed that with regard to these publications, worthy as they are, the fact that they were being published for profit might require them to pay to the Government the cost of distribution.

Mark you, I am not suggesting that there shall be put on that class the deficit, if there be one, created by carrying the other classes at less than the cost of carrying them. The fifth division, and it ought to pay a very high rate, if it ought to go as second-class mail matter at all-which I very greatly doubt-comprises those publications which are issued chiefly for advertising, their main purpose being to advertise the industries of the country or the commodities of the country, and the reading matter being entirely secondary and usually entirely worthless as well.

Mr. CLAPP. And often worse than worthless.
Mr. CUMMINS. And, as the Senator from Minnesota suggests, oftentimes not only valueless but vicious. Those are the classes into which we should divide second-class mail matter, in my judgment.

I have taken this opportunity to mention the subject at some length because, if the motion is sustained, as I hope it will be, then the Senate will gather itself together for a serious and responsible work and will undertake to revise our postal regulations upon second-class mail matter so that justice will be done not only as between second-class mail matter and firstclass mail matter; but as between the various natural classifications of second-class mail matter.

The Senator from Florida has been upon the Post Office Committee for a good while; there is not a man in the Senate who has more information upon the subject than has he. That committee has been inundated with evidence and testimony and showings, and a great many plans have been put before it, as I know, and the Senator is probably already equipped to lay before the Senate some one of these plans which will meet his real opinion concerning this division which we are now asked to make. So I hope, if the subject is opened up, that he will give us the benefit of the conclusions which he has formed through a long and valuable service to the Senate and to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. BRYAN obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield. Mr. ROBINSON. I shall vote for the motion to suspend the rules in order that the Senate may have an opportunity of readjusting the rates on both first-class and second-class mail matter. I think it is impossible to determine exactly the cost of carrying second-class mail matter; but it has been admitted in the course of this debate that the Government is losing a large sum by reason of its carriage of the second-class mails at the present rate. It is also making a great profit out of the first-class mail. No one advocates imposing upon second-class mail all the expense incident to its carriage, but it does seem to me that if a readjustment can be made without great difficulty, it will meet the approval of all fair-minded people and will do no injustice to anyone.

It is absurd, it seems to me, Mr. President, to say that merely because this question has long been a mooted one we should not deal with it. During the last 15 years at almost every session of Congress which I have attended this question, in one form or another, has arisen, and it will continue to arise until Congress takes some action which the public believes to be founded upon good conscience and fairnes

It does seem to me that a distinction should be made between newspapers and some other kinds of second-class mail I do not believe that the amendment proposed by the committee is acceptable in its present form; but if the question is opened-and it can only be done by carrying the motion to suspend the rules-I hope that the Senate may be able to apply itself to the subject with an intelligence and diligence which will promptly produce a provision which will be satisfactory to fair-minded people.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to speak only for a moment, Mr. President. I see by the calendar of the business of this body that there are 16 appropriation bills to be dealt with during this session. Of that number this body has acted upon 7, leaving 9 that have not yet been passed, 1 of them being now under consideration, and 8 of them having received no consideration whatever. In addition to that, we have what is known as the revenue bill, which was reported to the Senate to day. We also have perfect from Mambers of this body that We also have notice from Members of this body that to-day. We also have notice from Members of that bill is to be discussed somewhat at length.

We have, in addition, the bills which are known as the pre-paredness bills, of which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has charge, that are to be more or less debated in this body. We have an Executive Calendar which now does not reach merely into the scores, but into the hundreds, of names, a matter as to which I do not want to speak in open session further than to state that one fact.

We have in all, after to-day, but 19 days until this session shall close. There are 3 Sundays which will intervene, leaving but 16 working days. There are at least parts of two days which have already been set apart, under custom of the Senate, to memorial services in honor of departed Members of one or the other body

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia omitted to mention one other bill, which will doubtless excite a good deal of debate, and that is the river and harbor

Mr. CHILTON. That was included in the 16 appropriation bills to which I referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And there is also the Porto Rican bill.

Mr. CHILTON. And the Chair reminds me-for which I thank him-that there is the Porto Rican bill. Each one of these bills has in it a good-sized fight and debate.

Mr. President, the pending subject has been debated enough on this floor to convince all of us that it is of such importance to the country that to consider it from any standpoint will of necessity require extensive debate. It is necessary, in order that all of us may explain our votes as to each feature of the matter, that it should consume much time. It is apparent to all of us, from what has been said, especially by the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. Cummins], that this is a most important subject, and that we ought not approach it without that kind of information which, in my judgment, the Senate should have to dispose of so far-reaching a subject.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I intend to vote against the motion to suspend the rule, and to oppose it in every way I can. I do not believe that we have the time or that we have the information to decide the matter now. I think possibly there is some readjustment in the second-class mail matter that ought to be made, but I certainly do not want to do it without the fullest investigation and without complete data before us.

I desire to say beforehand that, if we do get into a debate upon this matter, upon everything as to which I have any doubt I shall vote to leave it as it is. I know that the present rate upon fourth-class mail matter is of great good to a large number of people, and I am not going to take the chances of breaking up or injuring some people and of withholding from many people of this country information which they ought to have unless I am sure that, in doing so, it is required by justice to the Government and to the service, and after a full and careful investigation of every fact which ought to enter into the consideration of the subject.

I think it is absolutely useless for us to try to go into another great, big subject like this with practically only about 14 working days left, 2 of which have practically been preempted. Practically speaking, we have but a dozen days to do the entire business of this session, and we know that is not sufficient.

For these reasons I intend to vigorously oppose the motion.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, "and they all with one consent began to make excuse." Senators are in favor of changing the present rates upon second-class mail matter, but this is not the opportune time to do it. The opportune time has never yet come to rectify this great wrong that has been perpetrated upon the American people for so many years. There are $88,000,000 of loss; we all want to correct that, but this is not the time to do so; there is another way, that is a better way, to do it. But let us do something with it. Here is the situation confronting us: Some Senators speak as if this question had never presented itself to the committee or to the Senate until this session of Congress, and yet it has been a mooted question for a score of years.

A commission was created during President Taft's administration to study the rates upon second-class mail matter and to make recommendations to Congress. The members of that commission were Hon. Charles E. Hughes, associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States; President A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard University; and Mr. Harry A. Wheeler, president of the Association of Commerce of the city of Chicago. They investigated this whole subject. Some Senators can come in here to-day, without having studied the question an hour, and assert with great positiveness that this is crude legislation; that it has never been given consideration; that the statements of a commission appointed by the President in pursuance of an act of Congress were all wrong. But, Mr. President, if you examine the recommendations of the commission, if you examine the report, if you undertake to find out what they did, you will ascertain that it was a report drawn after very thorough and very careful consideration, and that before them appeared representatives of the Post Office Department and representatives of the newspapers and periodicals of this country enjoying the second-class mail privilege. That commission, after full and final hearing, made this recommendation:

(1) The rate of 2 cents a pound on copies mailed by publishers to subscribers, to news agents, and as sample copies, and by news agents to their subscribers or to other news agents.

(2) The rate of 1 cent for each 4 ounces for copies mailed by other than publishers and news agents; that is, the present transient rate.

(3) The present free-in-county privilege retained, but not extended.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator to state again who made that report.

Mr. BRYAN. The Hughes Commission.

Mr. CHILTON. If the Senator will pardon me, what Hughes

Mr. BRYAN. Charles E. Hughes-Judge Hughes.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator has described this as being a This is not the first mooted question that mooted question. has come from that source, and I think it will be a mooted question unless we debate it for three or four weeks longer.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think perhaps the Senator from Florida had better read the names of those who were associated with Justice Hughes. If the Senator from West Virginia does not think Justice Hughes should count, let us see who the others were who composed that commission. They were very distinguished men.

Mr. BRYAN. I read the names once, and will do so again. The commission was composed of Hon. Charles E. Hughes, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States; President A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard University; and Mr. Harry A. Wheeler, president of the Association of Commerce of the City of Chicago.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to say that the report of Mr. Justice Hughes upon a question of that sort would have almost controlling weight with me, if there was no one associated with him.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I want to hasten to say that I was not meaning to reflect upon Mr. Justice Hughes by anything that I said. If the Senator from Florida will pardon me, I called his attention to the fact that he said that this has been a mooted question for a long time, and I was simply joking as to the conditions during the last campaign and the result of it, and meant to impress upon the Senate the idea that we certainly have not time to dispose of something that has been a mooted question for a long time. That was all. I have great respect for Justice Hughes, however much I may have opposed his political opinions or may dissent from some of his judicial opinions. I am rather disappointed that anyone took seriously what seemed to me as pardonable pleasantry during a protracted discussion; and I insist that if this be a mooted question now there is not time to debate it into a state of certainty

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, that is, as I have said, an excuse that has always been made. If you want information, however, it has been provided; if you want to take action, here is the information that has lain upon the desks of Senators for five years; if you want to allow this subsidy to continue, then almost any excuse will do. I want to put in the RECORD right here from this report what newspapers pay and what magazines pay in The people of this country do not know the facts. this country. The people of this country do not know the facts. I tell you, Mr. President, that this question will be settled, because when the people know, when the man who writes a letter knows that he pays 32 times as much for his letter as newspaper publishers pay for the circulation of their newspapers, when he understands that out of the funds placed in the Treasury of this Republic the people who write and pay the first-class mail rates contribute over two hundred and a quarter million dollars and out of that nearly $100,000,000 go back into the pockets of the newspaper and magazine publishers, they will insist that this question be settled.

Now, let us see what are the privileges of second-class matter:

The general rate of 1 cent a pound on copies mailed by publishers to subscribers, to news agents, and as sample copies, and by news agents to their subscribers or to other news agents.
 The free-of-postage privilege for copies mailed to subscribers residing in the county where the publications are printed and published, when not addressed for delivery from a city letter-carrier office.

Do these letter writers know that it does not cost a periodical publisher a solitary cent to circulate his publication in the county of its publication? I heard a Senator make a remark yesterday afternoon in this Chamber that shows he did not know it; but that is a fact, and it is a fact that ought to be

(3) The cent-a-pound rate on copies mailed for delivery by rural carriers on routes emanating from a city letter-carrier office.

They have the privilege now that is being asked for on behalf of first-class mail matter. They enjoy a privilege at the expense of this Government which the committee has asked the Senate to grant to the people who supply the surplus to take care of the

(4) The cent-a-pound rate on weekly publications mailed at a city letter-carrier office for local delivery.

(5) The cent-a-copy rate for newspapers other than weeklies, and for periodicals not exceeding two ounces in weight, when mailed at a city letter-carrier office for local delivery by carriers.

(6) The rate of 2 cents a copy for periodicals exceeding 2 ounces in weight when mailed at a city letter-carrier office for local delivery by carriers.

(7) The rate of 1 cent for each 4 ounces for copies mailed by others than publishers and news agents.

One man pays thirty-two times as much as the other. cents will take an ounce of first-class mail matter; 2 cents will take 2 pounds of second-class mail matter.

Mr. President, the Hughes Commission investigated the subject of the cost of the Railway Mail Service in the handling of second-class mail matter. The Post Office Department contended that 26.02 per cent of the total cost was on account of the secondclass mail matter. They investigated the rural delivery, and I believe it was conceded that 45.88 per cent of the cost should be charged to second-class mail matter. They investigated the general post-office service. The Post Office Department claimed that 26.86 per cent of the cost was due to the general service. The Hughes Commission said that they could not arrive at that conclusion, but, Mr. President, the Post Office Department have gentlemen who have spent many years making these investigations and calculations. I admit that it seems to me it would be a very difficult thing to pro rate to a nicety the part that should be charged to second-class mail matter. There is no difficulty, however, in determining that the receipts from second-class mail matter last year amounted to $11,383,000.

It will be noticed that the Hughes Commission did not recommend a rate less than 2 cents upon any sort of newspapers or magazines except in county of origin. It will be further noticed that even that rate will not pay to the Government the expense for any of them.

There is much in what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Cummins] has said, but, inasmuch as the increase here recommended will not be sufficient, will lack very much of being sufficient to pay the actual expenses to which the Government is put, it occurred to the committee that we might recommend this much, in the hope that at least that much could be completed, and settle other questions hereafter. The step, it seems to us, ought to be taken now.

The Senator from Iowa says that we ought to have many divisions; that the paper of a fraternal organization or a religious society ought not to pay as high a rate as a paper conducted society ought not to pay as high a rate as a paper conducted for profit, and that the advertising paper ought to pay the highest rate of all, and so forth; but, Mr. President, what injustice can be done when it is conceded that all of them ought to pay at least the amount provided in this bill? If some of them ought to pay more, that can be determined hereafter, or can be de-termined now if the motion to suspend the rules prevails.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield, of course, to the Senator from Minne-

Mr. CLAPP. Supposing that one class are required to pay 2 cents and, we will say for the sake of the argument, that would not be in excess of what that class ought to pay, and that another class ought to pay 4 cents. Now, the man who pays 2 cents, while he is not paying any more than he ought to pay, is called upon to contribute to a deficit that is occasioned by another man getting for 2 cents what he ought to pay 4 cents for; and the rule of inequitable burdens and injustice is just as plain there as it would be if a man who pays 2 cents is paying more than his share in a direct tax on postal matter. In the end he is called upon to pay something that he ought not in justice to pay in contributing for the expenses of the Government.

Mr. BRYAN. But if this amendment prevails, not a single one of them will be paying up to the cost of the service ren-

No; but outside of his postage he will be called Mr. CLAPP. upon to contribute to expenses of the Government that ought to be borne in part by somebody else. You can not get away from the principle.

Mr. BRYAN. I want now to pay attention just for one moment to the point made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. The Senator from Georgia says that it costs under SMITH]. the rate the Government pays for the carriage of the mails 1 cent for each 200 miles per pound; that is, it costs the Government 1 cent to carry a pound of mail matter 200 miles. Now, speaking in round numbers that is true, but speaking accurately it is 0.01032 cent. Multiply that and see what it would cost to carry a thousand pounds 200 miles. It would cost $10.32, or to take a ton 200 miles it would cost $20.64. The Government would receive $20 and it would lose 64 cents on each ton each 200 miles; and when you take that into account and consider that last year there were over a billion pounds of second-class mail matter, it will be seen that as small a fraction as that can create a very large deficit without any trouble.

But, Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia spoke as if transportation was the whole of the cost, when the information from experts who have examined this subject is that the handling charge is 5 cents a pound. If the transportation charge were all, of course the Post Office Department would be mistaken in saying that there was an $88,000,000 loss, because we do not pay that much for the transportation of the mails; and that is why I call attention to the report of the Hughes Commission, which took into consideration the other elements that enter into the cost of running this establishment.

Mr. President, I have argued as far as I care to the merits of the proposition. I think we might settle those questions when the amendment is properly before the Senate. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Hitchcock] raises the point of order. He says this is not the sort of bill upon which to have this sort of legislation placed; that it is ill-considered legislation. Well, Mr. President, the present rates were placed on Post Office appropriation bills. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads deals with other matters than appropriations. In fact, as is known by everybody here, its chief business is dealing with other matters than appropriation bills. It handles the annual bill and it has been questioned for that committee the annual bill, and it has been customary for that committee to place upon the bill legislation affecting the department.

The claim of altruism of several of these gentlemen does not strike me with the force that perhaps it should. The claim that this is being done in the interest of the farmer is the old story so familiar to us all, and if you can base your objection story so familiar to us an, and it you can base your objects or your excuse upon that, you have something to stand upon. Mr. President, the farmer that writes his letter is contributing to this deficit. The claim that farmers get the market reports is put forward as a sufficient reason. Why, Mr. President, they pay for those papers. They pay pretty well for them. They pay for those papers. They pay pretty well for them. They pay for them so well that this pauper paper that sent a telegram to the Senate yesterday is making a fortune every year. They pay for it out of the charges made, and they are made by business men conducting their hydrogeness were conducting their hydrogeness. ness men conducting their business upon business principles.

I have no feeling of antipathy toward the press of this country—the daily press, the weekly press, or the magazines. Some of them are excellent, some of them are fair, and some of them are bad. Neither do I claim that in all cases the rates paid by the press ought to be self-sustaining; but I do say that as a proposition considered in the aggregate, second-class mail mat-ter ought to maintain itself. Each class ought to be self-supporting. Mr. President, I hope that we may have a vote, and that the Senate may see fit to waive the rules and allow us to take a vote upon an amendment that is recommended by a great commission, and that has been too long delayed now. Whatever may be our views as to the proper adjustment of these rates, no man can say that this proposed rate is too high upon a single, solitary newspaper or magazine; and after it is adopted two-thirds of the cost of maintaining this service will still be borne by the tax upon first-class mail matter.

Some Senators say that they will vote for the reduction of the first-class rate, and against the raise in the second-class Very well, let us have a chance to vote upon that. I would not vote to do that, because I know that if I did that I would be voting to create a deficit, and I am not willing to do that. But the Senate, when it gets the matter before it, can handle it as it sees fit. I do not think that it is proper, although handle it as it sees it. I do not think that it is proper, although it is in conformity with the rules, to deprive the Senate of a right to vote upon this matter that affects the rates charged, that affects this department. When the Postmaster General comes before us and says: "I can reduce the charge upon firstclass mail matter somewhat; I think we could put it in on the drop letters and on the rural routes, but the deficit will be pretty large, and I suggest that you raise it some on second-class mail matter," that is a question that properly comes before that committee, and that ought in good conscience to be submitted to the Senate.

But if you do nothing with it, Senators, what position are you in after the 1st of July? You are in this position—that you will have a surplus of ten or twelve million dollars. It is generally conceded that the Post Office Department ought not to be conducted for the purpose of making money. Then you have $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 of surplus. By the time the next annual bill comes, if you postpone this matter, there will be a strong demand to distribute that money in the payment of salaries among the men employed in the Post Office Department and in the Postal Service, and yet it is a fact that they are conceded to be the highest paid men in this country. They know it. The Post Office Department knows it, and prides itself upon it. They say they have in the Postal Service men who are efficient, men who are worth the high salaries paid; but they are getting pretty high salaries now.

What are you going to do? Are you going to accumulate this $10,000,000 of surplus? If you do, with the organizations that they have been allowed to build up—which, in my judgment, ought to be against the civil-service rules, because I think it is a dangerous power that they are creating—they will come here and say: "We made that money. Give it to us." Made it out of whom? Made it out of first-class mail matter; made it out of inst-class mail matter; made it out of inst-class mail matter; made it out of a branch of the service that is contributing three-fourths of the postal revenues, contributing somewhere between eighty and ninety million dollars, after paying the full cost of the service, to the people who enjoy the secondclass service.

That is the situation. That is the reason why, on behalf of the committee, I made this motion in the absence of the chairman on Saturday. I trust the Senate will give it the consideration it deserves, and that we may now proceed to vote, with the understanding that if this amendment is not satisfactory to the Senate, the Senate is a self-governing body and can change it as it sees fit. But let us do something. Let us make a start toward correcting an evil that admittedly exists, that nobody undertakes to deny.

Why, the representatives of these newspapers and magazines know that this has got to come. If they could be assured to-day that Congress would not go any further than 2 cents a pound they would be glad to make that compromise. Their hope is that you will stop one-third of the way. Whether the various classes are properly made up now or not—whether there ought to be more than the first, second, third, and fourth classes—at least we ought to come to an agreement upon this proposition: That no harm can be done by making this change, because after this is done Congress will not then have provided even for a rate that more than one-third sustains itself upon the literature or the class on which it loses the smallest amount of

I think it is absurd to say that a publication like the one I had on my desk yesterday, weighing 5 pounds, and made up of nothing but advertising matter, should be carried at an expense per copy to this Government of 35 cents, or that any newspaper publisher in this country should have contributed by his Government to his business the enormous sum of between three end four millions of dellers.

That is the situation that Congress has to confront, and, if we can get a chance to vote upon it, I am confident that the Senate will at least make some correction. Maybe we can not go as far as we ought to go. These matters have to grow, and they can not all be settled at once; but surely we are safe when we follow the recommendations of the department, which has investigated this question for years, and when we follow the investigated this question for years, and when we follow the recommendations of the Hughes Commission created by Congress, and when we follow the recommendations of the President based upon the report of that commission.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I wish to say a few words. I shall be brief, as I appreciate the necessity for action at the earliest moment.

No man appreciates more than I the immense amount of labor and painstaking and valuable work which the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has accomplished; and I especially appreciate the speech of the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN]. I deem it my duty to lay before the Senate some facts that have not been adverted to in detail; and I wish also, to avoid appearing to be inconsistent, to state why I expect to vote against the motion to suspend the rules.

I am in favor of the 1-cent-per-ounce drop-letter provision. Indeed, Mr. President, I have heretofore introduced a bill providing for the rate of 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof for drop letters. But I do not wish nor do I seek the 1-cent-per-ounce feature of the law at the expense of the publications of the country, which are the people's forum.

We can not close our eyes to the fact that it has been the historic, the ancient policy of this Government to encourage, by low postal rates, the easy and sometimes the free dissemination of literature in order that we may have an informed, enlightened public opinion, because in our government public opinion controls, and nothing is worse than a misinformed or a noninformed public opinion. Hence, I say again, it is our ancient and historic policy to encourage rather than discourage the dissemination, frequently free and at all times easy, of what we call second-class mail. Moreover, Mr. President, large numbers of the publications that are going to be affected by this legislation, should it be enacted, have made their contracts upon the law as it now stands, and a radical, sudden increase in the rate of postage would have the effect of dislocating their avenues of revenue; and would have the effect, in many instances—
Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion just there?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly. Mr. VARDAMAN. If that is the Senator's only objection to this proposal, that one injustice could be avoided by simply providing that the law should take effect at some time in the future, so that the publisher could accommodate himself to the changed law.

Mr. ASHURST. That is a most valuable suggestion, which I am indebted to the Senator from Mississippi for making.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will permit me further, if this motion prevails, all inequalities and imperfections of the character the Senator has brought out can be corrected; but we can not do it unless the Senate votes to suspend the rules.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator for his interruption, and there is force in it; but, in my judgment we can not and will not pause at this particular time, with only 14 or 15 working days ahead of us, to give adequate thought and care to this proposed plan; such plan should be carefully worked Small enterprises, some with very slender means, have made advertising contracts with their subscribers and with their advertisers, having in front of them the law as it now exists, and some of these advertising contracts are made to cover a period of two and three years. Hence, if a change is sought to be made, it ought to be far enough in the future as not to dislocate and practically ruin these worthy and laudable enterprises or publishing concerns which have engaged in this occupation.

I fear, should the proposed legislation be adopted, that the educational magazines, the various religious and trade publications, the scientific and the philanthropical publications, would be seriously injured by a sudden and radical raise, especially at this time, when the publishers, both large and small, and especially the small ones, are about to be driven out of business. I measure my words when I say that the publications, large and small, especially the small publications of the country, are many of them on the verge of bankruptcy for the reason that the increase in the price of print paper has been so sudden and so enormous that they can not adapt quickly themselves to the new situation which has suddenly come down upon them. So, Mr. President, I think it would be unjust now to lay upon the publishers of this country the additional burden of meeting this increased expenditure as proposed here, when we have in view the peril which confronts the small and the large publishers of this country by reason of the extortions that are being practiced upon them by the manufacturers of print paper.

Mr. President, some time ago a million circulars went out over this country stating there was a shortage in print paper. I am informed that there is and there was no shortage in print paper at all. Why? Because everybody got all the paper he wanted, if he paid the price. How can there be a shortage when everybody can have all he wants? One of the metropolitan newspapers advocated the worthy movement of gathering in certain waste paper. We were led to believe that they were going to gather that paper and manufacture print paper out of it. The truth is, the paper thus gathered in, so I am advised, can not be used for the purpose of manufacturing print paper, although it may be used to manufacture wrapping paper, and so forth.

Now, Mr. President, in order that the Senate and the country may see just the peril that is confronting the publishers of this country, both large and small, and especially the small ones, I will ask the Senate to indulge me for four or five minutes until I lay before the Senate this startling information:

The market price of print paper until the summer of 1916 was about $40 per ton, f. o. b. the mill, to what I am going to call the big buyers, the big buyers being men who could take enormous quantities. The price to what I am going to call the small man, the man who could not take a large quantity but could take only a somewhat limited amount of print paper, was from fifty-five to sixty dollars per ton. Bear in mind, the price per ton to the large user was $40 per ton in the summer of 1916; to the small user, fifty-five to sixty dollars per ton. Since this raise that I am going to speak of in a moment took place, the advance in the cost of the manufacture of this print paper has been only about $3 per ton. In other words, as this time, when these prices have been so radically and so tremendously elevated, the price of producing the print paper has been increased only $3 per ton; so that if the manufacturers sold now as they did a year ago, and took into consideration the increased cost of production, they would be selling to the large publisher at $43 per ton and to the smaller publisher at fifty-eight and sixty-three dollars per ton, respectively.

But what is the situation now? The large publisher to-day is paying $62 per ton. The small publisher is paying from $85 to $200 per ton-not less than $85 per ton for his white print paper; and possibly, if he advocates a cause or is propagating something that does not please the Print Paper Trust, it is $200 per ton. And then Senators gravely sit here and consider the proposition, in the closing days of Congress, of adding to that burden an increased expenditure in the way of postal expenses.

Mr. President, by reason of this advance in print paper, the newspapers of this country for the year 1917 will pay $60,000,000 more for print paper than they paid in 1916, assuming that they use the same amount and quantity of paper they did in 1916.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator. Mr. McLEAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona if the new Federal Trade Commission, to his knowledge, has taken any steps to prevent this extortion?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator for asking me that question. I wish to say that so far as I know—and I have no official information—the Federal Trade Commission has investigated the question, and it is fairly shocked and astounded at the situation it finds. I think I have given the figures accurately, although I did not get them from the Trade Commission; but I noticed by the newspapers that the Federal Trade Commission or the Department of Justice is now seeking to have a Federal grand jury called to investigate the matter, and, if the evidence shows an unlawful act, to indict and convict those monopolies that are seeking to crush the very life out of the publishers, large and small, in our

There is a very unhappy commentary in connection with this whole business. The press of this country—I do not agree with it sometimes; especially do I disagree with those papers that criticize me—but the press of this country is courageous. Without regard to what they advocate, as a rule, the newspapers are courageous; but it is not to their credit at all that they have been silent, that they have been issuing their papers from day to day and have failed to call attention to this situation. Some of them are so hard pressed, some of them are required to pay such high prices for print paper, that I have no doubt they fear they will be unable to get print paper at all if they fly in the face of and criticize and call to the bar of justice and the bar of public opinion this outrageous extortion which the Print Paper Trust is now imposing upon them. That is the only hypothesis to which I am driven as an explanation for the silence of these various journals that are so meekly submitting to this extortion.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President-

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. Some days ago I read a statement sent out from Chicago to the effect that a convention or meeting had been called-perhaps I would have better described it by saying a conference had been called-between the manufacturers of print paper and the publishers at Chicago to try to adjust their differences. The manufacturers, according to this report, declared in a defiant way to the publishers that if they sought to remedy through public authority—that is, through the Federal Trade Commission or the Department of Justice—the manufacturers would, in combination and cooperation, quit the manufacturing of print paper, and close the printing establishments of the country.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator for his statement. Mr. President, it is an absolute fact that certain papers, courageous otherwise, are, metaphorically speaking, on their knees implor-ing this Print Paper Trust to sell them white print paper at any price. Moreover, Mr. President, as the distinguished Senator from Missouri has said, the print-paper combination, or this combination making print paper, has issued to certain publishers, so I am told-I can not vouch as a fact for this one statementthat if they presume to advocate a particular line of policy contrary to the views of some of the men who are owners of and stockholders in this print-paper combination they will be crushed, and not be allowed to buy any print paper at all. As I say, I do not vouch for the truth of that statement, but I have been informed regarding it by what I believe to be a reliable author-As to the other information I have given to the Senate, there is little doubt as to the facts being in accordance with

So, Mr. President, the publishers of this country are facing an increase in expense of print paper of $60,000,000 over the year just closed. I will take a few newspapers as an example. The profit of the Boston Post last year was $165,000. uses the same amount this year that it did last year, it will pay $$12,000 for its print paper alone. Not only will its profit of $165,000 be swept out, but it will be required to go down into its reserves to the tune of over $600,000 more to pay for print paper alone.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator where he gets the figures quoted?

Mr. ASHURST. I think so much of the Senator from Utah that it is painful for me to refuse to give him my source of information.

Mr. SMOOT. I accept that statement of the Senator; but I want to say to the Senator that the Federal Trades Commission, as he has already stated, has made an examination into the cost of making print paper and also has made an examination into the price at which the paper has been sold. That report will be made to Congress, I suppose, within a short time. But I wish to say to the Senator, in regard to the statement he made that no newspaper of any importance in the United States is compelled to pay to-day 10 cents a pound for print paper Mr. ASHURST. I did not catch the Senator's remark.

Mr. SMOOT. I say there is no newspaper in the United States of any importance that is paying 10 cents a pound, or $200 a ton, for print paper. I will say to the Senator that I believe and I have every reason to say that I know-the report of the commission will show that the cost of print paper for the year 1916 over and above the cost of print paper for 1915-I am not speaking now of 1913 and 1914; I am speaking of 1916—will show an increase of only about 4 cents per hundred pounds.

I will also say to the Senator I am quite sure this report will show that there is a great deal of paper furnished by the paper manufacturers to-day on contracts that have not yet expired and at a price of about 2 cents a pound, or $40 a ton. I know myself of a great many papers in the United States that are still using paper under a contract made in the year 1914, at which time the general price was 2 cents a pound, or $40 a ton, and some papers were purchasing it for a little less than that.

I wish to say to the Senator that this report, I think, will show that the price where there is no contract price will run from 2½ cents up to 7 cents a pound. Seven cents, of course, is where the purchaser buys it from a dealer or distributing agent in small quantity. The dealer perhaps buys a carload and then he sells it at retail at as high a price as he can get

In what I said, Mr. President, I do not want the Senator to feel that I justify some of the high prices that are being charged for print paper, and the only reason why it could happen at all is because of the conditions existing in the world

I knew the Senator wanted to make no statement on the floor of the Senate, no matter where he gets the information, that is not borne out by the facts.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator has correctly stated my attitude. I do not wish, here or elsewhere, to make a statement that is not in accordance with the facts. I have verified my statements to the best of my capacity. That I may be inaccurate in some detail I, of course, grant.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word in that connection before we leave the subject concerning print paper. Not only has print paper advanced in its price, but book paper of all kinds has advanced. I wish to say to the Senator now that if we were compelled to buy the paper for the Government of the United States to-day and purchase just the same amount of each kird of paper that we purchased last February it would cost the Government of the United States a little over $1,000,000 more than it did last year. I will state to the Senator it is on no one class of paper, but the increases have run from, on the high-price papers, 12 to 20 per cent; on medium-class papers, 40 to 50 per cent; and on the cheapest paper it has advanced, sometimes, over 150 per cent. That comes about, however, because of the fact that the price of wood pulp has increased enormously and the price of everything that goes into the manufacture of paper has increased enormously.

Mr. ASHURST. That may be true, but I have another fact relating to that question which I will bring out in a moment.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from California, though I would like to finish at the earliest moment, of course.

Mr. WORKS. Conceding all that has been said by the Senator from Arizona as to the increased price paid, I am a little puzzled to know what that has to do with the question before the Senate. I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks the Government ought to forego the right to increase the rate of postage to a reasonable amount because somebody else is extorting from the newspapers?

Mr. ASHURST. In reply to the distinguished Senator from California, I confess my arguments are not always powerful and frequently not to the point, and although they seem clear to me they are about as clear as a concrete wall to some other Senators. But it has seemed to me that when I am pointing out that newspapers are about to be and are being mulcted to the tune of $60,000,000 a year, it is pertinent to take into consideration the question as to whether we should impose an additional burden in the way of postal rates. That is the reason why I am reading these figures to show the burdens under which they are now laboring.

Mr. President, when I was interrupted I was calling attention to the fact that the Boston Post will be required to pay, assuming that it uses the same amount of paper this year that it did last year, $812,000 for its print paper alone, and that its profit was last year, I am advised, $165,000. Take one more illustration. I am not going to tire the Senate by going down a list of newspapers and show what the profits were and what they paid out, but taking one more illustration, the Kansas City Star, a paper printed in the State so ably represented here in the Senate by her two Illustrious sons and Senators—if the Kansas City Star in the year 1917 uses the same amount of paper that it used last year, it will pay $900,000 more for print paper than it paid last year.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield for a moment.
Mr. POMERENE. Has that paper increased its advertising?
Mr. ASHURST. I do not know. I wish to say that most of these papers, especially the country weeklies, the philanthropic, the trade and educational journals, the fraternal journals, and many of the weeklies and dailies make contracts for one, two, and three years in advance.

Mr. POMERENE. Can the Senator tell us what the profit was compared with that of last year?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not know what the profits were. I have not those figures

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator another question? His position is that these publications are paying too much for their print paper. Clearly, that does not appeal to a Senator who thinks along a straight line as a reason why we should give this service for less than cost.

Mr. ASHURST. I premised my argument by saying it is the historic and ancient policy of our Government to encourage in every proper way the dissemination of information so that we may have an informed public opinion, because a misinformed public opinion is worse than monarchy

Mr. POMERENE. In other words, if I— Mr. ASHURST. Just let me finish. If an institution or business laudible in itself is fairly staggering under a load, is it wise, is it statesmanlike, to put upon it an additional burden that will in many instances crush and annihilate it altogether, when its income and revenues are required to meet the demands of this extortionate monopoly of print paper?

Mr. POMERENE. In other words, if I am a farmer and pay too much for a horse, the Government ought to relieve me from the payment of my taxes.

Mr. ASHURST. Not at all. I ask the Senator if he thinks this is right: I know of a chain of newspapers in his State the profits of which last year were $500,000. This year they will pay $750,000 more for print paper than they paid last year.

Mr. POMERENE. Can the Senator tell me what their profits

Five hundred thousand dollars, so I am told.

Mr. POMERENE. The profits last year? Mr. ASHURST. So I am told. Mr. POMERENE. What are the profits this year?

For this year I do not know. I am talking Mr. ASHURST. about the year 1916.

Mr. POMERENE. But the Senator is only presenting to us one view of this case. I should like to see the whole financial statement and then we could tell more about it.

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to see it myself.
Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator a question also?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.
Mr. TOWNSEND. If I have followed the argument of the Senator correctly, he is arguing that because of additional cost to the newspapers the Government should be lenient with them this year and not impose what most of us believe is a just share of the taxes. Is it not a fact that the Government is laboring under all the disabilities that the newspapers are laboring under, its burdens have been increased during the year, and we are called upon this year to make the largest appropriation that the country ever asked of the Government?

Mr. ASHURST. I think the statement of the distinguished Senator from Michigan is very pertinent, and I thank him; but I have never argued that the Government should be lenient with the papers. Search my remarks with a microscope, and you will not find the word "lenient." They have made their They have made their advertising contracts in accordance with what they have a right to presume would be the postal rates for this year. Here Congress is about to close, and a Madical, sudden, and, I suspect, a not fully considered question of enormous increase is presented. The law is 32 years old, and they are to be required to meet this additional expense without notice,

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—
Mr. ASHURST. I wish to conclude in a moment.

Mr. VARDAMAN, I did not want to interrupt the Senator. It is not my purpose or desire to break the orderly chain of his The Senator has stated correctly, I think, the purpose of the great system of dissemination of knowledge among the people as one of great consideration, one of the essential prerequisites to good citizenship. Now he is considering the newspaper as a philanthropical enterprise conducted for the good of humanity with incidential profits. If the Senator wants to help the farmer, who seems to be the object of so much solicitude and love, does not the Senator think it would be very proper for the Post Office Department to give to the farmer, who is now burdened with taxation, groaning under the load which he is carrying to maintain the Government, with the high cost of living, and all that, an opportunity to carry his wares cheaper?

Mr. ASHURST. I certainly do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. To carry the things he wants to sell to town cheaper and bring the things from town that he wants to buy cheaper, and then his condition might be ameliorated.

Mr. ASHURST. I think so.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Would the Senator, then, be in favor of lowering the parcel-post rate?

Mr. ASHURST. On some of the zones I would be. I am in favor of lowering the rates not on all zones but on some of

Mr. President, I trust I may finish this very dislocated statement without further interruption. I shall be through in four or five minutes.

The distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], who furnishes information on nearly every subject on which he speaks, and he speaks on nearly every subject, stated that by reason of some advances in material, equipment, and so forth, necessary to produce the print paper a large part of the increase was occasioned thereby. Now, let us see about that. The Chicago Tribune owns its own paper mill and makes its own paper. I think, but I am not certain that I am accurate, it holds it through an auxiliary or a subsidiary corporation, and after making print paper sells to that great newspaper, the Chicago Tribune, print paper at $44 a ton and makes a profit. Here are these monopolists confederated together selling print the property of the small user at, as I paper to the large user at $62 per ton, to the small user at, as I said before, at some eighty-five to two hundred dollars a ton. So we put into juxtaposition that situation. The paper in Chicago had its own plant—I do not know where it is located—selling paper, I am advised, and meeting all its needs, at $44 a ton. The argument must fall to the ground like a house of cards blown in a cyclone that they must increase their rates because of the enormous increase in expense of manufacture.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose the Senator desires an answer, or he would not have called my attention to his argument.

Mr. ASHURST. I wanted to call the Senator's attention to the situation.

Mr. SMOOT. I think I know the situation pretty well throughout the country. I want to say to the Senator in speaking of the cost of print paper I do not speak of one particular manufacturer in the United States that purchased thousands of acres of wood for the purpose of manufacturing it into print paper. He no doubt bought the standing forest years ago at the stumpage value of a dollar per 1,000, and general stumpage has increased up to five, six, and seven dollars. The Chicago paper spoken of by the Senator, of course, is not compelled to charge the cost of paper that it now manufactures based on the present stumpage price of wood. That would be like putting a dollar out of one pocket into another.

Mr. ASHURST, Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. But when you come to take all the thousands of newspapers in the United States that do not manufacture a pound of paper, and when you take the paper manufacturers who have been and are compelled to buy every pound of wood pulp that they put into the paper manufactured by them, or every pound of sulphide used in the paper, then you have got to take into consideration what it costs to-day and not what it cost in 1914. The Senator will find when the Federal Trade Commission's report comes in as to the price of wood pulp that is sold to our paper manufacturers in this country, that as they have no forests of their own and no machinery to manufacture wood pulp, they are compelled to pay exceedingly high prices for it.

The Senator will find that the price of wood pulp to all of this class of manufacturers has increased not 100 per cent, but 200 and 300 per cent. It was to that I had reference. I had no reference to simply one Chicago newspaper that manufactures its own paper from wood which was purchased years and years ago when the stumpage of wood was almost nothing. The Senator, however, is too wise a man not to take into consideration the conditions as they exist to-day, what a manufacturer has to pay for what enters into the manufacture of paper to-day. Everything that is required to produce paper, no matter what it is, costs more than it did in 1914.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have no doubt that there is much of truth in the Senator's statement. With one sentence I am going to close. I have laid these facts, as I believe them to be facts, before the Senate, so that it might be informed and have all the information in the matter before it decided, in addition to the great burdens which these publications are bearing, whether we shall increase those burdens or shall let the status quo remain until there has been time for further investigation and examination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending question is, Shall clause 3 of Rule XVI be suspended for the purpose of enabling the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] to submit his amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. He is absent. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood), but I note his absence from the Chamber, and therefore I will withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I should ote "yea."

Mr. LEA of Tennessee (when his name was called). On account of my special interest in this question, I ask to be excused from voting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Tennessee is excused from voting.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. Smith of Michigan was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan]. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a pair on this vote with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Kern], who has been called from the Chamber on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Goff] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Hughes] and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I inquire if the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Lippitt] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. WALSH. I have a pair with that Senator, and, in his absence, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In view of his absence and my inability to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. POMERENE. I am requested to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] on official business. He is paired with the senior Senator from Vermont

[Mr. DILLINGHAM]

Mr. CURTIS. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], who is necessarily absent, and I therefore withhold my vote.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dillingham] is absent on account of illness and is paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. BANKHEAD. I announce that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Hardwick] is absent from the Chamber on account of sickness. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Stebling]. Inadvertently I voted. I see that that Senator is absent, and I transfer my pair to the Senator from Arigona [Mr. Stepling]. from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. CHILTON (after having voted in the negative). Mr. President, I was not aware that I had any personal interest in the matter before the Senate, but, since the statement made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Lea], I am informed that probably I have. I own some interest in a newspaper, and I do not want to vote so that anybody can now or hereafter say that I had a personal interest in any public act which I may have done. I am sure that I never thought about it, but I own an interest in a newspaper. For that reason I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair

hears none.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Colt] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Saulsbury].

The roll call resulted—yeas 34, nays 37, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the question, Shall the rule be suspended? the yeas are 34 and the nays are 37. The motion is not agreed to.

Mr. JONES obtained the floor.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President-

Mr. JONES. I understand there are other committee amendments, and I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. There are some other committee amendments. The amendments on page 11 were passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendments passed over

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the amendments on page 11 and page 14 went over at my request; but since the adoption of what is known as the Smoot amendment, increasing the salaries of certain employees, I shall make no objection at all to the amendments of the committee with relation to the substitute clerks, nor to those relating to the letter carriers, as found on page 14 of the bill. So far as I am concerned, as I asked that they go over, I have no further objection to them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments passed over will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 11, line 9, after the word "of." to strike out "all" and insert "75 per cent of"; in line 12, before the words "per cent," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "five"; in line 14, before the words "per cent," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "five"; in line 17, after the word "of," to strike out "all" and insert "75 per cent of"; in line 19, before the words "per cent," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "five"; and in line 20, before the word "offices" to insert insert "five"; and in line 20, before the word "offices," to insert post," so as to make the clause read:

And to provide for the promotion of 75 per cent of the clerks in first-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade, and for the promotion of 5 per cent of the clerks in the sixth grade to the designation of "special clerk" in the $1,300 grade, and for the promotion of 5 per cent of the designated "special clerks" in the $1,300 grade to the designation of "special clerk" in the $1,400 grade, and to provide for the promotion of 75 per cent of the clerks in second-class post offices from the fourth to the fifth grade, and for the promotion of 5 per cent of the clerks in second-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade: And provided further, That there may also be employed at first-class post offices foremen and stenographers at a salary of $1,300 or more per annum; in all, $49,740,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendments passed over were, on page 14, line 11, after the word "of," to strike out "all" and insert "75 per cent"; in line 13, after the word "of," to strike out "all" and insert "75 per cent"; in line 14, before the word "offices," to insert "post"; in line 15, before the words "per cent," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "five"; and in line 16, before the word "offices," to insert "post," so as to make the clause read:

The part of letter carriers at offices already established including

For pay of letter carriers at offices already established, including substitutes for letter carriers absent without pay, and for the promotion of 75 per cent of the letter carriers in first-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade and for the promotion of 75 per cent of the letter carriers in second-class post offices from the fourth to the fifth grade and for the promotion of 5 per cent of the letter carriers in second-class post offices from the fifth grade and for the promotion of 5 per cent of the letter carriers in second-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade, City Delivery Service, $40,550,000.

The amendments were agreed to.
Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, at the top of page 29, line 7, I offer a substitute. It will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment on page 29 was adopted, and I ask to have that done.

The Secretary. -On page 29, line 7, there was a committee amendment agreed to which read as follows:

Provided further, That hereafter the compensation of carriers on horse-drawn vehicle routes shall be at the rate of $24 per annum for each mile of said routes in excess of a standard vehicle route of 24 miles, and any major fraction of a mile shall be counted as a mile.

Mr. BRYAN. I move to reconsider the vote whereby that amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote will be reconsidered.

Mr. BRYAN. Now I offer as a substitute for it the matter which I send to the desk on behalf of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment agreed to, on page 29, beginning on line 7, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That on and after July 1, 1917, the compensation of carriers on daily rural routes shall be at the rate of $24 per annum for each mile of said routes in excess of the standard vehicle route of 24 miles, and any major fraction of a mile shall be counted as a mile. A standard motor-vehicle route shall not be less than 36 miles in length and shall not be established unless a majority of the proposed patrons who are heads of families residing upon such proposed route shall, by written petition, ask the Post Office Department to establish the same.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk,

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 2, following line 1, under the heading of "Office of the Postmaster General," it is proposed to

For rent of suitable buildings for the use of the Post Office Department, including the mail bag repair shop and lock-repair shop, $2,666.67.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, there is one other committee amendment, that was passed over at the request of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Vardaman]. That is the amendment on page 15, relating to the pneumatic-tube service.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I shall not consume very much of the time of the Senate in the discussion of this ques-

I confess that at the beginning of the consideration of this item of the bill I was very much in favor of this appropriation; but it was because I was not informed as to the work the tubes were doing in the distribution of the mail. This is a question about which Congress has differed in opinion ever since the establishment of the system. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads held extended hearings, and citizens from the cities of New York, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, and Philadelphia came in great numbers with their counsel, able lawyers, and influential newspaper men, to convince the committee that the tube system should be continued. All the information I have on the subject has been given to me by the Post Office Department. That the officers and employees of the Post Office Department know what they are talking about and are qualified to speak upon this question, when you consider the history of this proposed legislation and read the story they tell, I do not think you will question the accuracy of their conclusion. I want to say that I have no interest in this matter except to bring out the facts that the Senate may be in possession of the truth about it, as I understand it. There is in this matter not only saving to the taxpayers, the question of the efficiency of the Postal Service, but there is a moral question also involved. The act of April 21, 1902, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, contains the following provision:

June 30, 1903, contains the following provision:

For the transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices, $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for a period not exceeding four years, after public advertisement once a week for a period of six consecutive weeks in not less than five newspapers, one of which shall be published in each city where the service is to be performed. That the contracts for this service shall be subject to the provisions of the postal laws and regulations relating to the letting of mail contracts, except as herein otherwise provided, and that no advertisement shall issue until after a careful investigation shall have been made as to the needs and practicability of such service and until a favorable report, in writing, shall have been submitted to the Postmaster General by a commission of not less than three expert postal officials, to be named by him; nor shall such advertisement issue until, in the judgment of the Postmaster General, the needs of the Postal Service are such as to justify the expenditure involved.

Pursuant to that law the Postmaster General, on the 17th of July, 1915, appointed a commission composed of Joe P. Johnston, General Superintendent Division of Railway Mail Service; W. S. Ryan, superintendent of Division of City Delivery; John C. Koons, chief inspector; I. T. Mullins, post-office inspector; and George A. Gardner, Assistant Superintendent of Railway Mail Service.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENYON in he chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I yield to the Senator from Washington. Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not want to interrupt the Senator's argument. I was out of the Chamber when this amendment was reached. I should like to inquire whether a point of order has been made against the amendment?

Mr. VARDAMAN. A point of order has not been made

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make the point of order against it, Mr. Without desiring to interrupt the argument of the President. Senator, I just want to reserve that right.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think the point of order will lie. I do not think there is any question about its being general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make the point of order that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator make that point of order now? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. VARDAMAN. For what purpose does the Senator rise?

Does he wish to ask me a question?

Mr. SMOOT. All I wanted was to ask whether the Senator from Washington made his point of order now, and whether it was going to be ruled upon at this time. I do not want to take the Senator off the floor, of course. I could not do it if I wanted to.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Of course, the Senator from Washington can not make the point of order with the Senator from Mississippi occupying the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Mississippi that he understands the Vice President has ruled, as to similar amendments, that they are in order; and the present occupant of the Chair will so rule.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, my sole purpose was to protect myself in the right to make the point of order. If it can be done without taking the Senator from Mississippi off the floor, I desire to pursue that course. I do not want to interfere with his speech in any way.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Chair has ruled that it is in order. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator that the Chair is not ruling. He is simply stating to the Senator the line the Vice President has followed in his rulings.

The Senator from Mississippi has the floor, and the Chair does not understand that he could be taken off the floor.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Well, Mr. President, we will raise the point of order later, if the Senator from Washington wants to make that point. I do not know what the Vice President has decided, but I am satisfied the point of order ought to be sustained; but we will look after that later.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a question?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I notice that the amendment which the Senator THOMAS. tor is discussing so intelligently is an amendment to a House provision; or, to be more accurate, the House provision upon the same subject is stricken out and this amendment substituted

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes; but this amendment does a great deal more than that.

Mr. THOMAS. Now, my question is whether the Senator is satisfied with the House provision concerning this subject?

Mr. VARDAMAN. No; I am not.

As I was about to state, Mr. President, and probably I did state, on the 17th of July, 1915, this commission was appointed This commission reported to the Senate the pursuant to law. result of its investigation, and I am going to give the Senate succinctly what that commission discovered.

They say:

While the pneumatic tubes are free from surface congestion and the containers travel at a high rate of speed between stations, these advantages are outwelghed because of—
"1. The necessity of relaying containers at way stations, thus involving a great loss of time;

"2. Requiring all intermediate stations to be kept open, with the employees on duty;

"3. The impossibility of dispatching mail to the point where it is received by or taken from the railroad companies without additional handling;

"4. The inability to prevent dampness and moisture in the tubes, thus causing damage to the mail;

"5. The stoppage of the operation of the entire service when the line is discontinued between any two points;

6. The inflexibility of the service:

"7. Its inability to meet current emergency conditions, thus resulting in congestion; and

"8. Its excessive cost of $17,000 per mile per annum.

"The use of the tubes is confined to the transportation of first-class mail, which represents, according to the report of the Hughes Commission, approximately 12 per cent of the entire weight of all classes of mail. However, since the establishment of the Parcel Post Service this percentage has been greatly reduced as to bulk and somewhat reduced as to weight. In two of the cities having pneumatic-tube service less than 50 per cent of the first-class mail (which constitutes less than 12 per cent of all mail) is transported by tube between the points having such service, while in some cities the volume is greater; but notwithstanding this fact it is necessary, because of the limited capacity of the tubes, to parallel the tube service in each instance by surface transportation, not only for the transmission of other classes of mail but for mail of the first class, all of which in theory should be handled by the tubes.

Of the letter mail transported by tubes from 82 to 97 per cent could be handled by the present means of surface transportation without any delay or additional cost. The department therefore derives no benefit from the transportation of a large percentage of the mail that is now forwarded through the tubes. The volume of mail advanced by the use of the tube service at stations having such service, even under the present screen-wagon schedules, which are arranged with a view of utilizing the tube service to the fullest extent, is almost infinitesimal, varying from 1 per cent of the entire volume of mail in New York City to as low as 0.21 per cent in the city of Philadelphia, the average for all cities having tube service amounting to about 0.7 per cent.

"The price paid for the tube service is the same in all instances ($17,000 per mile per annum), which is a higher rate per mile than the total paid all the railroads that enter New York City for carrying all of the mail, approximately three times as much as that paid all the railroads for the same purpose that enter Boston, more than twice as much as that paid the railroads that enter St. Louis, and greater than the amount paid the railroads that enter Philadelphia, notwithstanding the fact that they only advance from 0.21 per cent to 1 per cent of the mail.

'If the tubes are abandoned other means of transportation can be furnished at less than one-third the cost, which will not only transport the mails as expeditionsly as the present tube service but even more so. The postmasters at the cities of Boston, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Chicago, and Brooklyn have stated that the tube service can be discontinued and more efficient service rendered by other means; and although the pneumatic tubes cost $17,000 per mile per annum, the statements made by these efficials show clearly that better service can be rendered at a cost that would equal $3,500 per mile.

The question therefore resolves itself into one as to whether or not the Postmaster General shall be directed to continue a service at $17,000 per mile per annum when better service can be rendered at a cost of $3,500 per mile or less, and which the postmasters and supervisory officers at offices involved have urged be discontinued. Against the statements of the persons having charge of the Postal Service we have those of the hired attorneys, agents, and officers of the tube companies urging that they be continued, and who have rallied to their support business organizations whose representatives have no knowledge of the Postal Service and have not the slightest responsibility resting upon them for its successful administration.
"The evidence before the committee shows that during one evening recently in New York City more than 700 containers of mail originating below Forty-second Street were delayed, some of them for a great length of time, because of the congestion in the tubes. This congestion involved a delay of more than 11 tons of important business mail originating in the financial and business districts of New York City. Much of this mail missed its connections, involving delays from 12 to 24 hours in delivery. If the business organizations in New York City knew the true facts of this service, I am persuaded to believe they would be insisting on its discontinuance instead of its continuance.

The percentage of the additional mail which it would be necessary to provide transportation for in case the tubes are to be discontinued is so small its effect upon the congestion of the streets would not be noticeable; besides, the Post Office Department should have the same right to place vehicles upon the streets as merchants and business men of the various cities There was no evidence before the committee that any protest had been made by the traffic officers or officials of any city against the merchants placing such machines on the streets as might be necessary to deliver their parcels; besides, a very large portion of the tube service in Boston was built for the merchants for the delivery of parcels, but abandoned by them more than 15 years ago as an unsuccessful business venture. No protests were made by the merchants of the city at that time against the discontinuance of this service and placing their traffic on the streets. In endeavoring to discontinue the service at this time the Post Office Department is attempting to discontinue a service that the merchants of Boson 15 years ago considered as obsolete and useless.

"The Senate must therefore decide between the recommendations of the department, the postmasters, and those responsible for the Postal Service and whose duty it is to render efficient postal service on the one hand and the inspired representations made by the tube companies on the other; and the only practical conclusion would be to follow the recommendations of the Post Office Department and not appropriate a million dollars to be used in the next year in extravagance and waste. In directing that the Post Office Department continue the use of the service for another year the Senators are directing that the Postmaster General use a utility which the Members of Congress themselves are not willing to use, because the tube line which is built between the Capitol and the House Office Building has never been utilized to any purpose because it has not been found by the Members themselves to be practicable."

Mr. President, I have a statement prepared for me by the First Assistant Postmaster General of the cost and the saving to the Government if the Post Office Department is permitted to do what the Post Office Department believes to be in the interest of the public service.

The act of 1902 provided this contract should not be renewed until the Postmaster General had appointed a commission of not less than three expert postal officials to investigate it, believing that he would do that which would promote the public service rather than take care of private interests. The Post-master General has done that. This report has been made as I have stated heretofore. Now, listen to what they discovered: The percentage of mail of all classes which is first class is 12. The percentage of letter mail received and dispatched by tubes at stations having tube service in New York is 46.92. In portation if tubes are abolished—New York I, Brooklyn, Brooklyn, 47.75 per cent of first-class mail; in Boston, 89.36; 0.53; no data for Boston; 0.99 for Chicago; 0.68 for St.

[At this point Mr. VARDAMAN yielded to Mr. BRYAN, on whose motion the Senate agreed to meet at 10 a. m. to-morrow.]

Mr. VARDAMAN. Now, Mr. President, I am going to repeat this table and I hope Senators will listen to it. They talk about economy, retrenchment, and reform. Unless the officers of the Post Office Department are incompetent and dishonest this statement will convince you that the continuation of the pneumatic system is an unwarranted and indefensible extravagance of something over $600,000 per annum. It is a gratuity voted out of a depleted Treasury to men who have no legal or moral right to receive it.

As I said in the beginning, I do not know whether these facts are true or false, but I am going to indulge the presumption that the officers of the law, the Postmaster General, and those who have cooperated with him in making this investigation are honest and patriotic. I am convinced also that they are informed and inspired by a sincere desire and purpose to perform properly the functions of their respective offices.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator a question? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it not a fact that the pneumatic-tube system of Boston was constructed as a commercial enterprise, and having proved a failure for that purpose was then taken over by Government for its mail system at an expense of $17,000 a mile? I have been so informed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I understand that is true. This commission reports

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Permit me to state that it does not militate against the policy of the tubes because it was started for a parcel-post business.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to say to the Senator who interrupts me without permission-but he is always welcome to any time I may have at my disposal-

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I humbly beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That the judgment of the Postmaster General and the expert officers of the Government who have investigated it is worth quite as much as my superficial investigation and the investigation of the able Senator from New Jersey, and I think they are quite as honest and patriotic as Members of this body. They know more about this question than any Senator knows about it, and they are not interested in anything else than the public service. They have no friends with investments to protect. It matters not with them whether the $10,000,000 or $7,000,000 invested in the tubes pay dividends or not. They are sworn to serve their Government and the American people, and I believe they are doing it fearlessly and well.

Now, listen, I repeat, what they say about it: The percentage of mail of all classes which is first class is 12.

Percentage of letter mail received and dispatched by tubes at stations having tube service, New York, 46.92.

Mr. WEEKS. Does that refer to weight or to pieces?

Mr. VARDAMAN. It means for the total mail.

Mr. WEEKS. I mean is the Senator using the basis of pieces or of weight?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am using the basis, as I said, of letter mail received and dispatched by tubes at stations having tube service; that is, letter mail that is sent through the tubes.

Mr. WEEKS. What I want to know is, does that mean 12 per cent of pieces or 12 per cent of weight?

Mr. VARDAMAN. No; it is 12 per cent of all the mail.

Mr. WEEKS. Total of what; weight?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suppose it means 12 per cent of the mail. In New York it is 46.92; Brooklyn, 47.75; Boston, 89.36; Chicago, 67.03; St. Louis, 80.96; Philadelphia, 67.44.

Now, the percentage of mail of all classes received and dispatched by tubes at stations having tube service is 5.63 at New York, at Brooklyn 5.73, at Boston 10.72, at Chicago 8.04, St. Louis 9.71, Philadelphia 8.19.

Percentage of letter mail received and dispatched by tubes that can be handled by existing means of transportation without delay or additional expense, New York, 82.21; Brooklyn, 90.82; there is no data given for Boston; Chicago it is 87.73; St. Louis, 82.79; Philadelphia, 97.46.

Percentage of entire volume of mail handled at tube stations for which it will be necessary to provide other means of trans-office.

Louis; 0.21 for Philadelphia. Cost per mile for tube service $17,000 in all these cities. Cost per mile for transporting entire volume of mail arriving and departing on all railroads in New York, $16,764 (that includes Brooklyn; Boston is $6,038; Chicago, $26,509; St. Louis, $7,236; and in Philadelphia, $15,898).

Cost of present surface transportation (excepting collection service) in New York, $568,873; in Brooklyn, $142,367; in Boston, $99,549; in Chicago, $346,308; in St. Louis, $101,752; in Philadelphia, $133,216.

Cost of existing tube service in New York, $449,293; Brooklyn, $22,950; Boston, $115,158; Chicago, $168,419; St. Louis, $33,796; Philadelphia, $169,998, making a total of $959,614.

The estimated cost of surface transportation if tubes be abolished is $250,000 in New York (that includes Brooklyn), $29,000 in Boston, $28,000 in Chicago, $4,700 in St. Louis, $34,000 in Philadelphia, making a total of $345,700.

The estimated annual saving in New York is $199,293, Brooklyn $22,950, Boston $86,158, Chicago $140,419, St. Louis $29,096, Philadelphia $135,998, or a saving if the report of this committee shall be adopted to the people of the United States of $613,914.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Montana?

VARDAMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the Senator what the percentage of increase of haulage would be if the mail now transported by tubes were transported by means of automobile trucks—that is, through all these cities?

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is right here; I just read it. Percentage of entire volume of mail handled at tube stations for which it will be necessary to provide other means of transportation if tubes are abolished, in New York, 1; in Brooklyn, 0.53; no data for Boston; in Chicago, 0.99; in St. Louis, 0.68; and in Philadelphia 0.21.

Mr. WALSH. Let me inquire, Is it the opinion of the Senator from Mississippi that no additional trucks would need to be put upon the streets for the purpose of effecting a haulage?

Mr. VARDAMAN. It would require some, I think.

Mr. WALSH. How many?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Here it is, Percentage of letter mail re-ceived and dispatched by tubes that can be handled by existing means of transportation without delay or additional expense, in New York, 82.21; in Brooklyn, 90.82; no data for Boston; in Chicago, 87.73; in St. Louis, 82.79; and in Philadelphia, 97.46.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, when this matter was brought to my attention I could not understand, as I stated a moment ago, and I do not understand now-if we indulge the presumption that the Postmaster General is honest, patriotic, and worthy of the great place he occupies, and I believe he is; if those associated with him in this investigation are capable, sincere, and trustworthy, and I believe they are; if they have stated the truth in this report-I repeat, I can not see how there can be any justification for the continuance of this tube service. But it is urged by the proponents of this measure that additional trucks upon the streets will bring about congestion of the commerce of the city; that they will hinder and delay the movement of commerce along the streets. Now, I submit that nobody raised that question when the merchants of Boston abandoned the tubes and put upon the streets wagons for distributing their goods throughout the city. The number of trucks that will be necessary to carry the mail that is now carried by the tubes in addition to the trucks already in use by the Post Office Department is so infinitesimally small that it will not block the channels of commerce in these great cities to any appreciable extent. In conversation with the Postmaster General about this matter he said to me with great earnestness that if he had the power to act for the Government he would abandon the use of the tubes, even if the stockholders were to deed the entire system to the Government without cost, because he thought it would be a wise economy and a great saving of public funds, besides adding materially to the efficiency of the service.

Mr. WALSH. That is what I wanted to inquire about. Mr. JONES and Mr. WADSWORTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will yield to the Senator from Washington in a moment.

Mr. WALSH. I simply want to inquire of the Senator if he can tell us what additional percentage of trucks it would be necessary to put upon the streets in order to do this work?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I can not tell the Senator from Montana offhand, but it would require very few more trucks. I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I merely want to say that in the copy of a letter which the Postmaster General wrote, and which I received this morning, I think there is a direct answer to the question of the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh]. If the Senator from Mississippi will permit me, I will read just a few lines from the letter.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I shall be very glad to have the Senator from Washington do so.

Mr. JONES. The Postmaster General states:

Approximately $7½ per cent of the mail now transported by tubes can be transported by the present means of surface transportation without additional cost or delay. If the tubes are abandoned, it will be necessary to provide transportation for 12½ per cent of the first-class mail now forwarded by tubes, which represents 0.7 per cent of the entire volume handled at the station having tube service. It can be easily seen that the claim that this would greatly congest the streets is ridiculous.

Assuming the statement of facts to be as the Postmaster General has made it, it gives a pretty good idea as to the situ-

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator from Washington will pardon me, I had already put that information into the Record.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I yield to the Senator from New York with pleasure.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from New York thanks the Senator from Mississippi for his patience, but I had an idea that I might contribute to an answer to the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] when he inquired as to what increase there would have to be in the service of trucks in order to take care of the mail which is now handled in the tubes. The assistant postmaster of the city of New York appeared before the Post Office Committee and incidentally very strenuously urged the retention of the tube service in that city. I might say, in passing, that the present postmaster of New York rose from the ranks, starting in as a civil-service clerk in that

He says with respect to that that on two circuits, which in a sense are now paralleled by the tubes, they make 24 trips a day with automobile trucks, while if the tubes were abandoned there would have to be 38 trips a day. On another circuit, where they are now making 20 trips a day with the trucks, if the tubes should be abandoned they would have to make 41 trips. His testimony goes much further into the merits of the case, and at the proper time I shall call it to the attention of the Senate, for the postmaster arrives at conclusions utterly different from those of the Postmaster General.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, in reply to the information which the Senator from New York has given for the purpose of showing the necessity for retaining the tubes, let me say that if the trips are made with automobiles or with screened wagons they can be made for so much less than the tubes cost and do the work quite as expeditiously. It costs only about $3,500 to do the work with trucks, screened wagons, and automobiles, while it costs $17,000 by the tubes. It strikes me that in these strenuous times, with a depleted Treasury and the enormous outlay which must be made for armaments and other expenses of the Government, when the underpaid clerks and employees of the Government are knocking at the Treasury for help, that this item of three-quarters of a million dollars, aside from the moral question involved, should appeal to Senators as worthy of consideration.

Mr. President-Mr. THOMAS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do. Mr. THOMAS. Will it interrupt the Senator if I inquire whether the Postmaster General's report does not recommend the retention of the tubes between the post office and the Grand Central Station in New York?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes; he recommends that with reference to New York.

Mr. President, I have discharged what I believe to be my duty to the American people. I have put into the RECORD the facts of the case as I understand them. It now remains with the Senate to do as its sense of prudence, economy, and loyalty to the American people may dictate.

Mr. President, I now ask permission to print as a part of my remarks a letter from the Postmaster General which is addressed to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead], chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, permission to do so will be granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

FERRUARY 10, 1917.

Hon. John H. Bankhead, Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, United States Senate.

Hon, John H. Bankhead,

Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads,

United States Senate.

My Drar Senator Bankhead: The bill making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, now under consideration by the Senate, contains a provision, on page 15, which authorizes and directs the Postmaster General to extend existing contracts for pneumatic-tube service until June 30, 1918. This proposed amendment is a change in existing law and practically nullifies the act of Congress of 1902 relating to this service, which provides:

"(a) That no advertisement shall issue until after careful investigation shall have been made as to the needs and practicability of such service and until a favorable report in writing shall have been submitted to the Postmaster General by a commission of not less than three expert postal officials, to be named by him; and
"(b) Nor shall such advertisement issue until in the judgment of the Postmaster General the needs of the Postal Service are such as to justify the expenditure involved."

In accordance with this act a commission composed of the ablest postal experts in the service was appointed, and, after thorough investigation, recommended that the service be discontinued in the cities of Boston, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Chicago, and St. Louis. These recommendations had the unanimous approval of the postmasters and supervisory officials of the post offices involved, and from the facts before me I am thoroughly convinced that the needs of the Postal Service are not such as to justify the expenditure involved for pneumatic tubes, as the act of 1902 requires. The rental paid for the tubes ($17,000 per annum per mile) is exorbitant, and more efficient service can be rendered by other means at less than one-fifth of the cost.

Notwithstanding the inefficiency and limited capacity of the tubes, the rental paid is greater per mile than the entire amounts paid the railroads per mile that enter New York City for carrying the one of the companies so admitted when appearing before your committee.

The contracts for this service will expire on March 4, 1917, and the department is not under the least moral obligation to renew these contracts or to continue the service further, and the representatives of one of the companies so admitted when appearing before your committee.

This pneumatic-tube service as a means of transportation is obsolete and has little or no merit. To continue its use would be an extravagance and waste of public money. The companies, realizing this, have no hope of securing a renewal of their contracts under the law of 1902, and are now endeavoring—although they admit the department is not under the slightest obligation to them to have the service extended—to continue the service by having Congress direct the Postmaster General to extend the contracts to June 30, 1918. If this amendment prevails and the Congress directs the extension of the contract without competition or regard to the merits of the service involved, it will be establishing a precedent, as there would be nothing to prevent any other contractor for any other branch of the service coming to Congress and asking that the same consideration be shown him.

That the pneumatic tubes as a means of transportation are obsolete can not be demonstrated better than by the fact that a large portion of the system in Boston, which was installed more than 15 years ago for the use of the merchants in transporting parcels, proved an absolute failure and was abandoned and then railroaded on the Postal Service.

Service.

The department is confronted with this situation—whether it shall continue the use of the service at an enormous rental and continue to impose on the public an inefficient service by delaying its mail when the mail can be expedited by other means which are efficient and which can save the Government $613,000 each year.

The Postmaster General is charged with the responsibility of administering the Postal Service in an efficient manner, and must stand the criticisms of the public when he falls to do so. For that reason he should not have an inefficient service imposed on him, and I trust that the amendment will not prevail and that the department will be permitted to undertake the responsibility for working the matter out in its own way under the law as Congress has written it and in the interest of the public and without an extravagant waste of money.

Very sincerely,

A. S. Burleson,

A. S. BURLESON, Postmaster General.

During the delivery of Mr. Vardaman's speech, Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President—Mr. VARDAMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the Senator allow me to make a motion with reference to the hour of meeting to-morrow?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Certainly; I will be very glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. PENROSE, Mr. President—

sippi yield?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have yielded for that purpose, but I was going to ask the Senate, if there is nothing else to engage the attention of the Senate to-night, to give the friends of the flood-control bill an opportunity to discuss that measure at a night session.

Mr. BRYAN. That would not interfere with this motion. Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will permit me, I earnestly hope the Senator will not insist on meeting at the hour of 10 o'clock. Experience has shown conclusively, I think, that we accomplish nothing by it except greatly inconveniencing those Senators who are conscientious enough to be here when the Senate meets. We wait for 30 or 40 minutes to get a quorum and just waste our time and the time of the Senate. Mr. BRYAN. It seems to me it is just a choice between meeting at an early hour to-morrow and having a night session, and I feel sure that we would not be likely to have a quorum to-night.

Mr. PENROSE. I am as sincerely anxious to expedite the legislative program as any member of the majority.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If this discussion is going to continue, I

Mr. PENROSE. I beg the Senator's pardon; I understood we were discussing in a kind of unanimous-consent way the suggestion of the Senator from Florida. If I am wrong, of course, I will yield. Mr. VARDAMAN.

I have no objection to yielding to the Senator at all. Go ahead.

Mr. PENROSE. That is what I thought, that I had the Senator's consent. I am as earnestly anxious as any Member of this body to expedite the legislative program and get every bill passed that properly ought to be considered in the limited time allowed, and let us adjourn. I view with abhorrence the mere possibility of an extra session unless something unexpected occurs to require it. But experience shows, and I think a little reflection will convince the Senator from Florida of the fact, that we accomplish nothing by trying to overwork the Senate. We are all busy men; we have committee meetings and other matters outside of our actual physical presence on this floor.

Mr. BRYAN. Would the Senator prefer to go on to-night rather than to meet earlier to-morrow?

Mr. PENROSE. I have no personal preference one way or the other, but I know you will not have a quorum here at 10 o'clock to morrow, and you may have to wait until nearly 11 o'clock to get a quorum. I doubt whether you would have a quorum to-night. My suggestion would be—

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator consent to have a night session to consider the flood-control bill?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; as far as I am concerned.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts

Mr. WEEKS I hope to have an opportunity to make some comments on this matter. I have a very important engagement to-night, and it would be extremely inconvenient for me to attend. I am willing that the Senate shall convene at 9 o'clock to-morrow, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should be glad to meet the Senator's convenience by confining the discussion to-night to the flood-control bill

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator will permit me just a moment, it was my idea that the Senate would stay in session until 6.30 and go on discussing this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Six o'clock. Mr. BRYAN. Or 6 o'clock. Mr. BRYAN. Or 6 o'clock. At any rate, it was not the intention to adjourn immediately; but while a number of Senators are here who will probably not remain much longer I wished to make the motion. If agreeable to the Senator from Mississippi, I will move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?
Mr. VARDAMAN. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.
Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator from Florida insists on overtaxing this body with work which I know they are not willing to respond to, I want to say that, while I do not want to make myself disagreeable, I shall insist on having a quorum during these extraordinary hours. My advice to the Senator would be to go along as he is doing. He is making good progress; we are drawing very nearly to the end of this bill; and he will gain just as much by having us here fresh and invigorated and attentive to the job instead of having the bell ringing every 15 minutes to summon laggards into the Chamber.

Mr. BRYAN. I hope the Senator will be here at 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. PENROSE. I will be here, and I want the rest here.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask the Chair to state the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida, that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

After the conclusion of Mr. Vardaman's speech, Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey obtained the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I desire to renew the point of order which I made against this provision, and I beg leave briefly to state the grounds upon which I make the point of order. I make it, first, upon the ground that the amendment is general legislation. The general legislation consists in the fact that it contains a mandatory provision requiring the Postmaster General to make a contract for pneumatic tubes. is no such law now upon the statute books, and the provision to that effect in this amendment is a new law of a general nature, changing the existing law. It is general legislation, Consequently, it comes within the prohibition of the rule of the Senate as to general appropriation bills.

Furthermore, the amendment provides for the establishment of a commission consisting of three members of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate, to be appointed by the Vice President, a similar committee on the part of the House of Representatives, and so forth, as to the constituent members of the commission.

It then proceeds to define the duties and powers of the commission. "to investigate the value of the pneumatic-tube service, their properties, their franchises, and other equipment, with a view to the purchase and operation of the same, or any portion thereof, by the Government, and to ascertain the cost and the terms upon which such purchase may be made." That has nothing whatever to do with the limitations upon the use of the money that is appropriated by this bill. It is a new subject matter, distinct in itself, and of a most general nature.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator from Washington will permit me right there, I think the failure of the other House to go any further than it did was because it desired to avoid the question which the Senator is now raising.

With this bill as the House passed it and with the present law unrepealed, the Postmaster General can not be compelled to make these contracts. It is only by this amendment, which repeals a general law, that this service can be continued. I myself think that the amendment is subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to be heard on the point of order, if I may be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator before he argues the matter that the Chair has changed his mind as to the announcement he made some time ago. Upon further consideration it seems to the Chair now that the point of order is good.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in the first place, this amendment contains two distinct propositions, and I ask that it be divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, that course will be followed.

Mr. LODGE. I think under the rules the division has to be

I now address myself to the first division of the amendment. The first division of the amendment relates wholly to the appropriation made. It has been held over and over again in both Houses that any provision limiting or directing or controlling in any way the expenditure of money appropriated is in order. think there can be no doubt about that general proposition. Of course, the proposition that we can not compel the Postmaster General to make a contract or prevent his prohibiting a contract being made is untenable. We can direct him to do anything we please. But my single point is that the first part of the amendment which is now divided, and therefore the first amendment really, relates solely to the control of the appropriation. The second part of the amendment relates to the creation of a commission and the appropriation of money, which, so far as I know, is not estimated for; but I think that it has been I hearings, running for some six or seven days. Mayor Mitchel, held in the past that provision for a commission concerned with the investigation of an expenditure of money appropriated in the bill is in order. However, I am not discussing that now. I am making my contention in favor of the first division of the amendment being in order on the ground that it relates solely to the control of the appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington make his point of order to the separate portions of the amendment as they now stand? Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first portion of the amendment contains no new proposition. The amount of compensation is not increased or the nature of the service changed. It does not propose new legislation. It seems to the Chair that that part of the amendment is clearly in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President

Mr. LODGE. I think the Chair ought to be allowed to rule without interruption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be glad to hear

Mr. POINDEXTER. It seems to me the Chair is fully capable of protecting himself in that regard, and that a Senator has a perfect right to make an inquiry of the Chair.

Mr. LODGE. Not in the midst of the Chair's ruling. I never before saw that done in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had about completed his ruling, and will be glad to hear from the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I only want to say a word in that connection, and that is that, in my view, the first half of this amendment contains a far more vital and substantial change of existing law than the second part. As the law now stands the Postmaster General is not required to make contracts for pneumatic-tube service; whereas, if this amendment is adopted, the Postmaster General has no discretion in the matter, but is required to make a contract for pneumatic-tube service. So that the whole question of the use or the abandonment of pneumatic tubes for transporting the mails-and that is the only question that is being argued here-depends upon the adoption or rejection of this amendment. It must be general legislation if that is the case, and it seems to me that it is the case and can not be denied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The House entered into that subject and provided for the continuance of the service now existing; and the House, having entered into that subject, under the rulings heretofore made in analogous cases by the Vice President, the amendment would be in order; that is, as to the first division of the amendment, which the Chair will be compelled to hold is in order.

The second division, creating a commission and authorizing the employment of experts and other assistants, is clearly general legislation, and the point of order will be sustained as to

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Chair to state definitely to me what part of the amendment he holds not to be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] asked to have the amendment divided. The first division is that down to and including the word "authorized," in line 20. To that part of the amendment the Chair overrules the point of order, but sustains it as to the remainder of the amendment, on the theory that the remainder is new legislation.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Chair holds, then, that the amendment is in order down to line 20?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I should like to ask what effect that ruling will have on the amendment as a whole? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment stands down to line 20.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and listened very diligently and industriously to the whole discussion of the pneumatic-tube service. I feel that I am doing my duty to the constituency I represent and to the United States just as zealously as is the Senator from Mississippi when I utterly disagree with his conclusions.

Pneumatic tubes are a very practical method of mail transportation. It is true the Postmaster General rebels against it; it is true that a commission, selected. I believe, by the Post Office authorities, made an investigation and submitted a report urging the discontinuance of the pneumatic-tube service; but before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads we had very extensive of the city of New York, appeared before us and declared in the most positive terms that it would be a step backward and a disaster to the mercantile and commercial interests of New York to have the pneumatic-tube system abandoned. We also had before us the postmaster of the city of New York, whose name was given, I think, by the Senator from New York, who declared in equally positive terms that the pneumatic tubes furnished a most efficient adjunct to New York's postal facili-ties, and that they would not know what to do without that service. We also had before us merchants ad libitum, prominent business men and commercial men, who, without reference to party or partisan considerations, gave testimony of the value of this service because of their great interest in the commerce and business of New York. We had before us the official who has charge of the traffic of the city, and asked him what would be the condition if the travel should be augmented in the congested sections of New York. He said the result would be nothing less than disastrous. The universal consensus of opinion was that we would not be doing our duty toward transportation in the city of New York and the mail facilities of that great community if we did not adhere to the present system. We were told of the frequent congestion on the railroads, of their being held up by snow and troubles caused by other conditions. I imagine that some investigations which have been made in the past were very cursorily made. They did not get together at all the citizens whose business interests were affected, and the public knew nothing of them.

Then there appeared before the committee representatives from the city of Boston. I do not know whether we had before us the mayor of that city, but we had members of the board of trade and of the chamber of commerce, the postmaster, and representatives of commercial and mercantile interests, who brought photographs showing the conditions of congestion in the narrow, crooked streets of that busy metropolis. We listened to them and listened to the merchants and to the officials connected with the service.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator yield to me for a question? Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly; I will be more generous than the Senator was with me.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not think the Senator could be. Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will listen to the Senator's

Mr. VARDAMAN. I merely want to ask the Senator if he intends to state what the postmaster of Boston, the postmasters of Chicago, of Philadelphia, and of St. Louis said about it. They are Government officials charged with a very serious duty.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have no reflection to make upon the Government officials. I have no reflection to make upon the Postmaster General nor this commission that the Postmaster General instigated or started; but I have just this to say, as a simple human being: Their judgment in practical matters is no better than mine and no better than that of the Senator from Mississippi. In the light of all the information that we have, as I say, from the city of New York and from Brooklyn-one citymy judgment was, and the judgment of the committee, was that it was wise to continue the tube system. We had before us these gentlemen from Boston, and their consensus of opinion was just in the same direction, that it would be a step backward and a dis-We had that opinion in Philadelphia as well. Of course Philadelphia is situated rather differently from some of the others. Their streets are straight and not as crooked as they are in Boston; but we have the testimony of the gentlemen connected with the Post Office Department that on Chestnut Street and some of those narrow streets which are only one-way-travel streets in the city of Philadelphia, anything like abandoning this pneumatic-tube service would add to the congestion, and be a danger and a disaster. We did have the matter of St. Louis, that the Senator mentioned. It is true, with reference to carrying it out to East St. Louis—I think that was the plea that was brought before us-I thought that was not so well substantiated. But in Chicago the testimony was universal that it would be a step backward, and that it would be unwise for us to abandon the tube system. It would multiply the congestion on the streets and would not facilitate the mail transportation in these great cities.

Now, of course, I heard a good deal of talk to the effect that there was a "job" in it. I feel that $17,000 n mile is too high a yearly rental for the Government to pay. I have always advocated, but particularly since this came to me I have felt, that the Government of the United States should own this system as much as they own the mailbags that carry the mail. They should own this transportation system, this underground system. I think that $17,000 per mile is too much; but our suggestionMr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Yersey yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire whether the company or companies-

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Two companies, I think, own all the tubes in these five cities.

Mr. THOMAS. Whether they pay to the cities anything for the use of the streets?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can not answer that question. They spoke about the cost of construction, which, I thought, was padded up too high. I do not know whether they pay for their franchise or not. They pay for their patents, I understand. I think I asked that of one of these gentlemen, but I got no satisfactory response.

Mr. THOMAS. They probably do not.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I think very likely they do not. But, as I say, I am in favor of the Government becoming the owner; and I think our proposition as presented by the committee is a laudable one, a straightforward one, and a businesslike proposition.

Of course, we can not take over these tubes in a trice. can not take them over by simply saying so. We must appraise their value and arrange for payment for them. In the meantime it would be a misfortune and a disaster to the mercantile and commercial public to have their mails stagnate. So we submit a proposition for a re-lease or a renewal of the contract for a time—I can not just recall the time specified in the billthat a renewal of the contract shall be made for a specified time, and that then a commission shall be appointed to appraise the value of the system, and let the Government take it over.

I tell you, Mr. President, you can hardly picture the situation in the city of Boston, or in the city of New York, or in the other congested cities where travel is simply intense and people are crowded in almost like sardines in a box; so that it is a crime, believe, for us to add to the congestion by adding new automobiles or means of transportation when we have a method underneath the surface that can transport this mail and is doing it. I asked every one—I think the Senator from Mississippi was present—whether it was doing efficient service now. The answer was, "Yes," in New York. "Is it doing efficient service?" I asked of the gentleman in St. Louis. "Yes." "Is it doing efficient service in Boston?" "Yes." "Is it doing efficient service in Boston?" "Yes."

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think the great congestion was in Boston.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It is,

Mr. VARDAMAN. Now, of course, the wagons employed to carry the mail are not so numerous as the wagons employed to deliver goods, and yet this Boston system that was designed to convey merchandise underground has been abandoned as a useless and expensive system, and it is remarkable that the business interests of Boston did not urge them to continue it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Whether it was abandoned because it was an expensive method or not, I do not know. In answer to the Senator from Colorado, who raised the question whether this system was not first built for the carriage of parcels, I will say that it was; but that does not militate against its usefulness. It was finally narrowed down to an 8-inch tube. I think it was originally from 10 to 20 inches. It has narrowed down to an 8-inch tube in Boston. That does not militate against it.

Why, sir, at this very day in London they are building tubes run by atmospheric pressure, for the purpose of carrying and transporting the mails, that are infinitely more than 8 inches in diameter. They are tremendous in size. It is not entirely confined to a small tube. Why, sir, it was my experience, I will say, to have ridden, many years ago—it makes me feel old when I think of it-for two blocks on Broadway in a tunnel that was known as the Beach pneumatic tube. That tunnel was 7 feet in diameter and had a car fitting in it with a tightly fitting piston, and I was driven two blocks backward and forward, to and fro, with a pneumatic system.

I do feel, Mr. President, that the abandonment of this service would be a step backward. I feel that we were entirely justified in making the report that emanated from the committee of which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] is chairman, and I hope the Senate of the United States will ratify this feature whatever else they may do.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I ask if it is the understanding of the Chair that an amendment proposed by a committee may be divided for the purpose of the application of the rule which forbids an amendment contemplating general legislation?

My understanding of the practice which has heretofore prevailed here, practically without exception, is that any amendment tendered is obnoxious to the rule if it contains in any part of it general legislation; and that for the reason that the amendment tendered must necessarily be considered as a whole, each part of the amendment being an inducement for the reporting of every other part of the amendment.

In this particular instance it may well be assumed that the second part of the amendment was put on to meet the objections of those who found the first part objectionable without it; in other words, that the committee would not have reported the first part of the amendment if the second part were not incorporated in the amendment. It occurs to me that it does violence to the action of the committee to cut from the amendment an essential part of it and proceed to the consideration of the remainder, which may not ever have received the concurrence of the committee.

But, Mr. President, without any regard to the particular features of this amendment I think I speak from a very accurate recollection of repeated rulings of the Chair to the effect that an amendment must be regarded as a whole, and that if in any of its features it makes provision for general legislation, the objection lies against the amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like to point out to my able friend from Montana the fallacy of his logic, as I see it.

The rule prohibits an attempt at general legislation upon an appropriation bill. Supposing a whole paragraph contained 10 lines of matter wholly appropriate, and it had a period, and then two lines beginning with a paragraph that really did amount to general legislation. The obnoxious part of the paragraph would be that part that violated the rule. That which was wholly permissible would be that part that did not violate the rule. The fact that a part that was wholly separate might violate the rule would not justify the denouncing of the whole paragraph and chapter, much of which in nowise violated the rule.

The able Senator from Montana-a most excellent lawyer, with renown in the country of the West where he livestoo often confronted the proposition that a paragraph in an act may be unconstitutional, but the whole act does not fall thereby; a provision in a law may be invalid, but the whole law in all its provisions does not fall thereby. Therefore, I think the real test must be that part of the law or that part of the provision which in itself is the violation, not all the remainder, which in no wise may be in itself, in its subject matter, or in its relation a violation.

Therefore, I take issue with the viewpoint of the able Senator from Montana in the legal deduction which he assumes to draw; and I. of course, favor, as I am naturally favorable to, the position taken by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE 1.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it makes no difference what the purpose of the committee was in offering the amendment, or what the purpose of a Senator is in offering an amendment, the right to ask for a division of the question under debate is an absolute right vested in any Senator. There is no limita-tion on the purpose; he may have it divided. I asked to have it divided before I discussed the point of order. The rule is

If the question in debate contains several propositions, any Senator may have the same divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sees no escape from Rule XVIII:

If the question in debate contains several propositions, any Senator may have the same divided.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Book of Precedents has almost innumerable instances where amendments have been divided. If there were any need of it, the Presiding Officer might turn to page 35 in the Book of Precedents and he would see that as far back as 1820, and again in 1859, this question was up; and in every instance it was ruled that if an amendment was properly divisible, the division could be demanded.

There is no question about it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from New Hampshire is not of the opinion that the Senator from Montana ever questioned the right to have an amendment divided for the purpose of voting on the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did understand that that was the Senator's position.

Mr. WALSH. I certainly did not intend to convey that idea. Of course, I recognize the right to have an amendment divided into various propositions and to have a vote taken upon the various propositions. That is not the question at all. The precedent that would be pertinent to the case would be a precedent which permitted the question to be divided in order to determine the application of the rule against general legislation. That was the question that I submitted.

Mr. GALLINGER. When the question was divided the rule would be invoked against each division of the question.

Mr. LODGE. It has been.

Mr. GALLINGER. And it has been.
Mr. WALSH. That is what has been done; but I have in mind a specific instance in which the Vice President, being in the chair, as my recollection is, ruled that it could not be done: that the amendment must be regarded as an entirety. It was an Indian appropriation bill, and the bill carried an appropriation in relation to the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, and then carried an extensive provision in relation to opening a portion of the Blackfeet Reservation. The point of order was raised by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis]. He pointed out that it was an appropriation which contained general legisla-That was conceded, and the whole amendment went out: and the bill went back to the committee, which reported back simply the appropriation feature.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not recall that instance. I am sorry if the Vice President did make a ruling of that kind, because it certainly is contrary to most of the precedents of the Senate during the time I have been in the service of the Senate. It may be that in that instance the point of order would lie against both provisions of the bill. I do not know the circumstances

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I remember that the decision was made by the Chair on the Post Office appropriation bill last year that you had to take the whole amendment or reject it; that it all had to stand or fall together; but it was not the Vice President who made that ruling. It was the Senator from [Laughter.] Montana.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest that if the Senate is to adjourn at 6 o'clock, it might be a good plan to let this matter go over until to-morrow, and then the Vice President will be here.

Mr. WEEKS. In what shape is it? Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I want to say one word more, and then I shall be through.

I do not believe the second part or any part of this amendment is subject to a point of order. The proviso is a limitation upon the appropriation. It seems to me it is a stretch of language to say that Congress can not create a commission merely to report back to Congress, and call that general legislation in the sense meant by the rule.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have such great respect for the Senator's knowledge of parliamentary law that I dislike to imperil my own reputation by differing from him, but I want to ask the Senator if the law providing that the Postmaster General shall have this investigation made and the result of it reported before another contract shall be made is in force to-day?

Mr. BRYAN. No; the contract is about to expire, or has expired once, and my recollection is that Congress last year extended it for a few months. That is not the point covered in this amendment, however. The House provision appropriates the money. The Senate amendment makes the same appropriation, but provides that the Postmaster General shall continue existing contracts.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator think that if the Senate had concurred in the House provision the Postmaster General under that act would have been compelled to renew the con-

Mr. BRYAN. Undoubtedly the Postmaster General would have been required to pay for the pneumatic-tube service in these cities under the House language.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It does not repeal the existing law, which says that he shall do certain things before he can make the

Mr. BRYAN. No; but the Senator confuses the House rule with the Senate rule. In the House you can not change existing law. That is their rule. Our rule says nothing about existing law.

Mr. LODGE. Nothing whatever. Mr. BRYAN. The test here is whether or not it is general legislation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

Mr. VARDAMAN. But the Senator does not, perhaps, under-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator The Senator from Florida has the floor. vield?

Mr. BRYAN. I only rose to answer a question.
Mr. VARDAMAN. If I may be permitted to do so, I wanted to get the Senator's opinion about that. The idea which I want to bring out is the fact that there is a law now upon the statute book under which the Postmaster General acted in making this investigation. That law requires him to make this investigation before any contract could be renewed.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes. That commission has expired, however. Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator thinks that that law is exhausted, does he?

Mr. BRYAN. The commission has made its report.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I know it is the opinion of men who have given thought to this question in the House that the provision in that bill would not compel the Postmaster General to act if the Senate agreed with the House and adopted the House provision. Now, in order to do that you have gone ahead and repealed a general law, an existing law, by amendment onto an appropriation bill.

Mr. BRYAN. No.
Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. The law directed the commission to report a year ago last December and the time expired. The report was not sent in in conformity with law. It dragged along and dragged along and nothing was done. Congress made another appropriation and the Postmaster General saw fit not to expend it.

Mr. BRYAN. What the Senator from Mississippi has in mind is this: The House made an appropriation placing it within the power of the Postmaster General not to expend the money. The amendment provides that he shall expend the money by continuing this service for a year.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I wish to understand the parliamentary situation. I understand that the Senator from Washington has appealed from the decision of the Chair. If the Senate adjourns now, would that open up this whole question in the Senate to-morrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did understand that an appeal was taken, so that it will open up the whole ques-

Mr. POINDEXTER. An appeal was taken, and one purpose I had in rising was in order to call attention to it so that there would be no uncertainty about it.

In this connection, as it will go over until to-morrow, I should like to say, in order that it may be in the RECORD in the morning when the matter comes up as the basis of the point of order which I have made and of the appeal, that the appeal is only taken from that portion of the Chair's ruling which overruled the point of order as to that portion of the amendment on page 15, from line 12 down to and including the word "authorized" in line 20. The Postmaster General or the First Assistant Postmaster General filed a statement here from which the Senator from Mississippi has read. I do not care to en-cumber the Record by a mere repetition of it, but he says if this amendment is adopted it will compel the expenditure by the Government of $613,000, which would do the Government no good whatever. If the amendment is not adopted, not a dollar of that amount will have to be expended. In other words, here is a proposed law compelling contracts by the Government which will cost the Government nearly three-quarters of a million dol-lars and establishing a service which, without the adoption of the amendment, would not exist.

In view of this it is clearly general legislation. The vital and substantial thing in this whole controversy is about what is involved and provided for in this amendment, and in the first part of the amendment, the point of order against which was overruled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to say that the Chair agrees with the Senator that it is general legislation, but the House entered on that part of the subject, and consequently the Senate can enlarge it and offer such amendments as may be desired. Upon that part of the amendment the Chair ruled in conformity with what the Chair understands has heretofore been held on that subject by the Vice President.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I appreciate the theory upon which the Chair has ruled, and if the facts in the case were as the Chair construes them to be in this provision, I would agree with the Chair, for I think that is a correct principle. But I differ with the construction which the Chair places upon the House provision. There is nothing whatever in the House provision establishing this pneumatic-tube service for the year ending June 30, 1918. There is not a word authorizing or attempting to authorize the establishment of any such service. There is no provision in regard to it. It is entirely new matter inserted in the Senate committee amendment. The appropriation of money for pneumatic-tube service by the House, as the House provision stood, could be expended and used by the Postmaster General for that purpose or not, as he saw fit. It was a mere appropriation of money under the existing law. The portion of the amendment to which I am addressing myself takes out of the discretion of the Postmaster General the matter of establishing this pneumatic service and establishes it by law. Consequently it is new

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. LEWIS. Had we not better adjourn?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate adjourn.
Mr. POINDEXTER. The point of no quorum has been made,

but I withdraw it.

Mr. LODGE. That does not lie against a motion to adjourn.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was made first.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 14, 1917, at 10 o'clock a. m.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How long will it take?

Mr. ADAMSON. Only a moment.

Mr. MANN. Is that a conference report on the dam bill? Mr. ADAMSON. Yes. Mr. MANN. There might be quite a discussion of the bill in the House.

Mr. ADAMSON. I should think not. If any discussion comes would be on any action the Senate might take afterwards. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (8, 3331) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. Mann] requests that I let it go over temporarily until the naval bill is disposed of. If I can be recognized then, I will agree to that,

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 457. An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge in the northern and southern judicial districts in the State of Mississippi, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 19359, the Agricultural appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Agricultural appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection? The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19359) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I wish to direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to amendment No. 92, which seeks to amend section 8 of the nursery ment as incorporated in the bill would grant authority to the Secretary of Agriculture to exclude all stone or quarry products, or any other article of any character whatsoever, from interstate shipment in case he deemed that the admission of them would tend to disseminate insect infestation. I think that is a very important amendment, and to confer such an autherity on the Secretary of Agriculture without it having ever been given any consideration in the House would not be in consonance with good legislation, and I think before we allow this bill to go to conference we should have some understanding as to the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I realize this is a very important amendment, and I agree with him and the House now that if the gentleman from Wisconsin or any other Member feels we ought to have a separate vote on it before final agreement, I shall be glad to give the House the opportunity to so vote.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the House should be given the privilege of considering such a matter before agreeing to it in conference. The subject matter has never been considered in the House. It is something that should not be considered alone by the conferees.

Mr. LEVER. I agree with the gentleman, and I will say that a separate vote will be asked on the proposition unless it is

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Lever]. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and announces the following conferees: Mr. LEVER, Mr. LEE, and Mr. HAUGEN.

AMENDMENT TO GENERAL DAM ACT (8, 3331).

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] withdraws his objection, and I would like to call the conference report up now.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1453).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3331) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce, having met, after full and free conference hereby report to their respective Houses that it is impossible for the managers on the part of the respective Houses to agree upon any report that would secure legislation in the premises.

They find themselves at such variance on the provisions of the Senate act and the House amendment thereto that they have agreed on a general disagreement, and hereby report to the Senate and House that they can not reach any agreement upon the Senate act and the House amendment thereto under consideration.

W. C. ADAMSON, T. W. SIMS, John J. Esch, Managers on the part of the House.

JNO. K. SHIELDS, J. H. BANKHEAD, KNUTE NELSON, Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Mr. ESCH.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ESCH. Is it in order to adopt the conference report where there is a full disagreement? I base my inquiry on a precedent, No. 6562, volume 5, of Hinds' Precedents.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the precedent.

The precedent may be misinterpreted by myself, Mr. ESCH. but it arose this way: Mr. Otjen, of Wisconsin, a colleague of mine, raised it in connection with certain claims under the Bowman Act, stating that after a full and free conference they had been unable to agree. The report having been read, Mr. Otjen moved that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Mr. Richardson, of Tennessee, made the point of order that the report of the committee should be adopted first. Mr. Reed was Speaker at the time and stated that there was no legislation in the conference report, and therefore there was nothing to act upon.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think it would discharge the conferees at least.

The SPEAKER. Section 6562 of Hinds' Precedents shows that Speaker Reed said:

The Chair hardly sees how the House can agree to a report in which nothing is done. * * The Chair will have the precedents examined, but his impression is that there is nothing to agree to. * * * There is no legislation in it.

Mr. ADAMSON. It would be easy for the House to agree at the conferees had done nothing. Then they could be disthat the conferees had done nothing.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin was that the House further insist. The Chair would think that it was the intention of the House to discharge the conferees. It would be in order to agree to the conference report if they want to hang it up here so as to take it up again.

Mr. ADAMSON. So far as we know, we are done with it. Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, what harm can there be by leaving the matter in statu quo?

Mr. ADAMSON. The papers could not be sent back unless the conference report is adopted.

Mr. GARNER. Unless it is wearing the gentleman from Georgia or pressing upon him very hard, this duty of being a conferee, the matter could remain just as it is until the end of the session,

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Would it be in order to move that the report of the conferees be accepted and the conferees discharged?

Mr. ADAMSON. I think the adoption of the report would

The SPEAKER. If this conference report is agreed to, these conferees are automatically discharged. These papers belong to

Mr. MANN. Then, the papers could not be sent back to the

The SPEAKER. Yes. The Chair believes it is in order to act on this conference report. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] to agree to the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Adamson, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

MUNICIPALLY OWNED INTERSTATE RAILWAYS.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 455, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is that one of the bills that came over this morning?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; it came over this morning. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 455, with Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 455) entitled "An act to define the rights and privileges of the trustees of municipally owned interstate railways, and construing the act to regulate commerce with reference thereto.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by printing an article in Collier's Weekly, entitled "What happened in California."

Mr. MANN. Entitled what?

Mr. RANDALL. "What happened in California." The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an article from Collier's entitled "What happened in California. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota, Mr. McARTHUR, and Mr. BARN-

HART reserved the right to object

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege affecting the honor and dignity of this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania rises to a question of high privilege, which he will state.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the matter to which I desire to direct the attention of the House is of such importance that I would like to have a full attendance of the Members, but in order to save time for the passage of a great preparedness bill I shall not insist upon the point of no quorum at this time. [Applause.] It is patent to anyone who reads the newspaper

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BURNETT. Has the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL] been disposed of? I do not think the gentleman wants to interfere with him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to ob-

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman is going to reserve the right and there is going to be debate, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] has the floor on a question of high privilege.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, as a prelude to the question of privilege which I am about to present, I wish to say it is apparent to anyone who reads the daily newspapers that war issue is being very much befogged by reports from London and that there has been a wonderful change in editorial sentiment in certain papers during the last six months.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that the first thing to do is to state the question of privilege, if any, that he has. The Chair will then pass upon that first.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, on February 9 the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Callaway] asked unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record, which consent was granted by the House. He did not read the remarks, and they were not read to the House. They were buried under leave in the Comgressional Record. I question whether a single newspaper in the United States has taken cognizance of the remarks of the gentleman from Texas. This, Mr. Speaker, is what the gentleman from Texas printed in the Record, and it constitutes, as I believe, a question of the highest privilege, involving the honor of the House:

"In March, 1915, the J. P. Morgan interests, the steel, ship-building, and powder interests, and their subsidiary organizations, got together 12 men high up in the newspaper world and employed them to select the most influential newspapers in the United States and sufficient number of them to control generally the policy of the daily press of the United States.

These 12 men worked the problem out by selecting 179 newspapers, and then began, by an elimination process, to retain only those necessary for the purpose of controlling the general policy of the daily press throughout the country. They found it was only necessary to purchase the control of 20 of the greatest papers. The 25 papers were agreed upon; emissaries were sent to purchase the policy, national and international, of these papers; an agreement was reached; the policy of the papers was bought, to be paid for by the month; an editor was furnished for each paper to properly supervise and edit information regarding the questions of preparedness, militarism, financial policies, and other things of national and international nature considered vital to the interests of the purchasers.

"This contract is in existence at the present time, and it accounts for the news columns of the daily press of the country being filled with all sorts of preparedness arguments and misrepresentations as to the present condition of the United States Army and Navy, and the possibility and probability of the United States being attacked by foreign foes.

"This policy also included the suppression of everything in opposition to the wishes of the interests served. The effectiveness of this scheme has been conclusively demonstrated by the character of stuff carried in the daily press throughout the country since March, 1915. They have resorted to anything necessary to commercialize public sentiment and sandbag the National Congress into making extravagant and wasteful appropriations for the Army and Navy under the false pretense that it was necessary. Their stock argument is that it is 'patriotism.' They are playing on every prejudice and passion of the American people." American people.'

Here is where the question of privilege comes in.

And sandbag the National Congress into making extravagant and wasteful appropriations for the Army and Navy under the false pretense that it was necessary. Their stock argument is "patriotism." They are playing on every prejudice and passion of the American

That. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit, constitutes a question of privilege affecting the honor of the House. If we are being "sandbagged" by prejudice or through false commercialistic reports, it is injurious to the House and the country.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. GARNER. To make the point of order that the question suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not a question of high privilege under the rules of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the Speaker will bear with me, I think I can connect this up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman, is he rising to a question of personal privilege or a question of the highest privilege of the House?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have no personal interest except the welfare of my country. I rise—

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman is rising to a privilege of the House, he should introduce a resolution or proposition.

I was about to suggest-Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest that the gentleman ask unanimous consent to use 5 or 10 minutes. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I shall be glad to do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for five minutes

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent for 10 minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question before he begins?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.
Mr. SLAYDEN, Will the gentleman explain what he understands the word "sandbag" to mean in that connection?
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It means to drive the Congress into a corner on this war question; to make us believe we are in a state of war.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Are not the editorial arguments intended to influence Congress?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think so.
Mr. SLAYDEN. That is what it means.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, Unquestionably; and in further answer to the question of the gentleman I will read one article. I can not read many. I will let most of them stand aside, because I can not read them in 10 minutes; but sufficient for the present is an article from the New York Sun of Sunday.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not yield. The headlines are these—and it is the headlines that are influencing the Britain chafes over United States delay.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER again rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not. I regret it, but I do not unless I can get more time. These headlines continue: What constitutes an overt act? London public and press are asking.

And then:

Americans are cheered.

In London-remember, this is from London!

Bands play "Hail Columbia," but elation is changing to impatience. London, gentlemen, seems to be "impatient" because the United States is not going into war. The spirit of London as translated by these American newspapers is that the United Sates unduly hesitates to join Great Britain in the war.

I will not go on with these editorials, which are urging the President and Congress to declare war. Some of them are so vicious as to suggest a lack of the American spirit of justice and fair play. Every man who reads the newspapers knows the tone and sentiment of these editorials. I will be content with that for the present.

But here is something more to the point than a mere expression of opinion. Here is a three-column advertisement in one of the great newspapers, and I understand it has gone into all the great newspapers of the country to influence public sentiment. Under display headlines in large type it reads:

To the American people:
Germany is at war with the United States. The repudiation of past pledges and the threat to destroy our ships and citizens without warning constituted a virtual declaration of war.

Who says this? The President of the United States? The Congress of the United States, which is the only power under the Constitution that can declare war? No! Who is it, then, that makes this bold declaration to the common people of this land that we are now at war with Germany? I have not time to read the whole article, but will insert it in the RECORD. It continues:

It is no longer a question whether there shall be war with Germany. There is war with Germany.

This is underscored. Then the declaration continues:

The only question is whether our Government shall submit at Germany's dictation to the outrages of her submarine warfare, or whether it shall forcibly defend American property.

There is no discussion here, mark you, of the right of American ships to go through an English blockade, no question of "the freedom of the seas," so far as Great Britain's domination of the seas is concerned. This declaration is a declaration that we are "at war with Germany"; it implies that we must join the allies to beat Germany. I regret I can not read it all, for several prominent names are attached to this pronunciamento. There are quotations from Charles W. Eliot and Nicholas Murray Butler. Let them go for what they are worth. These men are publicists and are giving information almost daily about the manner in which we should govern ourselves.

But this advertisement, paid for by somebody, continues:

President Wilson and the Congress desire assurances of the country's backing before declaring war.

Who says President Wilson and the Congress are seeking assurances of somebody's backing before they declare war? Let us see:

Telegraph the President and your Congressman, pledging to them your loyal support in immediate and vigorous action for the defense of the American rights and American honor, and urging formal recognition of the state of war already existing between Germany and the United States.

This remarkable war message is signed by the "American Rights League" and certain individuals. Fortunately those who sign it do not hide themselves under cover of the "American Rights League"; they attach their names to it; to this voluntary, this diabolical declaration of war against a foreign country before the President of the United States or the Congress of the United States have acted upon a matter of such grave importance to the masses of our people.

Those whose names are appended to this paper include Dr. Lyman Abbot, of New York, and Rev. Randolph H. McKim, pastor of a church in Washington, two members of the profession which is supposed to teach the doctrine of "Peace on Earth."

God save the mark! If our good Lord and Savior were to come upon this earth to-day and be shown this hasty and bitter demand for war by one of His own ministers, or one professing to be a Christian minister, I question whether the Rev. Randolph McKim would stay in his pulpit in Washington a single hour. [Applause.]

I can not go on with this much further; in 10 minutes I am unable to cover the main subject. I wish to observe, however, that I am neither pro-German, as some of the newspapers have recently insisted, nor am I pro-ally. I am, as this Congress ought to be, pro-American [applause], and nothing else. If it has come to that point where we must forget the history of this Nation, must obliterate the record we have made to attain our present position, or if we are to forget that once we severed the yoke that bound us and must put that yoke again upon our necks, I want to leave these congressional halls forever.

I have in my hand a little of the information that this House should have to better understand this situation. I shall refer to it, hoping that somebody upon the other side will introduce a resolution in order that we may get additional information about the influences that are said to be doctoring the newspaper sentiment of the United States in the interest of one of the great belligerents, trying to drag us into war that we may "pull their chestnuts out of the fire." And that I may not be misunderstood, let me say that I want no dictation from the Kaiser any more than I want it from Lloyd-George. I want no dictation from Lord Northcliffe, the head of the great newspaper fraternity of Great Britain, with certain alliances in the United States, any more than I would accept it from Von Hindenberg. [Applause.] Let it be understood that I want to be free as an American Representative—as I assume all of us do—to help rule this country as our country and its people ought to be ruled, free from any domination in the whole world, and free from any mercenaries, whether they be in the pulpit or in the banking house. [Applause.]

Among the numerous letters that have come to me in the last few days, Mr. Speaker, was one inclosing this interesting message from Sir Gilbert Parker. Sir Gilbert, as you know, is a great writer; he is a novelist and an able editorial director. Sir Gilbert Parker has been shipping volume after volume into the United States to show how friendly Great Britain is with this country and how "blood is thicker than water." The argument has been that we ought to join forces with Great Britain to down Germany and the other nations with which it is in conflict. In this circular Right Hon. Sir Gilbert Parker, who is now in America and has recently visited the Capital, says

"As Sir Gilbert Parker is sailing for America on Saturday, January 13, he will be unable to deal with any correspondence until further notice. He has, however, made arrangements for pamphlets to be sent out during his absence. He begs to thank his many correspondents for their kindness and courtesy during the past two years and a half, and he hopes to have the pleasure of meeting many of them while in the United States.

"20 Carlton House Terrace, London, S. W., England."

My friends in Congress, my pro-American friends who still believe in Washington's Farewell Address against entangling alliances, my native American friends who feel that this is a country worth fighting for and worth having and worth holding, I wish to give you a word of caution about every insidious story that is cabled from the other side of the water to provoke your passions. Able writers are telling you and your constituents to get into this struggle, but you want to be sure of your ground—sure that you are not serving some selfish purpose of men or nations—before you break up the peace of the United States and plunge us into this bloody controversy.

I admit we have a certain responsibility. We have provided in the interest of the great shippers a War-Risk Bureau, which is guaranteeing safe conduct to cargoes; cargoes carrying what? is guaranteeing safe conduct to cargoes; cargoes carrying what? These little children that are so often discussed as being destroyed at sea? Are we guaranteeing their safe passage? No; with a $5,000,000 fund from our Treasury we are guaranteeing the safe passage of munitions ships that are sent across the matter part to break a British blockade not to establish our water, not to break a British blockade, not to establish our right to trade with Germany or any neutral country. No; we are doing this to maintain our trade with only some of the belligerents. The maintenance of that trade with a single country is the compelling reason with these warlike editorial writers. We have a fine opportunity for trade in South America, but the seas are not wholly free to us; our ships have to be O. K'd by one of the great powers before American business can be done. We can not deal with any neutral nation without the consent of one of the great powers which assumes to be "mistress of the seas." But we have this Government war-risk insurance chiefly, I fear, for the sake of those who are commercially interested in the conduct of war, and with the permission and approval of one of the great nations.

And then, again, there is our financial interest. We have taken approximately $2,000,000,000 of bonds of foreign powers.

They are scattered amongst our investors, and unless the war is successful, unless some of these editorial writers can convince last year.

us that "blood is thicker than water," so that we shall send our boys into this war, the money we have invested in these foreign securities may be lost. Great God! Have we come to this in the United States, here in the Hall of our fathers, the Hall in which we determined the fate of America, the Hall in which we have fought out our great battles, the Hall in which we have resisted foreign aggression, the Hall in which we have dared to stand for our rights from colonial days-has it come to this, that because we are told by a great power or by great newspapers that money is at stake we must go in and fight a foreign war or lose it all? Shall we for this forget our altars and our firesides, and shall all of the hallowed and patriotic inspirations of our country stand for naught? [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I hope some Democrat will introduce a resolution to investigate these charges of pernicious editorial activity to stir up war and bloodshed as they were presented in the RECORD by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Callaway]. If that be not done, though the session be short, I shall introduce such a resolution myself, let the chips fall where they may. plause.] It is due to honest and patriotic journalism in the United States.

PLATTSBURG CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a telegram from the Plattsburg Chamber f Commerce, indorsing the action of the President of the United States in severing diplomatic relations with Germany.

The SPEAKER. 'The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The telegram referred to is as follows:

Hon. Bertrand H. Snell.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The Platisburg Chamber of Commerce in a resolution, copy of which was to-day transmitted to President Wilson, indorse the President's action in severing diplomatic relations with Germany, and we express the desire to aid in every way possible in carrying out whatever action the President may deem wise. We are distinctly and unanimously opposed to any attempt being made to influence the President or to hamper him in any way in his commendable efforts to maintain the honor of the United States and the recognized principles of international law.

PLATTSBURG CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,

W. B. JAQUES, President.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20632, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. Page of North Carolina in the chair,

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy shall build any of the vessels herein appropriated for in such navy yards as he may designate should it reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents thereof, bidding for the construction of any of said vessels have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding, the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said vessels: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to build any of the vessels herein authorized in such navy yards as he may designate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order. I do not quite understand the purpose of the proviso to this paragraph. The paragraph first provides that the Secretary shall build any of the vessels herein appropriated for in such yards as he may designate should it reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents thereof, and so forth, have entered into any combination. Then the proviso is that the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to build any of the vessels authorized in the bill in such navy yards as he may designate. We make an appropriation for all of the vessels, do we not?

Mr. PADGETT. Under the three-year program we are building a definite number of ships. For instance, 10 battleships were authorized. Last year we appropriated for 4 of the 10, and this year for 3.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand this part of it. Do not we appropriate in this bill for all of the vessels which are authorized in the bill?

Mr. PADGETT. We appropriate not for all that are authorized, but we appropriate for a part of what were authorized

Mr. MANN. Do we not appropriate in this bill for a part of the vessels authorized in the bill?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. MANN. As I understand, we make some appropriation in this bill for all of the vessels that are authorized.

Mr. PADGETT. No. Let me explain to the gentleman. the bill of last year we authorized 10 battleships, 6 battle cruisers, 10 scout cruisers, 20 destroyers, and 58 submarines

Mr. MANN. And we appropriate for all of those in this bill? Mr. PADGETT. When we make the appropriation it will be in this bill, but we have not yet made the appropriations for all

Mr. MANN. No; but we are appropriating in this bill some money for each of those vessels?

Mr. PADGETT. No; not for all of them. We appropriated last year for 4 of the 10 battleships, and did not make any appropriation for 6. This year the appropriations are made for three additional battleships, leaving three battleships that we authorized last year that are not yet appropriated for.

Mr. MANN. I do not get it; but this is perfectly plain: If we authorized vessels last year and they are not appropriated for this year, this bill does not authorize them to be constructed in navy yards.

Mr. PADGETT. They are not to be constructed at all; that is, 3 of the 10 battleships which we authorized are not yet to be constructed.

Mr. MANN. What is the difference in this paragraph between the proviso and the main paragraph?

Mr. PADGETT. There is very little, I will say to the gentle-man, and this is the language that has been carried year after The proviso is very little different from the other, except that it says the Secretary is authorized to build any of the vessels authorized in such navy yards as he may designate. The first part of it provides that he shall build any of the vessels authorized in such navy yards as he may designate should it reasonably appear that persons, firms, or corporations bidding for the construction have entered into any combination. The first part of it is to provide against combinations and the last part of it authorizes him to build them in any navy yard, regardless of combination.

Mr. MANN. Suppose the shipbuilding yards should combine so that only one yard should bid on any one ship, but that each of them would bid on a ship and bid at a lower price than the Government could construct the ship for in the navy yards. Under this, then, the Secretary would still have to construct them in the navy yards.

Mr. PADGETT. He may build them in the navy yards, but he is not directed to. It is in his discretion.

Mr. MANN. I should say that he is directed to.

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. MANN. That is what the bill says. Suppose there are three navy yards and each one of them bids on a ship.

Mr. PADGETT. Does the gentleman mean private contracting yards? When the gentleman says "navy yards" I understand him to refer to Government yards, and when he says "shipyards" I understand him to refer to private shipbuilding companies.

Very well. Say three shipbuilding yards bid, and each one bids on a ship by combination, but each one bids at a lower price than the Government car construct the ship in a Government navy yard, then the Government would still have to construct the ship in the navy yard under this provision.

Mr. PADGETT. That is not the interpretation that has been given it. If private contractors bid lower than the navy yards can build them for, they get the contract.

Mr. MANN. The paragraph says:

Or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition.

These men may combine and each one bid for a ship. These different shipyards probably can not each build three ships, You advertise for the construction of three ships, and each private yard agrees to bid on one ship and bid at a lower price than the Government constructs them. Under this language you could not construct a ship. This is new language in the law.

Mr. PADGETT. No; this has been in the law all the time; we have not changed a word of it.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. This was in the last bill and in the bill before, word for word.

Mr. PADGETT. It has been in every bill for a number of

It is not new language.

Mr. MANN. I was under the impression that it was new language. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the event the Secretary of the Navy is unable to secure from the private shipbailders contracts for the expeditious construction of the ships heretofore authorized at a fair and reasonable price, the sum of $12,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to enable the Secretary of the Navy to equip the navy yards with suitable and necessary machinery, implements, building ways, and equipment for the construction of such of said vessels as may be assigned to navy yards for construction.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. In view of the amendment agreed to yesterday authorizing the President in war time or in time of emergency to commandeer the shipyards and have the ships built at private yards at a price to be agreed upon, and if that can not be agreed upon, then to be submitted to the Court of Claims for decision, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether he thinks it is necessary to now go ahead with the policy of putting all the shipyards in a condition to make them capable of building all kinds of naval ships?

Mr. PADGETT. I think we need them to carry out the program that they have authorized independent of the legislation that was authorized yesterday by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STAFFORD. Last year we appropriated $6,000,000 for the equipment of navy yards, giving preference, as far as the battleship program is concerned, to New York, Philadelphia, Mare Island, and Norfolk. Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was this $6,000,000 inadequate for the purpose named?

Mr. PADGETT, Yes. Mr. STAFFORD, O Or is it intended by this to equip other yards?

Mr. PADGETT. No; but the $6,000,000 was inadequate for the purpose for which this appropriation was made. This is to be added to the appropriation to carry out the purposes expressed in that appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand the $6,000,000 was only to be for two yards—New York and Mare Island—but in the Senate they included the other yards.

Mr. PADGETT. No; the Senate did not extend the number. The House provision carried the same yards designated as the law finally was agreed upon.

Mr. STAFFORD. I now recall that the gentleman is correct, the committee only recommended two, but in the Committee of the Whole they extended it to others. Is it the plan to confine this appropriation of $12,000,000 to the equipment of those yards?

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary has stated that it was his idea to have the yards at New York, Philadelphia, Mare Island, and Norfolk equipped for capital ships, battleships, and battle cruisers; the yard at Bremerton, Seattle, for the construction of ships of twelve or fifteen thousand tons displacement, not capital ships, and then the other yards mentioned, for instance, Portsmouth, N. H., and Charleston, S. C., for the construction of small craft like submarines and gunboats.

Mr. STAFFORD. How far has the department proceeded with the authorization for equipment of yards?

Mr. PADGETT. A few days ago the Senate passed a resolution calling upon the Secretary to furnish that information, and I have the reply of the Secretary, which I will read if the gentleman desires. The Secretary says:

gentleman desires. The Secretary says:

No fixed apportionment or distribution of the entire $6,000,000 appropriation has been made to these various yards, but it has been decided to fit up the Philadelphia yard for battle-cruiser construction, and the cost will be in the neighborhood of $3,000,000; the Norfolk yard for dreadnaught construction, to cost about $1,250,000; the Puget Sound yard for auxiliary ships of 12,000 tons, to cost about $750,000; the Charleston yard for gunboats and destroyers, to cost about $300,000; the Boston yard is already equipped to build a ship of 12,000 tons, and it will require $75,000 to extend ways and other improvements; and the Portsmouth yard for the construction of submarines, to cost about $200,000.

These plans are dependent upon the extent of the improvement of the various yards for shipbuilding and it may be necessary to recast and alter some of the authorizations already made, the general plan at present being tentative and subject to change in case my recommendations for an additional appropriation of $12,000,000, for fitting the navy yards for shipbuilding, is approved by Congress.

Then he goes on to speak about various other yards

Then he goes on to speak about various other yards.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that nothing has been done as to the six million authorization.

Mr. PADGETT. Nothing in a definite and conclusive way. In a tentative way he has made an apportionment and signified this purpose or intention of using it. But he has not concluded it in such a way as not being subject to change.

Mr. STAFFORD. Everything is in the air so far as the $6,000,000 authorization is concerned.

Mr. PADGETT. As I say, nothing is definitely concluded. Mr. STAFFORD. But there are two yards we are going ahead equipping for battleship construction, the New York and the Mare Island yards.

Mr. PADGETT. That is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was under an authorization some time prior in an amendment to a prior bill.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and supplemented by this $6,000,000. Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order. Last year we appropriated $6,000,000 and authorized the extension of four navy yards for the construction of capital ships. Is it still the intention to provide these navy yards with facilities for the construction of capital ships?

Mr. PADGETT. The confusion is so great that I can not hear the gentleman. It is not the fault of the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Last year we appropriated $6,000,000 and authorized four navy yards to be equipped for the construction of capital ships

In the discretion of the Secretary; yes, sir. Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. MANN. We authorized them?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; we authorized them. Mr. MANN. Is it the intention now to equip those four navy yards for the construction of capital ships?

Mr. PADGETT. No; it is not so indicated by the Secretary in this letter. We authorized six, if I remember.

Mr. MANN. No; we authorized four, namely, Boston, Nor-

Mr. PADGETT. Well, he does not purpose to equip Boston and Puget Sound for the construction of ships of a capital character, but, as stated in this letter, of about 12,000 or 15,000 displacement.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know how much of this $12,000,000 is to be expended in those two navy yards, Philadelphia and Norfolk, in order to equip them for the construction of capital ships?

Mr. PADGETT. A good part of it would be, but there is no definite plan or division of the amount.

Mr. MANN. Has there been any estimate made of what it will cost? We were told last year that $6,000,000 would do the

Mr. PADGETT. No. The gentleman is a little mistaken in that

Mr. MANN. Well, we got the impression—I did, anyhow—that $6,000,000 would do the business.

Mr. PADGETT. That $6,000,000 last year originated with myself after the House put a provision on the bill for a 20 per cent bonus. It occurred to me that if we had a 20 per cent bonus for speed or for construction there might be a combination that would leave the Government powerless to defend itself, and without consulting the Navy Department or anyone else, I offered the amendment on my own initiative and responsibility, naming $6,000,000 to enable the department to equip the yards so as to protect them against any combination formed, if I may use the word, to gobble up the 20 per cent premium or bonus. That originated with myself.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman last year guessed $6,000,000?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And the guess was not a good one. And the gentleman is guessing $12,000,000 more, which makes $18,000,000. Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Navy sent down a letter with reference to the $12,000,000, which is printed in the hearings on page 925.

Mr. MANN. Very well. How much of that $12,000,000 is to be used in equipping those yards for the construction of capital ships? If the Secretary gave any information on the subject, I would be glad to have it. If he did not give any information on the subject, it is still just a wild guess.

Mr. PADGETT. I am just looking to see

Mr. MANN. It seems to me when we are appropriating $18,000,000—first a guess of $6,000,000 and then a guess of $12,000,000 more—it is only fair that we have some information and estimate as to what the cost will be. Of course, a few million dollars is nothing to a rich gentleman, but it would be a good deal to me.

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Navy in his letter on the $12,000,000 enters into a discussion of the cost and the situation of construction in the private yards. In the hearings before the committee Admiral Harris, Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, indicated to the committee that the $12,-000,000, added to the $6,000,000 heretofore appropriated, would equip the yards intended for capital-ship construction and the smaller yards for the smaller construction.

Mr. MANN. Well, how much of it goes to the equipment of yards for the construction of capital ships?

Mr. PADGETT. I can not give it to you, because I do not remember his apportionments. If I can find it here, I will try to give it to you.

Mr. MANN. Well, I should say it is important information to have. Does the Naval Committee think that $12,000,000 is such a small sum that it is not worth inquiring about it?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. We did inquire about it, but I do not have the hearings just in front of me.

Mr. MANN. I do not think anybody has the information. That is a remarkable proposition. We appropriated $6,000,000 for a purpose last year and propose to appropriate $12,000,000 this year, and apparently nobody in the Navy or nobody on the Naval Affairs Committee knows what it is for.

Mr. PADGETT. It is for the equipment of yards. How much for the capital ships?

Mr. PADGETT. I told you that specific item was in the 2,000,000. I can not give it to you offnand.

Mr. MANN. I notice that every member of the distinguished $12,000,000. Committee on Naval Affairs is looking it up now, and no one of them can find it. It has gotten so that $12,000,000 is a mere bagatelle. One of them says, "What is $12,000,000—a little thing like that?" It is a good deal to the fellows who pay it.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield? I would like to suggest to the chairman that the testimony is on page 1211 of the supplemental hearing-Admiral Harris's testimony and the testimony of the Secretary.

Mr. MANN. I feel very sure the Committee on Naval Affairs would know if they ever had the information given to them.
Mr. KELLEY. We do know.
Mr. MANN. What is it? How much is to be used for the equipment of yards for the construction of the capital ships?

Mr. KELLEY. Admiral Harris testified that it would take the whole $6,000,000 appropriated last year to fix up the Philadelphia yard alone.

Mr. MANN. That is all right so far as it goes. The letter of the Secretary just indicated $3,000,000.

Mr. PADGETT. It says here that the $18,000,000, as I stated to the gentleman in the beginning, has not been allotted. The $6,000,000 has been allotted tentatively.

Mr. MANN. In other words, no one knows what it is going

Mr. PADGETT. It has not been allotted for two rensons. In other words, if we get it, the $18,000,000, we can allot it more wisely.

Mr. MANN. If they get the $18,000,000 they can spend it. That is as far as it goes. There is absolutely no information furnished to the House as to how the $18,000,000 is going to be Where $6,000,000 was appropriated last year for the expended. purpose, $12,000,000 is about to be appropriated this year, and nobody seems to think it important enough to know what it is

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I wanted to read for the information of the gentleman from the supplemental hearings on page 1011.

Mr. PADGETT. I had that right here, just ready to read it. Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I read:

Mr. PADGETT. I had that right here, just ready to read it.
Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I read:

Mr. Roberts. If you should get this $12,000,000 more, making $18,000,000 altogether, you would rearrange your present tentative plans for the improvement of certain yards?

Secretary Daniels. Yes.
Mr. Roberts. So as to improve to a greater extent than you contemplated?

Secretary Daniels. Certainly.
Mr. Roberts. I understand Admiral Harris to say that it will take $6,000,000 to equip the Philadelphia yard to build two battle cruisers? Admiral Harris. I said, that, approximately.

Mr. Roberts. Yes; approximately. How much will it take to equip the Norfork yard to build one?

Admiral Harris. That was one battle cruiser and two scouts. That was approximately $6,000,000, too.

Mr. Roberts. That would take $6,000,000. How much would it take to equip the Brooklyn yard to build two battle cruisers?

Admiral Harris. About $3,000,000.

Mr. Roberts. And the Bremerton yard?

Admiral Harris. About $3,000,000.

Mr. Roberts. To build two battle cruisers?

Admiral Harris. Yes.

Mr. Buttler. Are you going to build an overhead track?

Admiral Harris. I do not know the exact cost, but the general estimate is about $2,000,000.

Mr. Buttler. And how much will the traveling structure cost?

Admiral Harris. I think something like $650,000.

Mr. Brutler. And how much will the traveling structure cost?

Admiral Harris. Yes; at Philadelphia we have no covering. It is just an open-topped structure.

Mr. Buttler. And how much will we have no covering. It is just an open-topped structure.

Mr. Buttler. And how much of this $18,000,000 do you expect to spend on the Charleston yard?

Admiral Harris. We made no estimate for Charleston, Boston, and Portsmouth, but generally assumed that $1,000,000 would cover the improvements at those three yards.

Mr. Britten. For the building of those three ships?

Admiral Harris. We have a ship now under construction at Bostop, and the ways would have to be lengthened and additional tools would have to be provided there. At Charleston we have ways for one gunboat, and we expect to lengthen it for a destroyer, and perhaps build an additional set of ways for a destroyer.

At Portsmouth it would be just a case of another ways for a submarine.

That approximately accounts for $18,000,000. If the gentleman will only have a little patience with us and go through this testimony we will give him all the information we have.

Mr. MANN. Oh, you ought to have the information at your tongue's end. A moment ago the chairman read a letter from the Secretary of the Navy proposing to spend $3,000,000 at the Philadelphia yard. Mr. PADGETT. I said they proposed to spend $3,000,000 out of the $6,000,000. At the same time it was stated that if the $12,000,000 was appropriated the plans for the $3,000,000 expenditure were tentative and would be changed and adapted to the whole amount, which would be $6,000,000.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. KELLEY. I will say, in addition to what the gentleman from Tennessee has said that it makes a great deal of difference whether these yards are fitted up to build one capital ship or to build two capital ships.

Mr. MANN. That means that we are just blindly appropriating money. They will start in to equip the yard for two capital ships, and then ask for $18,000,000 more. Who knows?

Mr. PADGETT. The proposition under this $6,000,000 was to equip one to build a capital ship.

Mr. MANN. I have not had the opportunity to get the information until this morning, and I have not got it this morning. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order, with great regret. I think we ought to know about these things when we are asked to appropriate millions of dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE].

The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TAGUE: Page 60, line 14, after the word "yards," insert the following: "At Puget Sound, Philadelphia, Norfolk, Portsmouth, Charleston, and New Orleans."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is in the same language that was adopted in the bill of last year when the question of appropriating money for the equipment of the navy yards was under consideration. The $6,000,000 was put into the bill because of the position taken by Members from Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and other States where the navy yards belonging to the Government are located.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are asked to-day to appropriate $12,000,000 more, which makes $18,000,000, and we are told by the chairman of the committee that it is going to take three or four million dollars to equip any one yard.

Now, Mr. Chairman, coming from Boston, where we have a navy yard which to-day is almost equipped for first-class shipbuilding, notwithstanding the statement made by the Navy Department, I want to say that the navy yard in Boston could be equipped for the building of a first-class battleship by an expenditure of less than half a million dollars, and could be put expenditure or less than hair a minion dollars, and could be put in a condition to build one of these battleships, or commence the building of battleships, within one year.

It is all very well, Mr. Chairman, to ask for these big appropriations, and I am willing to vote them when the Government wants them; but it has been debated on this floor that the reason why we have been unable to build these ships is that the private shipyards have not been in a position to take the contracts and do not want them. In other words, the big shipbuilding companies of the United States do not want their ways taken up in the building of a battleship that is going to take three years, and that is the reason why the Government has been unable to secure bids from these large concerns for the construction of battleships which this country needs so much at the present time.

I think it is good business, Mr. Chairman, for the Govern-ment to have its own property equipped as soon as possible so that we will not be in the hands or at the mercy of any private shipyard in the country. We have these big institutions now, and with a slight expenditure of money they can be equipped, and the amount of money authorized in this bill, which is nothing compared with the bonus which we will be obliged to pay to the large shipbuilding companies, will be saved in the equipment of the Government's own yards. We are building to-day, or about to build in Boston Navy Yard, a hospital ship of about 12,000 tons, and the Secretary says it will require $75,000 to build the ways for the building of this ship.

We have in the yard a splendid equipment, and all that is necessary is the extension of ways and some new machinery to put that yard in a first-class condition. We have everything that the Government wants there. We have 35 feet of water right at the navy yard. We have a splendid machine shop that has been equipped by the Government in the past few years. We have the largest chain shop in the United States, building all the big chains and most of the anchors for the Navy. have a ropewalk, where we make all the big hawsers and cables that the Navy uses. Then we have a steel plant for the making of castings to be used by the Navy Department. We have everything that is needed in that yard to-day to go ahead and proceed with in building the ships the Government needs so much at the present time, and we are told that the appropriations are going in other directions.

I have no hesitation in saying, Mr. Chairman, that the other navy yards of the country should be equipped, no matter what the expense is to the Government. It is a shame to see our Government at the mercy of any individual or corporation at a time like this, when we need a Navy so badly and we are compelled to have laws passed to allow us to go into the private shipyards and take over their plants and machinery to do the work of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. Does the gentleman know that the Government has had no trouble whatever in getting bids for battleships? They are awarded at once, and are now under contract at two yards.

Mr. GORDON. Under contract but not under construction.

Mr. BROWNING. They are under construction.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, in the debate that has taken place on this floor every member of the minority of the committee who has spoken here has said, "We have appropriated the money, but the ships are not built, the ships can not be built for more than four years. That is the matter with our Navy—we can not get the bids to build them until the ways of these private shipyards are cleared of the private work that they are now constructing."

Mr. BROWNING. Can they be built more quickly in Government yards?

Mr. TAGUE. Oh, Mr. Chairman-

Mr. BROWNING. Well, answer my question.

Mr. TAGUE. Yes; and better. Mr. BROWNING. The Secretary says they can not, and the Assistant Secretary says so, too.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary has taken the word of men who have filled volume after volume in contradicting one another on every phase of the building of the American Navy. Mr. Chairman, I contend that there is not a private shipyard to-day in the country that can be cleared so that this Government can start to build a ship inside of a year. According to the reports we get every yard is filled now with private construction, and why should we interfere with that work when the people of the Nation need these private ships so much, and when we have property of our own which we should use, and when we are appropriating millions of dollars for the building up of our own Navy? Then we are told we must go to the private shipyards to have that done.

Mr. BROWNING. Does the gentleman know that there are two concerns in this country, the New York Shipbuilding Co. and the Newport News Shipbuilding Co.—and the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. as well—whose yards are 72 per cent engaged in Government construction?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes; I know they have 72 per cent of their yards engaged; but still we are without the ships; still they are unable to give us any more ships for four or five or six

Mr. BROWNING. And the Secretary of the Navy and the private shipyard men all say that the trouble is to get the labor. There is only a certain amount of labor in this country, and none of them can get it.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, the reason for that is perfectly natural. The shipbuilding of the world has been done across the water, and it was not until the present condition arose which was the result of the war that the people of the United States realized that it was time to protect their own industries and build up their own merchant marine.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, when this matter was before the committee I asked Admiral Taylor this question:

If the private yards are completely fitted up, and if the Government yards are fitted up, making that many more shipyards, pending the time when this general shipbuilding boom is on, where would you expect to get the men to equip and do the work in the Government yards?

Admiral TAYLOR. We would expect to get them from the shipbuilding trade.

I asked:

To get them away from the private shipbuilders?
Admiral Taylon. The estimates of the Department of Commerce indicate that there are about 70,000 men employed in the shipbuilding trade to-day outside of the navy yards. In the navy yards we have employed about 25,000 men. In order to build this work we would need to have on the average something like 7,000 or 8,000 more men.

I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Boston where the Government yards would get at this time 7,000 or 8,000 more

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman I will just bring to his attention this fact: Up to within three years at the navy yard in my district there was no shipbuilding, the only work done being repair work. Up to within the last 10 years the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. did practically no shipbuilding, except in a small way. They employed a few men, to be sure. I understand that now they are employing many thousands of men. We have in the Boston Navy Yard to-day, working on shipbuilding and the different parts of shipbuilding, 3,300 men, where three years ago we had 1,900 men. Over 800 of those men to-day are working in shipbuilding. It is true you can not get mechanics in a moment. But every mechanic in the United States who is engaged in any part of machinery building, any part of iron working, any part of structural work, can with a little experience adapt himself to the work of building battleships. After all, what is it? The turning out of the iron is done in the mill. It requires a good mechanic, who knows iron, They can turn out ship fitters, Mr. Chairman, to put it together. as fast as they can get the men to work at it, and we have never had any trouble in getting men to go in and learn the trade of shipbuilding. It has become a substantial trade to-day in the United States. It has become a trade that the young men realize is going to be a profitable one. There will be no trouble in getting men to learn the trade. They will go into the yard and un-der good instruction they will become splendid ship fitters in a very short while. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that if the report of the chairman of the committee is true, that it will take 7.500 more men to work in the navy yards in the work of the building of our ships, we can get them in a very short time. If we can build a 12,000-ton ship, we can build a 20,000-ton ship, and it will not take much money to equip Boston yard in comparison to the amount of money, $18,000,000, which we are now appropriating. All we ask this House to do is to give us the opportunity to demonstrate that we can do the work for the Government and save money doing so.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, in the State of Pennsylvania is one great industrial concern that has put up its word that within 60 days from this time it will start in the construction of submarines and will agree to give the Government one submarine each week, or 52 submarines each year. In the same State is a concern that has offered its services and its plant to this Government, and has agreed that within 10 months or 1 year it will be ready for the construction of destroyers, and that it will build for this Government 26 destroyers every year. Do you think these people are responding? Do you think their word is good? In the big city of Chester, close to Philadelphia, a shipbuilding plant has recently been constructed and is now ready for commercial work. Its president, who is its guiding hand, Senator William C. Sprowl, has declined to cover his ways with commercial work, which he can do at once, in order that he may be ready for the Government work at any hour and to proceed to build such ships as the Government will need, excepting capital ships. I understand he has arranged already for steel to be furnished for the boats he may build for the Government. He is one of Pennsylvania's foremost citizens and his response to his country's call will not be forgotten by the grateful people of our State. To lay aside all his commercial work to serve his country is a positive sacrifice. But big men can afford to do big things and I am not surprised at Senator Sprowl's readiness and willingness. Within a very few months the shipyards of America under private control will be ready and able to supply the Government with all the small ships she can possibly use.

Mr. TAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. TAGUE. I said nothing about the smaller ships. contention has been that the private shipyards should be left to build the smaller ships and let the Government build the ships now authorized, the battleships, and let the private yards take now authorized, the battleships, and let the private special care of the smaller ships.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PADGETT. We are appropriating $12,000,000 in order to enable the Government to equip all of the yards for the purpose of building ships. The gentleman from Massachusetts has offered an amendment naming seven yards, and that is the question before the House. We are opposed to naming any yards, but leave the power discretionary with the department to equip any and all yards.

Mr. VARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. VARE. I would like to ask my colleague whether he believes that this discretion should be left with the Secretary of the Navy

Mr. BUTLER. Absolutely. I do not know where the ships can be built. I have heard of the depth of water at different places not being sufficient for shipbuilding or navy-yard purposes; I have become thoroughly confused at times, and I believe that there is not any water at some of these yards. [Laughter.] Harbors have been designated to us where our fleet could lie, but the fleet has outgrown the harbors. These conditions change and the depth of the ship changes. I would not vote in favor of any measure that would tie the hands of the Secretary of the Navy in this particular. He should be allowed to exercise his discretion in making selection among the different yards where these ships can be built if desirable, and at the least possible expense to the Government. The yards best equipped, in my judgment, should first be selected; some are better equipped than others. I have no information and I would not assume to myself the responsibility of designating to him where he should build any of the Government ships.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BUTLER. I will.

Mr. DOWELL. Why has not the Secretary made some selection as to the equipment of yards under the appropriation that we made one year ago?

Mr. PADGETT. That was August 29, 1916.

Mr. BUTLER. Congress passed a law August 29, and it became a law a short time after that date. In that bill the Secretary was authorized, in his discretion, to equip a certain number of yards—I think eight. I believe the Secretary, the gentleman who has the responsibility, has made an effort to select yards best adapted for construction purposes. Immediately bids for equipment were asked. He has had about three months in which to determine the best places to construct the big ships. Six million dollars was given him to enable him to complete some of the yards, so that the big ships might be constructed. He has already, as I understand, designated the Philadelphia yard for the construction of one great battle cruiser of 180,000 horsepower. Such a ship has never been built in the wide world. It is entirely novel and new, almost an experiment, but one that we must adopt. He has stated that it will require a good portion of the $6,000,000 to equip one yard. The ship-builders who know how to build battleships have declined up to this time to name a sum satisfactory to the department for which they can build the ships. This ship to be built at the Philadelphia Navy Yard will be built under the direction of the Government. I have no doubt the contracts will be made for the other battle cruisers soon; I mean those heretofore authorized. The Secretary has been moving with dispatch. I have seen millions of dollars voted to the Philadelphia yard for improvements to put it in condition for the purpose that it is now about to be used. I know of no other yard as well equipped as the Philadelphia yard. It is the most modern and the most recent in all kinds of improvements, except the one in New York; and there is no room there to build a cruiser. The ways at the Philadelphia yard are being lengthened, and contracts already made for the steel for that purpose. battle cruiser is about 900 feet long and of 42,000 tons. to carry great guns, larger than any other guns, I believe. Before the Secretary of the Navy could allot the money to the different yards he saw fit to designate one place, the better prepared, the better improved, than all of them, where he might make the immediate test of building a great cruiser.

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say that the length of the cruiser is about 875 feet, and the tonnage is 32,000 tons. It is the new battleships that are 42,000 tons.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; I made a mistake. The cruiser is unarmored.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER, Certainly.
Mr. FESS, Last week, when they were speculating about the number of submarines, Mr. Gary made the statement in New York that we had an establishment here that could easily duplicate all the submarines reported to be now usable. that statement one of enthusiasm merely?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know what our real ability is. But did the gentleman hear my statement this morning? Mr. FESS. As to the institution in his State?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; and it is a good one, too.

Mr. FESS. But Mr. Gary does not confine himself to Pennsylvania. does he?

Mr. BUTLER. He does not. I have no doubt that we have in the United States, in connection with our navy yards, sufficient equipment, perhaps somewhat to be improved, so that within three or four months from this time we will be able to begin the supply of all the subsidiary craft that we will at any time

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, referring further to the question propounded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] awhile ago as to where the $18,000,000 would be expended. I want to call the attention of the House to what the Secretary stated in the hearings before the committee, on page 999 of the supplementary hearings. He said:

Supplementary hearings. He said:

Secretary Daniels. But my suggestion is, our estimates and our recommendations are, for building, equipping the yards for building the ships, it would require $18,000,000. We have already $6,000,000, and we are asking for $12,000,000 more, which would enable us to fit up the Portsmouth Navy Yard to build submarines, and with existing ways and one new ways for two 800-ton boats. At Boston, Mass., the present ways should be lengthened and necessary plant equipment provided for continuing to build ships up to and including 12,000 tons.

Mr. Roberts. May I ask you, right there, are we to assume that the Portsmouth Navy Yard is not equipped to build 800-ton boats with its present slips?

Secretary Daniels. Not fully; we must spend some money to do that.

Mr. Roberts. Does this increase the amount you require for the Portsmouth Yard?

Secretary Daniels. No; we have not been able to make a detailed Secretary Daniels. No; we have not been able to make a detailed estimate.

At Boston we would provide the necessary ways and equipment.

At Charleston we would lengthen the present ways for a destroyer, and make one for a new destroyer. We could build both destroyers and gunboats.

At Philadelphia we would fit up two new ways for capital ships, leaving the existing ways for auxiliaries.

At Norfolk we would fit up one new battle-cruiser ways and one new ways for two scouts.

At Puget Sound, Wash., we would build one new ways for one new ammunition ship and one scout cruiser.

At New York we would build one new ways for a battle cruiser, and existing ways would be continued as at present.

Mr. FOSS rose.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, on this amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tague] may I ask that debate upon the amendment close in 10 minutes?

Mr. FOSS. I may want 10 minutes myself, though I do not

Mr. OLIVER. I want to have five minutes. Mr. PADGETT. Then make it 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman include in that request the paragraph as well as the amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. No.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tague] close in 15 minutes.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I will ask for five minutes. Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has already discussed his amendment for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. TAGUE. Unless I can have five minutes I object.

Mr. PADGETT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon the pending paragraph close in 15 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, attention has already been called to the fact that we are spending a great deal of money in equipping these navy yards for the purpose of building capital ships. Last year we authorized $6,000,000 and this year we conditionally authorize, if we carry out this provision, $12,000,000; but that is not all. In this bill we appropriate to the different yards and stations something like $12,000,000 in addition. page 29 of the bill that the total public works will cost $14,000,000 Of that at least $12,000,000 goes into the various yards and stations, and all for what purpose? In order that these navy yards may build capital ships, and there is not a single instance anywhere where the Government has built a capital ship that it has not cost 10, 20, 30 per cent more than a similar ship was | built for in a private yard. Yet we are building no these navy yards to construct ships at an increased expense to the Government. Let me state an instance. We have constructed seven colliers, all of them practically of the same size, with a displacement of about 19,360 tons each, with a cargo capacity for coal of 10,500 tons each, and we built them during the years 1908, 1909, 1910, and 1911. Six of the seven colliers were built in private yards. The lowest cost in a private yard for any one one of them was $871,000. The highest cost in a private yard was $1,023,000. The seventh was constructed in a Government navy yard, and that ship cost $1,326,000-30 per cent more than the same ship or a similar ship built under private contract, and that has been the whole history of the navy-yard construc-

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FOSS. Take the battleship Utah and the battleship Florida. The Florida was built in the New York Navy Yard and her hull and machinery cost $6,250,000. Her sister ship, the Utah, was built by the Newport News Shipbuilding Co., and it cost less than $4,000,000. There was a difference in the cost of those two ships, sister ships, for hull and machinery, built on identically the same plans and specifications, of $2,250,000. Then we also built a battleship, the New York, in the New York Navy Yard, while her sister ship, the Texas, was built in a private yard. We excluded indirect and overhead charges from the limit of cost upon the New York, and yet that ship cost half a million dollars more than the Texas, her sister ship, built in a private yard, and if the indirect charges, the overhead charges, which we eliminated under the act of authorization in the naval appropriation bill had been charged to the New York in the New York Navy Yard, that ship would have cost $2,000,-000 more than her sister ship, built under a private contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I propose to put these facts into the RECORD

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield for just a moment? As I understand it, five minutes were reserved for the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that in fixing the time at 15 minutes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] was to consume 10 minutes and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] 5.

Mr. PADGETT. That is correct.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, we have a number of shipyards in this country--8 or 10 or a dozen-and there never has been any combination between the different shippards in the country that I know of or that has been shown to exist. We provide in this bill that if there should be any agreement or combination among the shipyards these ships can be built by the Secretary of the Navy in a Government navy yard.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSS. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FOSS. And if you will look through the whole history of Government construction of ships you will find that in every case we have had a half dozen bidders or more. In one case I recall seven bidders in the matter of the construction of a battleship. We have had plenty of competition, and in a time like this I believe we should give these great ships to the private shipbuilding concerns.

Why, much of the congestion to-day in navy yards is due to the tendency of the administration to build ships in navy yards. Just think of it, the Tennessee and California, authorized two years ago, have hardly yet been begun. And why, because they are waiting for the New Mexico or some other ship to get off the ways in the New York Navy Yard, and so the construction of thet ship has been delayed. If that ship and her sister ship had been given to private contractors two years ago at the bids which were then made by the private contractors, those two ships would have been halfway completed at this time and at a cost of a million or a million and a half dollars less each on completion than what they will cost when they are built in the navy yards two or three years hence

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. I will.

Mr. WHEELER. I wanted to inquire if it is not true that the private plants are now so congested that it would be two and a half to three years before they could take any contract from the Government?

Mr. FOSS. No; I think the private yards will take these ships, and we have already provided in the commandeering proposition here that in case of a national emergency these shipyards can be taken over by the Government, and the ships can be built at a price that shall be reasonable in the estimation of the President; and if the private building concerns do not agree to that price, why, of course, they have the alternative, a poor alternative, of a lawsuit, and yet in view of that action in this

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. In exercising its power to take over these yards in time of national emergency we propose now to appropriate $12,000,000, in order that the Government can go into competition with private shipbuilding concerns.

Mr. VARE. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. FOSS. The trouble about competition is that the cost accounting system upon which estimates are made by the Navy Department is unfair to the private shipbuilding concerns, and the Government can afford to be fair. I am going briefly to read to you here just the difference in the accounting system, where all the trouble in comparison between Government navyyard estimates, which do not amount to anything, and bids made by responsible shipbuilding yards occurs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent to put this in the RECORD and show the difference between the two in the matter of the cost of ships. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 19, 1916.

Hon. George Edmund Foss, M. C.,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Foss: In reply to your letter of February 5, 1916, requesting a comparative statement of the cost of building naval colliers at navy yards and at private yards, there is submitted herewith a statement of the individual cost of seven colliers of about equal displacement. Of these vessels the Jupiter was constructed by the Government at the navy yard, Mare Island, Cal. The cost of plans, pay of officers, and wages paid on account of leave and holidays does not appear in the charges to this vessel, while indirect expense for supervision, power, minor maintenance charges, etc., are included in the total cost.

The following general information is given, a part of which you may desire to apply in comparing the cost of the Jupiter and Cyclops.

Naval act approved May 13, 1908, authorized two fleet colliers at a cost not to exceed $1,800,000 each, and provided that "one of said colliers to be built in such Government yard on the Pacific coast as the Secretary of the Navy shall direct."

On account of the excessive estimate for construction at the Mare Island yard, as compared with bids submitted by private shipbuilding firms, ro award was made, and the Secretary in his hearing before the House Committee on Naval Affairs, January 7, 1909, requested Congress to authorize the purchase of four colliers at no greater cost than was authorized for two in the above act.

Naval act approved March 3, 1909, reduced the limit of cost of colliers to $900,000, but did not repeal the direction to build the vessel in a Government yard on the Pacific coast.

A recommendation was made by the Secretary of the Navy in a letter to the House Committee on Naval Affairs dated December 31, 1909, that the limit of cost of the collier to be built on the Pacific coast be increased to $1,000,000 (act approved June 24, 1910). No action could be taken under this limit, and by act of March 4, 1911, it was again increased to $1,200,000, "exclusive of indirect charges," and under this limit the yard was directed to proceed with the construction.

From the above it will be noted that the direction of Congress to build the vessel in a Government yard on the Pacific coast was man

From the above it will be noted that the direction of Congress to build the vessel in a Government yard on the Pacific coast was mandatory, that the excessive cost as compared with a contract-built vessel was contemplated, and that the construction of the vessel, while authorized in May, 1908, was not uncertaken until some months after her sister ship, the Oyclops, was completed and in commission.

In this connection attention is invited to the accompanying statement from which it appears that on account of increased cost of material or other causes the contract prices for construction of colliers built during the period corresponding with the time when the Jupiter was being built at Mare Island were approximately 15 per cent greater than that under which the Cyclops was constructed, although the dimensions of those contracted for later were less.

Sincerely, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS, Secretary of the Navy.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE,

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Harrison of Mississippi having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8092) confirming patents heretofore issued to certain Indians in the State of Washington.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5424) to construct a bridge in San Juan County, State of New Mexico.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1878) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly knows as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, and under the provisions of section No. 151 of the act approved March 3, 1911, commonly known as the Judicial Code, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Bryan, Mr. Robinson, and Mr. Gronna as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, it is refreshing to find some disposition on the part of Members to ask te-day for informa-tion. In reference to the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] as to the relative cost of construction | in private and in Government yards, I will say that he may be correct as to some of the old contracts to which he refers, but they related to a time when Government yards were illequipped for the handling of any business. Under a Secretary friendly to the proper development of Government yards to handle, at least, a limited quantity of Government work, the committee now finds that work done at Government yards compares most favorably, both as to cost and quality, with that let to private yards. I will later read and insert as a part of my remarks a fuller statement on this subject, and which clearly, I submit, refutes the views entertained by the gentleman from Illinois,

As a result of the information before the committee on this subject, a unanimous report has been submitted recommending this increase of $12,000,000 to properly equip the navy yards, and the committee has felt that the expenditure of this sum should be left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, and that Congress should not undertake to specify the yards where expenditures must be made. For that reason I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE] will be defeated.

I desire to now briefly submit some facts for your considera-tion in support of a motion to recommit this bill, which I contemplate offering at the proper time. Allusion has been made to the time required for the completion of capital ships. An amendment was offered by me on yesterday, seeking to require that the vessels appropriated for in this bill should be completed within 38 months. That amendment was voted down, and to my surprise there were many Members on this side of the aisle who voted against the amendment. Yet the report of the minority members of the committee, at the last session of this Congress, recommended and urged the following as proper limits of time for the completion of the different types of ships:

We believe that dreadnaughts and battle cruisers can be completed and put into commission in 24 to 30 months from date of contract. We believe that scout cruisers, destroyers, and other like craft can be completed and put into commission within 15 months from date of contract and that submarines of the coast type can be completed and put in commission within 12 months from the date of contract, and that the time in which ships must be completed should be limited.

In my amendment I sought to prescribe a maximum limit of 38 months on the final completion of the capital ships and, to my surprise, the same gentlemen who said that five months ago, the time limit should be 30 months or less, now impliedly au-thorize the giving of 48 months, and voted against the amendment, fixing the limit at 38 months,

If we need battleships, we need them earlier than four years from now; and if you will fix a limit of time or postpone the appropriation therefor you will get them in much shorter time than four years and probably for less money. The motion to recommit will provide as follows:

Strike out all appropriations for two of the three battleships now carried in the bill and insert in lieu thereof appropriations for the construction of 30 destroyers instead of 15 and for 30 submarines instead of 18, the type and cost of such additional destroyers and submarines to be the same as those now carried in the bill.

If this motion is adopted, it will largely add to the fleet two important types that can be completed in a reasonable time and which will greatly add to the Navy's efficiency. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

Mr. OLIVER. Under leave granted I herewith set out letter, with attached statement from the Secretary of the Navy, and invite the careful reading of the same by the membership of the House. We should know the splendid accomplishments of the Navy Department in these matters, especially in view of the fact that there still remain some, like the gentleman from Illinois, who either refuse or fail to inform themselves in reference thereto.

The letter and statement are as follows:

The letter and statement are as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy,
Washington, Pebruary 13, 1917.

My Dear Mr. Olaver: In my letter of the 3d instant to Mr. Paddett, a copy of which I am sending you herewith, you will find a rather full discussion of the construction at the navy gards within the last three years. This letter is set out in full on page 2584 of the Congressional Record of date February 3, 1917. I wish you would read it carefully, if you have not already done so. Let me call your attention to the fact that the Arisona was constructed at the Brooklyn Navy Yard in 3 years and 10 months from the date of authorization, while her sister ship, the Pennsylvenia, was built in 3 years and 10 months by the Newport News Shipbuilding Co. The Oklahoma and Neveda, neither of which were mentioned in the letter, were built, respectively, by the New York Shipbuilding Co. and the Fore River Co., the former being accepted on May 2, 1916, the latter on March 11, 1916. Thus the Oklahoma was 3 years and 9 months in being built from the date of contract, and the Nevada 4 years and 1 months, respectively, intervened, about 103 months and 4 years and 11 months, respectively, intervened, about 103 months having elapsed between the date of authorization and the date of contract on both ships.

Except at New York and Marc Island, shipbuilding is a new problem at mavy yards, and it can not be expected that the ships first construction of vessels at the navy yards, as my letter to Mr. Padegrr shows, are largely due to the fact that the yards were not equipped for construction before ships were assigned to them to build, and they could not proceed in the further yards and Bridge are long overthough the yards shapes that the Hards been provided for the work.
Thus, while appears that the Hards been provided for the work.
Thus, while appears that the Hards been provided for the work.
Thus, while appears that the Hards been provided for the work.
Thus, while appears that the whole shipbuilding facilities much of the trouble

Allow me also to remind you of the difficulties that we have encountered in obtaining the prompt construction of submarines. It was only after months of negotiations and as a result of the department's insistence upon early deliveries that a reduction in time was obtained from the submarine-building companies, and now that the Navy Department is itself constructing engines for submarines it is building at its yards, we may hope for early deliveries on navy-yard-built submarines, and, as a result thereof, a quicker construction from private concerns, and, as a result thereof, a quicker construction from private concerns, and, as a result thereof, a quicker construction from private concerns, and, as a result thereof, a quicker construction from private concerns, and need not recount to you here the difficulties in placing contracts for the scout cruisers and battle cruisers authorized in the last bill; you are undoubtedly familiar with all the circumstances. At this point allow me to call your attention to the following quotation from the first report of the Helm Board, recently printed by your committee, and to its recommendation that judicious improvement of some, if not all, existing navy yards is desirable:

"The commission deems it unnecessary to go into any further detail at present with respect to its conclusions as to abolishing any existing navy yard or naval station. The investment already made at such stations, the possibility of their full and advantageous utilization in caring for the vessels of the fleet, the extreme difficulty of meeting the requirements of the Navy and those merchant vessels which would be taken over by the Navy in time of war and could not be cared for at private ship-repair and dry-docking establishments at the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, leave no doubt in the minds of the members of the commission as to the inadvisability of abolishing at this time or in the near future any existing navy yards is desirable, and the commission can see no just ground for the diminution

Bids made in 1916 were made upon material for gun forgings that had advanced in price nearly 60 per cent since the forgings for the guns made at the Naval Gun Factory were obtained, and hence it is difficult to make an accurate comparison. The cost of the guns to the Gun Factory does not include any charge for plant or for various overhead items. In order to enable the Midvale and Bethlehem companies to construct 16-inch guns it is necessary for them to install new lathes and machinery for which their estimate is practically the amount estimated as necessary for the Naval Gun Factory, but which amount will not appear in the cost of the guns.

TORPEDOES.

TORPEDOES.

Torpedoes is that of the Mark VII. The torpedo station cost of this torpedo, ready to fire, is $5,119.34. That of the Naval Gun Factory, for the first torpedoes manufactured there, is $7,860.91, and it is expected that this will be reduced to $5,618.62 on the second order. The cost of this torpedo from the E. W. Bliss Co. was $6,125.91.

Another close comparison can be made in the cost of Mark IX torpedoes. The cost of this torpedo manufactured by the Bliss Co. under contract dated April, 1914, is $7.027.86. Its cost made at the torpedo station, ordered in 1914 (as per memorandum of Commander Robisou), is $4,332.30.

MINES.

The total cost of 1 mine, comlete except explosive charge, as manufactured at the Norfolk Navy Yard, is $321.96.

Contract with Vickers dated November 7, 1913, for 1,100 mines, complete except explosive charge, fixed the cost at $498.95 each.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tague], which the Clerk will again report.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 5, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield? How much time will the gentleman want?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Five or maybe ten minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] is recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, for some years it has been my custom when the naval bill was under consideration to present information as to the relative cost of manufacturing in Government yards and private yards. I have not done so at this session, because I have been so engrossed in the work of the Committee on Appropriations.

It was ascertained some years ago that the department had so indefensible a system of cost keeping in Government yards that Congress was compelled at times to take radical action in order to have a fairly accurate statement made of the cost of building ships. For instance, at the navy yard in New York it was found that the maintenance cost of the entire plant, regardless of the portion of the overhead that was properly chargeable to construction or repair purposes, was being charged to the ship. I remember I made a statement here at one time upon information furnished me confidentially by one of the paymasters in the Navy, in which I demonstrated conclusively that upon one of the ships over $1,000,000 had been charged that did not properly belong to the cost of the ship. I do not intend to review those old facts now.

I wish to call the attention of the House to some very late information relative to the cost of Government manufacture as contrasted with private manufacture of munitions of war. Section 121 of the national-defense act provided for the appointment of a board of five citizens, two of whom should be civilians and three officers of the Army, to investigate and report on the feasibility, desirability, and practicability of the Government manufacture of arms, munitions, and equipment, showing in said report the comparative prices of the arms, munitions, and equipment manufactured in Government plants and those manufactured in private plants, and certain other things. That report was transmitted to Congress on the 2d day of January, 1907.

The board consisted of F. J. Kernan, colonel, Twenty-eighth Infantry, president; C. P. Summerall, lieutenant colonel, Field Artillery; Benedict Crowell; R. Goodwin Rhett; and L. M. Fuller, major, United States Army, retired, recorder. Mr. Rhett is president of the National Chamber of Commerce. following firms were in touch with the board and conferred with them:

The Allis-Chalmers Co.
The American Radiator Co.
The American Locomotive Co.
The Brown & Sharpe Manufacturing Co.
The Cincinnati Milling Co.
The Du Pont Powder Co.
The General Electric Co.
The General Electric Co.
The Remington Arms Union Metallic Cartridge Co.
The Winchester Repeating Arms Co.

This is a quotation from the report:

The actual data upon comparative cost is contained in Exhibit F herewith, compiled in the Office of the Chief of Ordnance and covering a period of four years past. An examination of that data discloses that with few exceptions the Government cost is less than the corresponding purchase price. This result should cause no surprise. Indeed, had a contrary state of facts been shown, a grave indictment of the Government plants would have resulted.

This board, absolutely impartial, states that if the Government manufacturing cost were not less than the private plants' selling cost it would constitute a grave indictment against the Government plants.

It says further:

For, considering the question abstractly, it appears at once that the Government cost should be less, and considerably less, as a general rule, than the private manufacturer's price, and this without any imputation upon the efficiency or the business policy of the latter. The Government has no selling expense; it carries no insurance, but merely pays its fire and accident losses at their actual cost, estimated at about three-tenths per cent; its borrowing ability, as related to the cost of its investment, is exercised at a much lower interest rate; it has the advantage of long-continued experience in a few specialized lines, and, finally, it makes no profit.

On page 9 of the report it is stated that it is difficult to say what saving has been made on certain implements and munitions, since they have not been manufactured simultaneously by Government and private plants, but the Chief of Ordnance, Gen. Crozier, has compiled a statement of the saving in such articles as were both manufactured and purchased during the past four years. The board could not definitely determine the saving where the Government was the exclusive manufacturer, but where the Government was manufacturing and purchasing the same article it was able to reach certain conclusions. The exhibit is contained in the report and discloses that certain articles, costing $9,397,737.40 out of a total of $35,106,523.09 manufactured by the Government at its arsenals in four years, were compared with the cost of obtaining them by contracts; that is, about 25 per cent of the Government manufacturing was compared in this total. The report shows that the same articles if bought at prices paid for similar articles would have cost the Government $11,153,593.42. The saving to the Government, therefore, on $9,397,000 of manufactured products was $1,755,-Practically 10 per cent is saved over what it would cost if we obtained the articles by contract.

There is no essential difference between the conduct of an establishment that manufactures large guns, rifles, ammunition, and munitions over an establishment that constructs war vessels or other industrial establishments.

In the years that I have been assigned to the duty of ascertaining the cost of Government manufacture and private manufacture at Government arsenals it has been established conclusively that the Government arsenals are manufacturing more cheaply than the Government can purchase the same articles from private manufacturers.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] never was friendly to navy-yard construction. He never tried to find out just what While he was chairman of the committee we the cost was. had a continual controversy to take the Government out of the control and the grip of the private contractors and to have it utilize its own establishments for the doing of essential work for the defense of the country.

We demonstrated by repeated illustrations that the navy yards did, in competition on single items, do the work more cheaply than it could be done by contract. We established it by investigations of the arsenals conducted by the War Department rather than by the Navy Department. I have not the slightest doubt but that if the committee had been headed by a man who wanted to get the facts he would have demonstrated that the Government yards were equally economical in the construction of Government ships.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask to proceed for five minutes. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman that the time has all been allotted.

Mr. MANN. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that in view of the personal attack, the unwarranted attack, on my colleague, he is entitled to reply.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask, Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement by the gentleman from Illinois that his colleague [Mr. Foss | be given five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] may. proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to Government construction of ships if it can be shown that there is a combination on the part of private shipbuilders to hold the Government up. It has never been shown. If it can be further shown that the Government can build ships cheaper than they can be built by private contractors

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FOSS. It is shown absolutely that there has never been case of Government construction of large ships, colliers or battleships, where it did not cost a great deal more to build them in Government yards than by private concerns.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FOSS. Yes

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman says it has never been shown that there is an understanding between private yards, or there is now?

Mr. FOSS. It has never been shown that there has been an understanding.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been shown that all the private yards submitted identical bids for the same ships. If that was not the result of an understanding it is a remarkable coinci-

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. No; I can not yield. I have only five minutes. Now, the trouble is that the cost-counting system in private shipbuilding concerns is one thing and in Government yards it is another thing. The Government navy yards exclude a great many things that are in the cost-counting system in private shipbuilding concerns.

Now, I am going to read a little statement that has been approved by a man in our Navy Department who knows what he is talking about on this subject of cost in Government navy yards, because he has to do directly with it. He says yards, because he has to do directly with it. He says:

The cost of work done in navy yards does not include all the elements that enter into the cost of the work. It includes the cost of direct labor and material but does not include all the indirect or overhead charges. The new accounting instructions which were put in effect July 1, 1915, provided that certain fixed charges shall be made against the military maintenance of the yard, and this has the effect of making the cost of work appear much less than it formerly was or than it really is.

The building of a new ship in a navy yard also results in transferring to the appropriation under which she is built a certain portion of the cost of the work. In round numbers, from 25 to 28 per cent of the indirect cost is charged directly against the appropriation concerned. To make this plain, it may be stated that in the building of a ship such as the Arizona at the New York Navy Yard only about 70 or 75 per cent of the indirect charges are charged to the cost of that ship, the remainder being charged directly against the appropriation "Increase of the Navy." Items of cost which are not charged against the cost of work are the pay of draftsmen, of clerks, of people engaged in inspection work, bookkeepers, storekeepers, and messengers. The pay of officers concerned in the supervision of the work is not charged. Certain repairs made to the rolling stock in navy yards and the car tracks, vehicles, etc., is charged to another account than that of cost of work.

One of the big items of expense in navy yards is the annual leave of 30 days granted to employees, to say nothing about the holidays. This amounts to about 14 or 15 per cent of the cost of labor, but is charged directly to the appropriation and not against the cost of work.

That is found in another item of the naval appropriation bill,

That is found in another item of the naval appropriation bill, or some other bill, I believe, but it is not charged against the cost of the work. I read further:

cost of the work. I read further:

In building ships by contract the shipbuilder has to include all of the foregoing items in his cost, and, besides that, he has to charge for the investment in his plant represented by the cost of land and buildings and equipment. He has also to charge for the interest on his working capital. He has to pay insurance on his plant and on the ships while they are under construction. He has to charge for depreciation of his buildings and equipment. No such charges are made against the cost of construction in navy yards, and every Naval appropriation bill carries with it a liberal appropriation for the replacement of tools. The shipbuilder has also to pay taxes on his plant, and now also on the profits of his plant. This all tends to swell the cost of production and to make the contract-built ship cost more than one bullt in navy yards. Unfortunately, as pointed out by Mr. Ferguson, president of the Newport News Co., on pages 1107 and 1108 of his hearing before the House Committee on Naval Affairs (which may be found in pamphlet No. 20, entitled "Cost of preparedness"), it is impossible to get the true cost of work done in navy yards, and the shipbuilder is up against the proposition of matching his actual cost, which he can determine to a nicety, against the fictitious cost reported from navy yards.

Before the passage of the eight-hour law the bids of shipbuilders for the construction of ships was very much lower than the cost in navy yards.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman want more time?

Mr. FOSS. I would like to have two or three minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Mr. FOSS. I read further:

Since the passage of the eight-hour law, however, prices from ship-yards have materially risen, until now the difference in reported cost of construction at navy yards does not differ greatly from the bids sub-mitted by shipbuilders. If all the items of cost that should appear were included in the cost returns from navy yards, there can be no question of the fact that the cost in navy yards would be much greater than for construction by contract.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Who wrote that? Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman says we do not charge against the ship the draftsmen who prepare the plans when the ships are built in the navy yards. Do we not furnish the plans to private shipbuilders free, and that is not added to the cost of the private-built ships, although the Government bears all the expense of preparing those plans? We prepare the

Mr. FOSS. The private shipbuilding concerns employ a great many draftsmen and clerks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We prepare the plans and furnish them to the builders to work upon. Mr. FOSS. That is true in every business. Whenever the Government contracts for a certain piece of work it is neces sary to prepare the plans and specifications upon which the different concerns can bid. That is so in every line of business. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired. All time is expired. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

If, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, the most rapid and economical construction of the battle cruiser herein appropriated for can be obtained thereby, he may contract for the construction of said battle cruiser upon the basis of actual cost, plus a reasonable profit to be determined by him.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Mann: On page 60, after line 23, insert: "It is hereby reaffirmed to be the policy of the United States to adjust and settle its international disputes through mediation or arbitration, to the end that war may be honorably avoided."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The amendment was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Of each of the sums appropriated by this act, except such amounts as may be required to meet obligations authorized in previous acts and for which contracts have been made, no part shall be used to procure through purchase or contract any vessels, armament, articles, or materials which the navy yards, gun factories, or other industrial plants operated by the Navy Department are equipped to supply, unless such Government plants are operated approximately at their full capacity for not less than one regular shift each working day, except when contract costs are less than costs in said Government plants, and except when said Government plants are unable to complete the work within the time required, and except in cases of emergency: Provided, That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in regard to

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in regard to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] was talking about a moment ago, I am reminded of an incident that happened, about one year ago in the presence of a young gentleman who was a member of the mechanical engineering class at Ann Arbor. He, with his class, went out on a tour of inspection. The class stopped at Pittsburgh, at the Westinghouse plant, and there he saw them make casings for 3-inch shells. He came direct from there to Washington and went down to the navy yard, and they were making casing for a 3-inch shell, identically the same kind as he saw them making in Pittsburgh. He timed with a watch the making of the articles at each plant. While the workman made 15 casings in the Westinghouse plant in Pittsburgh in a given time, during the same length of time the workman at the navy yard made 1.

Now, think of that! That was on account of the increased efficiency of the man and the increased efficiency of the machinery and its operation.

But that is not all. A gentleman of this House told me about a year ago that he was down at the navy yard and was introduced to an employee from his own State who looked like a very old man, and he asked him how long he had been there. Said he, "I have been here since the year 1844, excepting four years that I was in the Army." "Why," he was asked, "my friend, how old are you?" "Why, I am only 92 years old." Is it any wonder that it takes them as long to make one article in the navy yard as it does to make 15 at the Westinghouse plant? [Laughter.]
Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, of course the Members of the House are always glad of an opportunity to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] amuse us; but the unfortunate part of this proceeding is that when citizens of the country read the Congressional Record they are very likely to take the gentleman's statement seriously.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. It is serious, and it is true. It was the son of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] here who saw it.

Mr. KEATING. I have no doubt in the world that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] takes it seriously, but I do not think there is another human being who is familiar with the facts who takes it seriously. Now, the truth is that you can not manufacture 15 shells in the Westinghouse concern, or any place else, while you are manufacturing one in the navy yard.

Mr. FORDNEY. The fact is that they do.
Mr. KEATING. If that were true, if you could turn out fifteen times as much in a private establishment as they do in a Government establishment, I submit, even to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that that result would be shown when these private establishments are bidding for Government contracts.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield a moment? Mr. KEATING. I will. Mr. PADGETT. The Government does not, in any navy yard, or elsewhere, pretend or attempt to make large shells. it has made a few experimental small shells, the largest I believe 8 inches. It is true, I presume, that they make at Pittsburgh many times more than 15 to 1 of the big shells, because the Government does not make any big shells at all.

Mr. KEATING. The fact is, as all the Members of this House who have gone into the matter know-

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Let me answer.

Mr. KEATING. If the gentleman will restrain himself just moment-all the investigations that have been made have demonstrated that Government manufacture is cheaper than private manufacture. We had read here this morning by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] a statement prepared by a board which was not friendly to Government manufacture, and the finding of that board was to the effect that the saving was at least 10 per cent, in fact, much more. I make this statement merely that some answer may appear in the Congressional Record, and that it shall not go out to the country that this House, merely because it laughed at what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] said, indorsed hat he said. [Applause.] Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I made to what he said.

the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Miller] the statement that he repeated to the House. I visited the navy yard and saw them make 3-inch casings. I know the statement made by Mr. MILLER is correct: it does not make any difference what others I made a statement on the floor of this House once before. say. I made a statement on the noor of this House of the and I am going to make it again now for the information of the gentlemen here: Through the courtesy of this House I secured an appropriation for the construction of a building in the congressional district in Michigan that I have the honor to represent here. That building cost, in round numbers, fifty-nine thousand and some odd hundreds of dollars, of which about $8,900 was spent for superintendence and plans for the construction of that building.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Does the gentleman mean to have us understand that he vouches for the man being 92 years old also?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I did not see that gentleman, but I saw the casings being made. Down here in the navy yard-I presume the same method is yet used-the method of making these shells is that when the workman puts his foot upon the pedal of a machine a rod comes down, presses the plate into the die, and makes the shell or casings. He takes it leisurely out by hand and lays it aside, picks up another plate and lays it on the die, puts his foot on the lever, and then the casing is made; whereas at Pittsburgh the machine works automatically, and the plates go through rapidly and come out in the form of casings.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Michigan calls the outside the shell. The Committee on Naval Affairs call the inside the

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; I said shells, and I saw them made in the Westinghouse plant at the rate of 15 for every 1 made in the navy yard.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. That is the main thing-15

1. [Laughter.] Mr. FORDNEY.

Not 16 to 1, but 15 to 1, and that is about as near as the Government can come in doing anything practical, as compared with a private concern or an individual. [Applause. 1

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] stated that it had never been shown that there was any absence of honest competition between shipbuilders, and so forth. During the Fifty-third Congress Charles M. Schwab, the present head of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, which owns shipbuilding yards, was testifying before a committee of Congress, and was asked this question:

Senator BLACKBURN. Is there any competition in the price of armor in this country as between yourselves and the Bethlehem Co.—

At that time Mr. Schwab was general manager of the Carnegie Steel .Co.

Mr. Schwab. No. sir; assuredly not. We have always had an understanding in that matter. We-never take a contract that we do not consult with the Bethlehem about it.

about it.

Senator Blackburn. I asked if there is competition.

Mr. SCHWAB, No, sir; there is no competition. I want to be quite fair on that point.

Now, as to the difference in cost between the manufacture of things in arsenals and private plants, I desire to read a little further from the same document that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] quoted from a few moments ago. Doc. No. 664, 64th Cong., 2d sess., p. 26.) This document shows that in the manufacture of field-artillery carriages, caissons, and limbers we are manufacturing these articles in Government plants 43 per cent cheaper than we can get them from private manufacturers.

As to cannon powder, we are manufacturing it 42 per cent cheaper; 12-inch projectiles weighing 700 pounds, 80 per cent cheaper; 12-inch projectiles weighing 600 pounds, 67 per cent cheaper; optical instruments, 9 per cent cheaper. These figures were compiled by a board that I consider unfair to the Government-manufacture side. All the testimony that was presented was by the private firms that manufacture these munitions and the Army officers who are opposed to complete Government manufacture. Nevertheless, the report proves the economy of Government manufacture of munitions.

The War Department it 1913 purchased 7,000 4.7-inch shrapnel from the ammunition ring, paying $25.26 each therefor. At the same time precisely the same article was being manufactured in a Government plant at a cost of $15.45. The War Department paid the ring $17.50 for a 3.8-inch common shrap-The War nel, when it can manufacture the identical article for $7.94. The Government has manufactured at the Rock Island Arsenal caissons for gun carriages at a cost of $1,128.67 for which private manufacturers had been paid $1,744.10, which is 54.6 per cent greater than the arsenal cost. Take powder. The Government has purchased $25,000,000 worth of powder from the Powder Trust since 1905, paying therefor all the way from 53 cents to 80 cents per pound. We are manufacturing powder in Government plants for 34 cents per pound, and the officers in charge state that the more we manufacture the cheaper we can A hundred similar illustrations could be cited if produce it. time permitted.

Whenever there is a discussion of the subject of Government manufacture of munitions of war a peculiar thing develops. We find that those Members of Congress who are the leaders for excessive preparedness are also the most bitter enemies of Government manufacture. Why is this? Let them answer.

I have always contended that the test of sincerity in the demand for great preparedness is whether those who advocate it are willing that the people shall receive the preparedness which they advocate without private profit to the J. P. Morgan controlled war trust.

If those who are crying up to Heaven for greatly increased appropriations for preparation for war are wholly sincere, you would think they themselves would demand Government manufacture in order that the Nation might obtain a dollar's worth of preparedness for every dollar appropriated, instead of only 50 or 60 or 70 cents' worth.

But whenever you show me a man who is professionally agitating big Army and Navy appropriations I will attempt to show you a man opposed to Government manufacture of the preparedness he is demanding.

he Navy League of the United States, which I have on several occasions shown to have been founded and supported by war-trafficking firms, went to great trouble and expense to defeat me for reelection because I have advocated the elimination of private profit from war and preparation for war by the manufacture of Army and Navy supplies in Government ar-senals and navy yards. In other words, the Navy League insists that because I advocate Government manufacture I am opposed to preparedness. The Navy League's position is that everyone who would interfere with the profits of those munitions and armor makers who are set forth in the Navy League Journal as the founders of the Navy League is an enemy of preparedness.

In this connection I wish to state that those who allege that we are not prepared as we ought to be at this time can not lay the blame at the doors of those who have been consistently advocating in Congress the Government manufacture of Army and Navy supplies. If we are not adequately prepared, it is not because the American people have not paid in taxes the price of adequate preparedness, but because too many millions of dollars of the money appropriated for preparedness have gone into the pockets of J. P. Morgan, Charles M. Schwab, and other munitions makers in the form of excessive profits instead of into preparedness. Three firms have drawn down contracts aggregating more than $200,000,000 from the Army and Navy Departments, and Army and Navy officers have generously paid these firms from 20 to 60 per cent more for practically every dollar's worth of these supplies than they could have been manufactured for in Government establishments.

It has been charged that the public buildings and the rivers and harbors bills are pork-barrel bills. I believe they are to a large extent. I voted against them. But the percentage of pork in those bills is but a drop in the bucket as compared to the Army and Navy appropriation bills.

I am going to vote against these so-called preparedness bills solely because they are loaded to the guards with fat, juicy pork for the private munitions manufacturers. If enough Members would vote against these bills, as myself and others are doing, it would not mean that we would not get any pre-paredness at this session but that the committees in charge would be forced to bring in bills making provision for Government manufacture of supplies. It would also mean that the Nation would get from one-fourth to one-third more preparedness for the same money that we are now appropriating. But, in the opinion of the Navy League and professional preparedness advocates, it is quite unpatriotic to demand that the Nation shall receive the maximum defensive power or the maximum striking power for the sums appropriated.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAVENNER. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Does not the testimony show that not only do the munitions makers refuse to compete with each other but that they have had similar arrangements with European munitions manufacturers?

The records of the Supreme Court show Mr. TAVENNER. that for a period of about 10 years the Du Pont Powder Co. was in a contract with European powder manufacturers by which it was agreed that if the United States Government should attempt to escape the net of the Du Pont concern, which had a monopoly of the sale of smokeless powder to the Government, and should ask for a bid from the European powder makers, the latter were bound by the terms of the contract first to write to the Du Ponts and ascertain what prices the Du Ponts had quoted to the American Government, and then not to quote any The same arrangement existed as regards any attempt of the European Governments to escape the strangle holds of the European powder firms by attempting to buy powder in America.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, one of the reasons it is thought wise for the Government to enter the field of manufacture at all is to determine the cost of manufacture of various articles needed by the Government. Unless we do accurately determine the cost of manufacture in plants operated by the Government it is not going to help us very much in ascertaining what is a fair price to be charged by private manufacturers. think, from what investigation I have been able to make since I have been a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that there is some basis for the belief that the Government does not know accurately what it costs to manufacture articles made in Government plants. I think we ought, beyond all doubt, to clear up this matter of cost in Government manufacture. The Government should install a system of cost accounting which will accurately convey to Congress and to the people of the country the exact cost of production, and then we will know what we are doing and whether we are making money or losing money by doing the work ourselves.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. We have just made an appropriation, altogether, of $18,000,000 to fix up certain navy yards. A part of that probably the major part of it-is to equip navy yards for the construction of capital ships. How can anybody tell what proportion of that equipment is to be charged to any one ship?

Mr. KELLEY. I will say to the gentleman that the present chief accountant of the Navy Department-Admiral McGowanhas just completed a survey of all the navy yards of the Government. He has made charts showing the layout of every shop in the various navy yards. He has undertaken to assign the amount of depreciation of every machine in every one of these shops to a given piece of work. From a calculation of the use of shops and machinery in the production of any given work the total overhead charge as compared with the cost of labor or material has been thoroughly worked out by the department. This system follows closely upon systems now in use in private plants generally in the country.

Now, I will say further to the gentleman from Illinois that the Secretary of the Navy has not yet put this new system into operation, and if by the time we make the next bill it has not been put in operation I shall do all I can to have the matter taken care of by appropriate legislation.

Mr. MANN. Very well. Suppose you equip a navy yard with a $6,000,000 equipment for the construction of capital ships and you then build one capital ship that will cost $15,000,000 and you never build any more; the whole thing is charged against that one ship. How does anybody know how many more ships will be constructed at the same navy yard? The Lord can not tell what Congress is going to do, nor anybody else.

Mr. KELLEY. That would be more or less true of private construction as well; but the Government ought to be able to say with as much certainty as a private corporation what elements ought to go into the overhead charges. It has been ascertained in this system of accounting which Admiral McGowan has worked out that the proper overhead to be included as an overhead charge against any ship is about 65 per cent of the labor cost entering into the ship. This of course has nothing to do with profit.

Under a system like that the proper overhead can readily be ascertained and can be added to the cost of labor, which is definite, and the cost of material, which is definite, and then you can get the accurate cost to the Government of the ship.

Mr. GARLAND. But how can the Government, in the gentleman's estimation, secure this information when every bill practically that is passed here carries a provision that time shall not be taken into consideration. The stop-watch clause, as it is referred to, precludes the possibility of what the gentleman speaks of.

Mr. KELLEY. There ought not to be any trouble at all about the Government being able to determine cost, any more than a private manufacturer. And until we do put some system into effect which will do this we will have no proper check upon cost of work done for the Government under private contract.

The Government undertakes to supervise the corporations of the country. We have a Federal Trade Commission, and that commission has recommended a uniform system of accounting to be adopted generally in order to determine accurate costs of manufacture throughout the country, and if the Government can work out such a system as that for private corporations, it does seem to me that we ought to be able to do it for the Government itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan have one minute more in order that I may be able to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman know whether or not this cost-accounting system of which he speaks has been used in an effort to ascertain what the real cost of these great cruisers may be; and if so, how nearly it comes to the estimate placed upon the cost by the private builder himself?

Mr. KELLEY. In reply to my colleague I will say that it is my understanding that the estimate of the Government of the value of material and the value of the labor entering into these cruisers and the proper amount of overhead charges, should be added to the cost of labor and material, making the full cost of the ship, is almost identical with the amount estimated for material, labor, and overhead charges by private concerns bidding for these ships.

Mr. PADGETT. There was some difference in overhead charges. They grouped profit and overhead charges together, the gentleman will remember.

Mr. VARE rose. Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. VARE. Yes.
Mr. PADGETT. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. VARE. Five minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have five minutes. Mr. PADGETT. Will not the gentleman take that on the next paragraph?

Mr. GARLAND. Certainly, if I can speak upon this same subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal of discussion concerning the relative difference in efficiency between the private shipyards and the Government shipyards. I am extremely sorry that my friend from Illinois [Mr. Foss] is not present, for I would be able to call to his attention an instance which he possibly has overlooked in the construction of a transport quite recently. A discussion was had upon the floor of the House relative to the bids received for the transport Henderson, recently launched at the Philadelphia Navy Yard. the time of opening bids for this ship there were five bids received by the Government from private yards, as follows:

[Bids opened Dec. 20, 1913.] Transport "No. 1."

The lowest bid was from the Newport News Shipbuilding Co., and their price, as above stated, was $1,725,000. The Secretary of the Navy was not satisfied as to the reasonableness of that bid and he invited the Government navy yards to compete and also submit bids for the construction of the ship as follows:

It was said at the time by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Jones] that on the one hand was a legitimate bid, backed up by bond from Newport News Shipbuilding Co., and on the other side a mere guess by irresponsible navy-yard employees. on the floor of this House that if it were possible as a business proposition I would be willing to give my personal bond as a guaranty that the employees of the Philadelphia Navy Yard would be able to carry out their estimate and finish the ship in accordance with their proposition. Of course, that was not a practical thing to do, but, however, there was a promise on their part to save $320,000 upon the construction of the ship. this House to know that that ship has been launched and is practically completed, and that instead of saving $320,000 to the Government they have saved more than $400,000. [Applause.]

I want to call the attention of this House to the fact that in making the calculations there was a liberal allowance for insurance, a liberal allowance for additional electric lighting, and an additional allowance estimated for compensation so that there were full and adequate overhead charges when the final estimate was made. I am not in favor as a general proposition of Government ownership, but I am in favor of this Government being in a position not only to give assistance to a great policy of naval preparedness, but I believe in the equipment of these navy yards as a good business investment for the Government in order that it may at all times be able to ascertain what is a reasonable, fair, and proper charge for the construction of these ships; and I am quite sure that if the Secretary of the Navy in his wisdom directs the building of any of these large ships at the navy yard in the city of Philadelphia that the officials and employees of the Philadelphia Navy Yard will not only make good in the future but they will verify the splendid record they have made in the past. [Applause.]

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I represent a navy-yard district. I am not one of those who claim that all naval ships should be constructed in navy yards, but I do say that at least half of the battleships, destroyers, colliers, submarines, and the other ships of the Navy should be constructed in navy yards when the navy-yard estimates are as low or lower than the private yard bids. Even though the yards do not construct a single ship, if they are equipped to build ships and are in a position to bid, it saves the Government money, because the private yards then, on account of competition with Government yards, have to build for a reasonable profit and will be compelled to construct the ships within a reasonable time. Since the navy yards have been permitted to estimate upon these ships the private yards have been bidding at a more reasonable price, and they have been constructing the ships in quicker time.

Invidious comparisons have been made between the construction in private yards and navy yards to the detriment of the navy yards. I have some figures here that show the navy yards, and particularly the Mare Island Navy Yard, have saved the United States Government a great deal of money. The following figures are on construction awarded to the Mare Island Navy Yard during the past five years. In every instance the estimate of the yard was lower than the private bid, the Mare Island Yard in every instance being lower. First, take the bid on the collier Jupiter. The Mare Island estimate was $1,130,000. That was lower than any private bid submitted. Mare Island constructed that ship for $980,000, or $150,000 under the estimate. The river gunboats Monocacy and Palos were estimated for at $278,000, and the actual cost of construction was $239,600, a saving of $38,400. The fuel ship Kanawha, estimate of cost $1,120,000, actual cost $944,000, a saving of $176,000. The fuel ship Maumee, estimate $707,000, cost $617,000, saving $90,000, The oil barges No. 8 and No. 9, estimate of cost $148,000, cost $128,000, saving $20,000. Two coal barges, estimate $240,000, cost $226,000, a saving of $14,000 under the estimate. The total of all estimates was $3,623,000, the total cost was $3,134,600, a total saving under the estimate of $488,400.

Mr. GARLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURRY. In a moment. To this saving to the Government should be added the difference between the lowest bid by a private yard and the estimate on which the award was made to the Mare Island Navy Yard, which would increase the saving to the Government over a million dollars more.

Mr. GARLAND. How are the estimates ascertained-by contract, by bids on the proposition, or by some individual just estimating-and who is he who estimates?

Mr. CURRY. The estimate is made under the direction of the commandant of the yard, Capt. Bennett, and Naval Constructor Gleason, and the evidence that the estimates were correct is that the ships are built, are sailing the ocean, and the money that was saved is in the Treasury of the United States, and Mare Island has not come to Congress for a deficiency. [Applause.] I have not at hand the exact saving to the Government on the construction of the Shaw and other new work built at the yard last year, but I know it amounted to more than $200,000 under the estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, may I have my time extended a minute more?

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been limited, the Chair will say to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CURRY. I just wanted to call attention to the fact that the California was awarded to Mare Island on an estimate of $7,100,000, and the lowest bid from a private yard was $7,700,000, and I am assured by Capt. Bennett and Constructor Gleason that the California will be constructed within the time limit and estimate of cost.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, in order to offset the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] as to the cost of work by the Government, I am going to ask to insert in the RECORD letters which were sent to this House last year by the Secretary of the Treasury, and also by Brig. Gen. William Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, and I will now ask unanimous consent to insert those letters.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, when I presented the amendment asking for equipment of the navy yard at Boston I expected I would hear a voice from the Republican side of the aisle expressing the sentiment of the people of Boston and to assist me in getting an appropriation for the Boston Navy Yard. Since this bill has been before the House I have been constantly in attendance trying to do my utmost in perfecting the bill and every few days the editorial writers of the papers in my city in their news columns printed editorials upholding the good work of my distinguished Republican colleague from Boston [Mr. Tinkham] in that he had taken to task the Secretary of the Navy because he had not equipped the Boston Navy Yard and that nothing was being done there to help the department. But to-day as in other days his voice is silent and we have not heard him express himself.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In fairness to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tinkham] to whom the gentleman has referred and criticized because he has not raised his voice in justification of the enlargement of the Boston yard, is it not fair to say that he is now engaged in some very important work before the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, in fairness to the gentleman, let me say the navy yard is situated in the district I have the honor to represent.

Mr. LOBECK. If the gentleman will permit, I desire to say the District Committee adjourned at 11.30.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, it is now 2.30 p. m. I am only criticizing my distinguished colleague in a friendly manner because of the fact that certain newspapers have criticized the Democratic administration which has been giving so much work to our yard, and have played up in headlines that he was going to have a battleship built there and how he criticized the Secretary of the Navy because he had not done anything to equip that yard. On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, the navy yard at Boston was never in such a good condition as it is to-day.

Since Secretary Daniels has become Secretary of the Navy he has been very fair with the Boston Navy Yard. He has added to the improvement year by year, and has shown a very friendly disposition for further improvement. It is his inten-tion to keep the yard constantly employed by the building of ships of the 12,000 to 15,000 ton size, thereby giving constant employment to the men in every branch. Naturally the people of our district want to see the yard equipped in such a manner that they can build the larger type of ship, and I am one of those who has worked constantly for the necessary improvements made to bring about this work. No yard has improved more rapidly than ours and it is unfair to say that we have suffered at the expense of any other yard in the country.

As I said in remarks I made a few minutes ago we have every equipment available excepting the enlarged ways, the necessary new machinery, and a few new cranes for the building of battleships, and that was my contention, and is now, that one should be built there. We have 3,300 men employed there to-day working in the yard, as against 1,900 four years ago.

We have recently built and launched the supply ship Bridge, which is the first ship built at the Boston Navy Yard in more than 50 years. She is now almost completed and will be in commission in a very short while. She is the sister ship to the ship referred to by the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. VARE].

When the bids were made for the building of this ship the Boston Navy Yard was the lowest bidder by more than $100,000. and it was a question as to whether or not they could complete the ship within the specified cost. Not only has this been done, but I am assured by the Navy Department that she will be completed within the cost and within the time specified in the contract. The keel for this ship was laid in June, 1915, and she is now practically completed with the exception of a few slight finishing touches and will be in commission within a month. I believe this bears out our contention that ships can be built in our navy yards as well and as cheaply as they can in private yards.

Since I have been a Member of Congress I have devoted a great deal of my time and attention in procuring work for men and equipment for making our navy yard one of the best in the country. I think it is only fair to say at this time that in my endeavors I have had the assistance of Hon. Josephus Daniels, present Secretary of the Navy, who has shown a splendid dis-position to do all in his power to bring our yard up to a high class of efficiency. He has assured me that it is his intention to keep the yard going as rapidly as possible in the building of ships of a lighter size than battleships. For 16 years previous to his administration we have had Massachusetts men serving as Secretaries of the Navy. We have had Hon. William H. Moody, the late Hon. John D. Long, and Hon. George von L. Not any of these men have during their time shown any great disposition to build up the yard, but, on the contrary, Mr. Meyer recommended that the yard be closed and abolished. I believe that it was a disgrace to our Government that these men, coming from Boston, left the yard in such a deplorable condition, and it is extremely amusing to hear at this time my Republican friends, now out of power, criticizing an administration which is doing so much to improve a navy yard which they practically reduced to a scrap heap during 16 years of Republican rule and which they could, if they had had the interest of the people at heart, have made it one of the leading yards of the country. When I came to Congress two years ago there the country. were only 1,900 men employed at the navy yard, while to-day there are 3,500 employed there, and, with the additional work now being sent there, it will mean the employment of many more men. The men are receiving better wages than ever before, and a splendid force of workingmen is now employed. During the past year more men were employed, more work was turned out from the shops, and more repair work done on ships than ever before in the history of the navy yard. The rope walk has increased its output by more than 100 per cent, and we are manufacturing the largest and best rope that can be procured. Our blacksmith shops are turning out the largest chains ever made for the Government and have improved their output by more than 400 per cent. All of the other departments have improved in the same manner, and at one time we had 42 ships undergoing repairs. During the past year, together with the minor repairs on the ships above mentioned, we have completely overhauled several of the larger ships, such as the Georgia, which was repaired at a cost exceeding $600,000, and the Virginia, with repairs amounting to more than $550,000. We have also built several torpedo-testing barges, costing $125,000 each, and at the present time are ready to lay the keel of a new hospital ship which is to cost $1,500,000. I call these matters to the attention of the House for the purpose of showing that we are ready to engage in any class of work in the building of ships for the Navy, and I am certain that, with the force of men now employed at our yard, they could show to the people of the country that the proper place for the building of the ships for the Navy is in the navy yards now owned by the Government.

Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: I have been turning over in my mind the possibility of saying something on the floor of the House of Representatives in relation to munitions and other supplies manufactured by Government plants.

Will you please be good enough to send me at your earliest convenience such printed data as you may have on the subject with reference to the various arsenals and other plants under the jurisdiction of the War Department, and particularly will you please furnish me with the following information.

First. In preparing cost data do the various plants carry as an overhead charge the interest upon the money invested in them; and if so, at what rate of interest?

Second. Is depreciation in value of buildings, machinery, and tools taken into consideration; and if so, what percentage in the various articles?

Third. Do the various plants carry as an overhead charge any amount for supervision from the office of the Secretary of War or the bureau under whose immediate jurisdiction they are working?

Fourth. Are any of the salaries of the officers who have supervision or direction or any kind of control of the work in the plants omitted from the cost data; and if so, to what exent?

Fifth. In purchasing materials do the plants pay more or less than is paid by private concerns; and if so, why?

Sixth. Do the employees engaged in work in the various plants receive the hightest, the average, or a lower rate of pay than that given by private concerns in the same line of business? What comparison would you make as to hours of labor of the men and pay of supervisory force?

Seventh, Is the product produced by the plants superior, equal to, or Seventh. Is the product produced by the plants superior, equal to, or inferior to the product obtained from private enterprise?

Eighth. What comparison with private enterprise can you make as to the time required to produce a unit?

Ninth. Do the plants carry in their cost data interest on expenditures from the time of the first outlay until the job is completed?

Tenth. Does the cost data include the expenses of repairs and replacement of tools and machinery and repairs to buildings?

Eleventh. What has been the increased value of plant, real estate, etc., per annum since its original purchase?

If there are no figures available to answer these questions specifically, will you please furnish me, if you can, a general statement which will approximate as accurately as possible?

Assuring you of my belief in the efficiency of Government work in Government shops and my sincere appreciation of any courtestes extended to me, I am,

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF CHIEF OF ORDNANCE, Washington, December 23, 1915.

Washington, December 23, 1915.

Honse of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: i. Your communication of the 20th instant, addressed to the Secretary of War (0.0.000.71/96), has been referred to this office for reply. No printed matter relative to the method of arriving at costs used by this department is available, but a typewritten memorandum on this subject, prepared some time ago, is inclosed. Replies to part of your questions will be numbered to correspond to the questions. First, Yes; 3 per cent on money invested.

Second. Yes; buildings from 2 to 8 per cent, depending upon whether frame, brick, concrete, or stone; machinery, 4 to 10 per cent, depending upon size and use; allowance for depreciation.

Third. Yes; reference to page 2 of the memorandum herewith will show the items which are considered in determining the War Department overhead and the percentage of the total cost of these items that is considered in arriving at this charge. It will be noted that it amounts to 3.59 per cent.

overnead and the percentage of the total cost of these items that is considered in arriving at this charge. It will be noted that it amounts to 3.59 per cent.

Fourth. No; 80 per cent of the total pay of the officers so employed is included in arriving at total cost.

Fifth. It is difficult to say, but it is believed that the Government, as a rule, gets slightly lower prices.

Sixth. Instructions as to wages to be paid require that the same wages shall be paid as is paid for the same or similar work in the vicinity. The same rule also applies to the civilian supervisory force. The hours of labor in private plants are, as a rule, 9 or 10, as compared with 8 hours in the Government shops. Many private plants, however, give a half holiday throughout the year on Saturday, but it is without pay, whereas a half holiday with pay is given in the Government service from June 15 to September 15. Leaves, holidays, and half holidays now granted amount to 255 days per year, without pay.

Seventh. The inspection of material produced in private plants, as a rule, insures the product being equal to that produced in Government plants, although in some cases the product has been slightly inferior to that produced by the Government.

Eighth. No advantage can be claimed as to the time required in producing material in the Government plants, as compared with private plants.

Ninth. In only one case has the Government taken into consideration.

plants.

Ninth. In only one case has the Government taken into consideration interest on the material involved from the first outlay until the job is completed. This is in connection with the manufacture of smokeless powder at Picatinny Arsenai.

Tenth. Yes; cost includes repair and replacement.

Eleventh. This is difficult to answer. The land occupied by the various arsenais was purchased many years ago, some as early as 1795, and has had the same appreciation that land has had generally in the vicinity.

and has not the same appreciation that and has not generally in the vicinity.

Referring to the memorandum herewith, it should be noted that the appropriation cost is that usually referred to and given in price lists and is the price used in connection with all transactions with the Army and in certain other special cases. To this price is added the general arsenal burden and War Department burden in making certain other sales; also when comparing arsenal cost with that of private manufacturers. In paragraph 2 on the first page of the memorandum will be found a number of arsenal burden factors. The average for all arsenals is approximately 14.4, which, added to the War Department burden given on the second page, makes the average overhead 18, which is the percentage charged in addition to the appropriation cost, as stated in certain cases.

Respectfully, WILLIAM CROZIER.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 24, 1916.

Washington, January 24, 1916.

Hon. Charles P. Caldwell, M. C.,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Caldwell: Replying in detail to the questions as to navy-yard costs appearing in your letter of December 20, 1915:

First. Interest on capital invested is not taken into account, it being purely hypothetical in Government work.

Second. Until recently no satisfactory method has been worked out for showing depreciation in costs, owing to the legal impossibility of setting up an actual fund for replacements; consequently up to the present time such a charge has not been included in the cost of work.

Third. The salaries of departmental officials are not included in the cost of work; the establishment charge stops at the yard limits, as to recognize any other principle would extend the question into a purely academic field, including the whole cost of government—executive, legislative, and judicial.

Fourth. The salaries of navy-yard officials have not up to the present time been included in costs, as it has only been within the last few months that a satisfactory method has been developed whereby the cost system is divorced from the system required by law, whereby the pay of officers is charged to an appropriation other than the shipbuilding appropriation.

Eith. Owing to lack of information as to prices paid for material by months that a satisfactory method has been developed whereby the cost system is divorced from the system required by law, whereby the pay of officers is charged to an appropriation other than the shipbuilding appropriation.

Fifth, Owing to lack of information as to prices paid for material by private corporations, it is impracticable to make a satisfactory comparison with prices paid by the Government.

Nixth. The rates of wages of navy-yard employees conform to the standard of the private establishments in the immediate vicinity of the respective navy yards. The hours of labor in navy yards are eight per diem. Contracts for new ships built by private establishments contain the following provision: "Subject to the conditions enumerated in section 2 of the eight-hour law of June 19, 1912, no laborer or mechanic doing any part of the work contemplated by this contract in the employ of the contractor or any subcontractor contracting for any part of said work contemplated shall be required or permitted to work more than eight hours in any one calendar day upon such work." The pay of supervisors in private plants must, of course, vary widely in different forms of organization and with the merit of the individual concerned, and comparison with the pay of Government supervisors is scarcely practicable. In general it is believed the standards of pay are much the same.

Seventh. The products of the navy yards and of private plants are manufactured under the same specifications and are subject to the same inspection.

Eighth. The records show that the average time for building the Connecticut, Florida, and New York, all Government-built ships, was 3 years 2 months and 26 days, and that the average time required for the contract-built vessels Louisiana, Utah, and Texas was 3 years 2 months and 16 days.

Ninth. Interest on expenditures from the time of outlay until the work is completed is not taken into account in navy-yard costs, not only because interest is in itself purely hypothetical in Government work, but also bec

The Clerk read as follows:

That no part of any sum herein appropriated shall be expended for the purchase of structural steel, ship plates, armor, armament, or machinery from any persons, firms, or corporations who are parties to any existing combination or conspiracy to monopolize the interstate or foreign commerce or trade of the United States, or the commerce or trade between the States and any Territory or the District of Columbia, in any of the articles aforesaid, and no purchase of structural steel, ship plates, or machinery shall be made at a price in excess of a reasonable profit above the actual cost of manufacture. But this limitation shall in no case apply to any existing contract.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Pennsylvania is first entitled to recognition.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I know something about costs in the Government departments, as I have been with a Government department in a certain capacity for a number of years. I know something about the plan of making up costs by the Government. I want to say right here, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that I would not accept any cost established by any department of the United States Government unless some outside auditing committee went over it in order to prove whether it was correct or not. The gentleman tells us that there are estimates of costs of ships made by the Government, and then they proceed to build them, and that they build them for less than the estimate. Everybody knows that when they make an estimate of cost on anything the Government makes it high enough, so that they can get an appropriation in order to finish it, but that is not proof of the reduction in cost. The only way you can prove an estimate is by bidding by outside parties as to the actual cost of any proposition. That estimate business reminds me of some of these clothing advertisements that we see on the pages of the newspapers, reading:

These pants were $4; reduced to $2.99 to-day.

You see that every once in a while. The price is put up, and then they are sold at the actual regular price. And it is called a reduction.

As proof of what I say, the private manufacturers of munitions—and this is known to most everybody, as it has been in every newspaper—employed United States officers connected with the War and Navy Departments to operate their plants down here in New Jersey and throughout the country, assuming by the showing made to the Government that the officers know about the costs. And we find from the newspapers-and the fact was brought out on this floor—the fact that every one of them who had been proving to the Government how cheaply they could make any article, proved failures when they went into the employ of a private manufacturer.

Then gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] showed to you or pointed the way of costs in the Government. You have to take the article, the time in which it takes to make the article, and then count the overhead and all other costs. The money invested and the cost of the plant have to be charged up against that particular time in which you are making an article; and that is the only proof. One time it will cost more than at another, because it takes longer, perhaps, to make it. So that is the only plan on which you can ascertain the real cost. And yet, gentlemen, we find that there are certain men on this floor who have been insisting upon and have been putting in every bill a provision against what they are pleased to call the stop-watch system against the taking of the actual time that is required to make an article. How in the world are you going to ascertain what it costs to make an article? I am for a retirement proposition, and I think that legislation is an enemy to it. We see staggering in every department here-

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GARLAND. I have only a minute. If the gentleman will go up to any department of the Government he will find old men and old women staggering around there with whom the young, able fellow must be compared in his work. No wonder it costs the Government money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KEATING. I wanted to ask the gentleman if the gentleman, in his judgment, considered the Taylor system a good thing for the workers of this country?

Mr. GARLAND. I never heard of "the Taylor system."

Mr. KEATING. Does the gentleman mean to say—
Mr. GARLAND. On this floor there was the question of the stop-watch system introduced, but no Taylor system.

Mr. KEATING. Does the gentleman mean to say to the House and the country that he knows nothing about the Taylor efficiency system?

Mr. GARLAND. I do not know anything about Mr. Taylor.

know about the efficiency system.

Mr. KEATING. Do you believe in the stop watch being used?

Mr. GARLAND. I believe in taking the time that is consumed in making an article, in order to get the real cost of it. [Applause.]

Mr. KEATING. Do you believe in using the stop watch on the workers in Government and private plants in this country?

Mr. GARLAND. I believe in using such means of ascertaining time as may be necessary in order to determine the cost to the Government of making an article, and that is what you do not believe in. [Applause.]

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman is mistaken as to my position.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND] has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SMITH of Idaho: After line 12 insert, on page 62: "That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to have collected and preserved for distribution upon application to the public schools of the country, for preservation and display, the discarded flags and emblems of the United States used in the Navy, when they are no longer serviceable."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman from Tennessee reserve the point of order a moment?

Mr. PADGETT. I reserve it.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, under existing regulations the flags that are used in the Navy and also in the Army, when they become soiled to such an extent that they are no longer serviceable, are discarded, collected together, and destroyed. It seems to me that these flags, instead of being destroyed, should be distributed among the public schools throughout the country with a view of inculcating in the youth a spirit of patriotism, and where, I am sure, they would excite greater pride in our Nation's institutions and achievements. [Applause.] There is no good reason why these flags and emblems should be destroyed, when in most instances they would be serviceable on a public-school building or used for decorative purposes in the schoolroom when no longer suitable, because of discoloration or wear, for use for official purposes. I trust my amendment may be accepted by the gentleman in charge of the bill and allow the House to vote upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no part of any sum herein appropriated under "Increase of the Navy" shall be used for the payment of any clerical, drafting, inspection, or messenger service, or for the pay of any of the other classified force under the various bureaus of the Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SEARS. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, about what? Mr. SEARS. About the present preparedness proposition; the preparedness of this country and other countries Mr. MANN. Would not the gentleman just as lief talk on the pension appropriation bill in general debate?

Mr. SEARS. I never have talked on the pension appropriation bill in general debate or on any other. As my remarks are on the naval bill, which we are now considering, I think now is the time to make them.

Mr. MANN. It will be taken up right away, as I understand. The general debate on the pension bill, I presume, will follow

Mr. SEARS. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that it might affect some votes, although I fear not, on the present

Mr. MANN. I know. It is general debate on the bill. I do not care about the 15 minutes. But if it is effective it is legitimate debate. We expected to finish this bill last Thursday, but we did not finish it then, nor did we finish it on Friday, nor on Saturday, nor yesterday. We may not finish it to-day at the present rate of progress.

Mr. SEARS. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I did not insist the other day on my time, because so many others seemed anxious to speak.

Mr. PADGETT. The Chairman has endeavored and labored and persuaded and tried to get the bill expedited, and has asked time and again to close debate, even going to the extent of moving to close debate. But if gentlemen have something they want to discuss, I do not want to oppose them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida? There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, with an appropriation of approximately $371,000,000 now pending before the House, it seems to me that a request for 15 minutes is not unusual or extreme. I want to congratulate my colleague, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore], for his remarks this morning, and I want to congratulate the minority leader for his numerous statements to the effect that he trusted this country would not get into war.

The reason I have made this request, Mr. Chairman, is because recently from home I received a letter stating the people were excited and believed that in the next few days we would be in war. The second reason is because I have received from a constituent of mine the following letter:

From the daily newspapers we gather that a declaration of war with Germany is inevitable.

I only ask that that part of the letter be inserted. I also received from the chairman of the Democratic committee of Dade County a letter urging the Congress and the people to remain calm and not force this country into a needless war. I will ask, Mr. Chairman, that the letter be published as a part of my remarks.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, with the gentleman year.
Mr. SEARS. Yes.
Mr. EMERSON. How do you expect to convert any votes if you do not read these letters to us? [Laughter.]
Mr. SEARS. The letters are not the main thing, but I will read the letter if the gentleman wants me to, although I am limited to 15 minutes.

Mr. EMERSON. You have 15 minutes in which to convert us. Mr. SEARS. I will read the letter:

DADE COUNTY DEMOCRATIC EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, Miami, Fla., February 6, 1917.

Miami, Fla., February 6, 1917.

Hon. W. J. Sears,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: The stirring events of the last day or so has moved me to write you the result of a partial canvass I have made around the streets of Miami, as to the sentiment regarding the break with Germany and possible war.

Out of 100 people I found 2 who were outspoken for hostillities; 3 who thought the President knew more about the matter than they did, but qualified it by saying that they could not understand why the Nation should be drawn into trouble by a very few people, who insisted on traveling on English and French ships and ships carrying contraband.

Please give the 95 per cent in Dade County your best thought: they band.

Please give the 95 per cent in Dade County your best thought; they have no quarrel with Germany or any other nation; they would be glad to be allowed to continue to prosper; they are ready to defend the United States, but not individuals who evidently are willing to have other people get in trouble for them and their convenience and pleasure.

Yours, truly,

C. D. LEFFLER, Chairman. C. D. LEFFLER, Chairman.

But, Mr. Chairman, the letters were not the main reason why I requested time to make these remarks. I have been asked several times if I was on the Committee on Naval Affairs, and when I said I was not, a look of astonishment appeared on the faces of my colleagues, apparently because I dared to delve into this great question that means so much to the people. the study I have given it I have no apology to make, but I believe the time has come for some man—I had hoped that it would be a statesman of long years and experience-to stand on this floor and tell the American people the exact conditions as they exist and cease trying to frighten our people into believing we are not prepared.

In a report which I hold in my hand, dated January, from Secretary Daniels, I discover that in the English, French, Japanese, Austro-Hungarian, Italian, Russian, German, and Turkish Navies 352 battleships, cruisers, submarines, and so forth, have been destroyed or put out of commission. Of this entire number 284 have been sunk; 171 of these are English; 122 are German.

Mr. PADGETT. Those are not warships. They are commer-

Mr. SEARS. Oh, no; they call them "battleships, submarines," and so forth. I do not know what they are. They say in this report "battleships." I read to you what the Secretary says. He says:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 17, 1917.

Hon. L. P. Padgett, M. C. House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Paddetr: In compliance with the request contained in your letter of January 4, 1917, I am forwarding a photostat copy of a compliation made by the Office of Naval Intelligence showing the menof-war lost during the present war up to this year.

Additional losses have been reported from confidential sources, but can not, for obvious reasons, be given out at the present time.

Sincerely, yours,

And yet, my friends, with the loss of these 352 battleships, I heard one of my colleagues the other day say the American Navy was not in a position to defend itself.

What are the facts? In 1914, the last comparison we can get, we find England stood first, Germany second, the United States third, France fourth, Japan fifth, and Russia sixth. I can not see how, when a nation has lost 171 of its fighting ships, when another nation has lost 122 of its fighting ships, while the Navy of this Nation, that has been at peace with the world, has lost no ships, and, as a matter of fact, has been building ships from 1914 to the present day, should have deteriorated faster than the navies of those nations who are still engaged in war and were engaged in war prior to 1914, and have lost so many of their fighting vessels. I felt that the people of the country should know exactly how we stood along this line. of English battleships sunk you find the Irresistible, of 15,000 tons; you find the King Edward VII, 16,350 tons; the Audacious, of 24,000 tons; the Queen Mary, and so on; and among the Germans you find the Pommern and the Lützow and others equally important. And yet an attempt has been made, and is being made daily, by the press to have the American people believe, intentionally or unintentionally, that they are more poorly prepared than they ever were before.

I am sorry I have to speak so fast, but I only have 15 minutes, It will be hard to convince the citizens of the United States we have deteriorated so fast when I remind them that for the Navy since 1913 appropriations by Congress have been made as follows: $145, 503, 963, 48 149, 763, 563, 45 312, 888, 060, 25 1914 (63d Cong., 2d sess.) ____ 1915 (63d Cong., 3d sess.) ___ 1916 (64th Cong., 1st sess.) ___

608, 155, 587. 18 Total .

I desire to call your attention to the fact, in addition to the above, since 1884 our Government has spent $1,710,706,720.91 in an effort to secure a Navy, and in addition to both of the above figures there is appropriated for the hull alone in this bill $130,600,000. Why have we not secured a Navy? Some one should explain to the country the reason why so much money has been expended, and is being expended, and yet, if we believe the arguments of some, no results have been obtained. Some one should also explain why it is whenever a Navy bill comes before the House all kinds of war talk is engaged in, and every conceivable pressure is brought to bear upon Members of Congress in an effort to secure the passage of said large appropriations.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS.

Mr. SEARS. I will.
Mr. FESS. What proportion of the navy, of the countries which have suffered, has been disabled?

Mr. SEARS. I will answer the gentleman frankly that the figures can not be obtained, because they tell us the information can not be secured. But the chairman of this committee said the other day that it took England, even now, about two or two years and a half to construct a battleship.

Mr. PADGETT. That was under peace conditions.

Mr. FESS. Is it the gentleman's judgment that the five great powers have been substantially harmed by this amount of destruction?

Mr. SEARS. If I had lost 352 battleships, light cruisers, submarines, and so forth, I should think I had been substantially harmed. I believe the gentleman will admit that to be the case.

Mr. FESS. There are no such things as 352 battleships lost. Mr. SEARS. I said battleships, light cruisers, submarines, torpedo boats, destroyers, and so forth. To be frank, I think England has lost eight battleships.

Mr. EAGLE. Out of 82.

Mr. SEARS. No: out of 64. According to the figures for 1914, the United States has 17 superdreadnaughts, the Japanese have 4. The United States has no battle cruisers, and the Japanese have 4. The United States has 22 battleships of the dreadnaught type, while the Japanese have only 12.

Mr. PADGETT. Twenty-two predreadnaughts.

Mr. SEARS. Twenty-two predreadnaughts, and the Japanese We have 10 armored cruisers, they have 13. We have 14 cruisers, and they have 12, showing that we are better prepared These are the figures for 1914. than the Japanese. not get the information since that year. Yet in the face of this showing that we are better prepared than they are, the Japanese question is always raised in this country when some people want extra appropriations for the Navy.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SEARS. In just a minute. We now have five battleships Will the gentleman yield? of the larger type under construction and four contracted for. Besides there are seven ships of the larger type that have been appropriated for but not yet contracted for, and yet in this bill we are asked to make the enormous appropriation of $83,500,000 for battleships and cruisers-and this amount only pays for the hulls-that the chairman of the committee tells us can not, under present conditions, be completed within the next six or eight

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, no.

Mr. SEARS. In addition to the above, the cost of the four battle cruisers provided for at the last session is increased from $16,500,000 to $19,000,000 each, and scout cruisers from $5,000,000 to $6,000,000, a handsome profit for some one. And yet the House refused to place a time limit for the completion of any or all of the above, and in fact voted down an amendment requiring that same should be completed within not exceeding 38 months; although the chairman has stated that England is completing similar ships in two and a half year or less, I submit no business man would enter into a contract without some similar limitation.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Washington. Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington, Speaking about the comparative strength of the Navy of this country and that of Japan, I want to call attention to the fact that while perhaps the gentleman's figures are correct-though I think he has left out about four battleships that Japan has recently constructed

Mr. SEARS. You can not get the figures since 1914.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. My information is that four battleships have recently been launched in Japan. Anyway, I want to call attention to the fact that so far as the Pacific coast is concerned we are practically defenseless. We have no battleship squadron over there, never have had, and there is no prospct that we ever will have.

Mr. SEARS. I can see no reason why some of our battleships are not on the Pacific, and I sincerely trust the gentleman is in error when he says "There is no prospect that we ever will have" any on the Pacific. If I can assist him, I will gladly do so.

I can not at this time go into the hundreds of merchant vessels that have been sunk, as my time will not permit.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I want to inject this statement: That according to the statements of the experts before our committee, if our fleet was five times as large as it is they would not spread it out all over the ocean, but would operate it together from the same base

Mr. SEARS. I thank my colleague [Mr. Callaway] for the information.

Mr. Chairman, as a small boy whenever I was scared I began to whistle to keep up my courage, and if I dared to look over my shoulder more than twice, regardless of whatever bravery might have, my feet took me away from the spot as rapidly as I could go. And remembering this I want to say, unless some of the papers of this country cease trying to alarm and thus drive the American people into a panic-stricken condition, if we should go to war-God grant we never will-we can not win victories. And this certainly should not be done when the facts are to the contrary.

It is needless for me to remind the Members of this House of the result of the Mexican War, because history has written too well how that war came out. It is needless for me to remind you of the War of 1776, for again history records the result. Yet I say, without fear of successful contradiction, that no people were more unprepared than were those pioneer people of 1776. In 1812 Americans aimed with a true eye and shot with accuracy, and history again records the result of that war. 1898, though Spain never sank the Maine, again history records the outcome of that war. In each and every one of these wars the Stars and Stripes were victorious. Yet we were not prepared then, and for some reason some would have you believe we are not prepared now. Mr. Chairman, I will not refer to 1861-1865. Permit me only to say that those years produced to this country Grant and Lee, and hundreds of others too numerous to name. Our country has given us a George Washington, an Abraham Lincoln, a Jeff Davis, and hundreds of others whose names are a glorious memory, and I for one will not believe that all of the blue blood that coursed through their veins has been exhausted. I for one refuse to believe that the young American manhood of to-day has degenerated until they are only a set of mollycoddles, who can be whipped by any nation on God's green earth. [Applause.] I sincerely trust are only a set of monycodies, who can be windled by any nation on God's green earth. [Applause.] I sincerely trust that this country will remain at peace, I believe it will remain at peace, and I want to congratulate our President for keeping us out of war in the past. I firmly believe when he stands at the window and looks across the Potomac, and loses sight for the moment of the scare and incling headlines, he will remember the property and him for another four years and ber the people who indorsed him for another four years, and that he will continue to keep us out of war as long as he can do so with honor to this country. [Applause.] But as I said in my last campaign, Mr. Chairman, that my people might know how I stood, I would not be a Member of Congress who was invincible in time of peace, but invisible in times of war; and if it ever become necessary for me to vote for war, I told my constituents that I would offer my services along with them to fight for the flag that they, as well as myself, love so well. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I will not discuss our present Secretary of the Navy. He needs no defense at my hands, and history will record him in his true light, a friend of the people and his country.

I am not opposed to a reasonable amount of preparedness, but I am opposed to this bill, because to my mind it is not in the interest of preparedness. I reach this conclusion, first, because the House refused to accept the time limit of 38 months for the completion of the vessels from the date same might be contracted for; in fact, they failed to put any time limit for the completion of said vessels. Second, I believe the present war has fully demonstrated that we need more submarines and not so many large battleships, and the House refused to accept an amendment with this end in view. There are other reasons why I am opposed to this bill, some of which were explained in my previous remarks, but I will not take time to go into those matters at present.

Mr. Cooper of Wisconsin was recognized.

Mr. PADGETT. How much time does the gentleman wish?
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Five minutes will be ample.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Sears], who has just taken his seat, spoke somewhat carelessly, I thought, about the possibility of our country becoming a party to the great war across the sea. In expressing his willingness to enter the war, the gentleman did not seem to me really to appreciate what his statement means. But the London Times understands what it means for this Nation to be to-day in the situation in which the President has placed it by severing diplomatic relations with Germany. Let me ask the attention of the gentleman from Florida to an excerpt from an editorial in that paper.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not yield in the five minutes allowed me. In the London Times appeared this solemn and significant editorial statement:

"The act of President Wilson is an event of measureless importance in the history of mankind. Whatever the immediate consequences of the breach, a new chapter is opened for the New World and the Old. For the first time since it became a great power the United States has directly intervened in a European war—a course pregnant with untold results hereafter.

Mark those words-"a course pregnant with untold results hereafter.'

If we become a party to the war, are we to take part in the terms of settlement when the bloody cataclysm has ended? The President, in his address to the Senate before the severance of diplomatic relations, said that we, of course, would have nothing to do with the terms of settlement; but, according to the London Times, and if we are to help fight out this war, will we not have something to do with them? After we have fought, after soldiers whom we send across the sea have been killed, after our ships have been sunk and our sailors drowned, are we to join in the company around the table when the final settlement comes?

Who owns the London Times? Lord Northcliffe, whom I heard the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] mention as I entered the Chamber this morning. this reminds me, Mr. Chairman, that in the New Republic there recently appeared an article—"The problem of North-cliffe"—by Norman Angell, an English publicist and editor of distinction, in which he calls attention to the fact that Lord Northcliffe, or the trust of which he is the head, owns and controls 60 newspapers, magazines, and periodicals in England alone. And I have been told by a newspaper editor of wide information, and one in whose word I have confidence, that Lord Northcliffe has a controlling financial interest in a leading paper in Holland, from which we see editorial excerpts re-printed almost every day in this country, and that he has also a controlling interest in the Novoe Vremya, the chief daily newspaper in Petrogard, Russia.

I have only time remaining to read again the grave comment of the London Times:

"For the first time since it became a great power, the United States has directly intervened in a European war—a course pregnant with untold results hereafter." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no part of any sum appropriated by this act shall be used for any expense of the Navy Department at Washington, D. C., unless specific authority is given by law for such expenditure.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which, by order of the committee, I was to do when we returned to page 5.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PADGETT: Page 5, after line 7, insert as a Amendment offered by Mr. Padgett: Page 5, after line 7, insert as a separate paragraph:

"To enable the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to secure, by purchase, condemnation, donation, or otherwise, such basic patent or patents as they may consider necessary to the manufacture and development of aircraft in the United States and its dependencies for governmental and civil purposes under such regulations as the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, $1,000,000: Provided, That such arrangements may be made in relation to the purchase of any basic patent connected with the manufacture and development of aircraft in the United States as in the judgment of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy will be of the greatest advantage to the Government and to the development of the industry: Provided further, That in the event there shall be pending in court litigation involving the validity of said patent or patents bond, with good and approved security in an amount sufficient to indemnify the United States, shall be required, payable to the United States, conditioned to repay to the United States the amount paid for said patent or patents in the event said patent or patents are finally adjudged invalid."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentle-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. This amendment authorizes the condemnation of the basic aircraft patents for governmental and civil purposes. What is meant by the term "civil pur-

Mr. PADGETT. For use of the public under such regulations as Congress may see fit to authorize when the Government becomes the owner.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that the Government can condemn property in order to give it to the public, and not use it for governmental purposes?

Mr. PADGETT. I think the Government can condemn it and acquire the ownership for public use; that it is not limited to the Government use after the Government becomes the owner of it. It is not restricted to the Government in using it exclusively for itself.

Mr. MANN. That has nothing to do with the question. When we condemn property the Government has to show its right to commence condemnation proceedings. Can the Government condemn property except for Government uses?

Mr. PADGETT. I think not, except for public uses. I think could condemn property for a public use. Mr. MANN. What kind of a public use?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, like the condemnation of land for a railway.

Mr. MANN. Railways are governmental uses. What right has the Government to condemn property for civil purposes, not meaning governmental uses at all?

Mr. PADGETT. The Government can condemn it for public use, and when it becomes the owner it can permit the public to use it upon such terms as it sees proper to authorize through legislation.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it can condemn property for the purpose of giving it to the gentleman from Tennessee, wholly apart for governmental use?

Mr. PADGETT. The Government can condemn it if it has any use for the public, and through legislation can authorize it to be a read by the multito be used by the public.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the courts will hold, but certainly no court has ever held that the Government could condemn property except for the use by the Government for public purposes.

Mr. PADGETT. There can be a public civil use, which is illustrated in condemning land for railroads and the condemnation for rights of way and public parks. They are uses by the civil population.

Mr. MANN. That is entirely apart from this question.
Mr. PADGETT. They occur to me as good illustrations.
Mr. MANN. The purpose here is, as indicated by the report of the Secretary of the Navy, to condemn the basic patents in order to give the people the use of them.

Mr. PADGETT. No; not to give it to them, but, if they condemn it, the United States would be the owner just as any individual would be the owner, and the control of that ownership would be vested in the Government.

Mr. MANN. I am directing the gentleman's attention to the language in the amendment. My judgment is that it renders doubtful the right of the Government to condemn it at all by including this language, "for civil purposes."

Mr. PADGETT. Perhaps it is not necessary to have that in there, and if it casts any doubt upon it, it would not interfere with anything to strike out "for civil purposes. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. The last proviso is that if the basic patents are in dispute, and they are in dispute, I believe, the Government shall require the owners of the patents to furnish a bond to the United States to protect the United States. How can you condemn property, and then after having condemned it require the owner to give you a bond before he turns it over to

Mr. PADGETT. That can not be done, but we were assured in the hearings by Dr. Walcott, who had been negotiating with these people, that it could be consummated by negotiations.

Mr. MANN. But here is the point that I am getting at, so that the gentleman will understand. It is perfectly patent to me, though I may not be correct, that you can not buy this property for a million dollars by private contract. What it will cost in the end I do not know, but when you go to condemn property you have to have legislation that permits the condemnation proceedings to be carried on, and if you provide as a basis of your right to condemn property something you can not do, that is a defense to your condemnation proceeding which will defeat it.

Mr. PADGETT. Dr. Walcott stated that with the negotiations that have taken place with the present owners of the patents-the Wrights have transferred all of their ownership to a corporation-it has been indicated that the whole right to the patent could be secured for not exceeding $1,000,000, and perhaps for less than that, and they were expecting to secure it by negotiations, and that the bond matter was suggested by Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, by this provision we are launching the Government for the first time in its history into an untried sea of adventure. If we adopt this policy to-day, I fear we shall be called upon frequently in the future to take similar action. Whenever the patentee of some device which is needed by the Government asks a reasonable royalty for its use, the Government officials will come to Congress and ask for a large appropriation with which to purchase the rights to the patent. What are the facts in the case? It is admitted that this patent is disputed in the courts and that for many months, if not many years, there have been pending in the district court of the United States in the city of New York a suit brought by and on behalf of the original owners, the Wrights, against the Curtiss Co, for an infringement by the Curtiss Co. of the basic patents. These are sought to be purchased by the Government or condemned by the Curtiss Co. ment or condemned by the Government under the amendment under consideration. It has been testified to, and it has not been disputed, that whenever that case comes to trial the owners of the patent ask to have the hearing deferred. They virtually, by their action in court, admit that they have questionable ground on which to base their claim to a patent.

Mr. PADGETT. The case has been tried in the lower court. and the lower court decided in favor of the validity of the patent and against the Curtiss people, the defendants. There was an appeal taken by the Curtiss people, and that appeal is

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman deny that whenever that appeal has been brought up for consideration it has been deferred, and why? Because the claimants to the patent presumably have little faith whatever in their claim. Even Dr. Walcott, who was the original promoter of this provision—and he only conceived it since the recent unsettled condition in the country due to the break in diplomatic relations with Germanyadmits that there is grave doubt whether there is any virtue whatever in this basic patent, because it is claimed that it is not original, and that the feature of novelty is lacking in the Wright patents. The Wrights have recently sold their patent rights to a company known as the Wright-Martin Co. for over a million dollars, and that company is capitalized for $5,000.000. The gentleman from Tennessee is entirely in error, and it is borne out by the hearings before the committee—and I have read them all, otherwise I would not make the statement so positively-in his statement that the present owners of the so-called Wright patents refused to sell the patent rights to the Government for such use as it wished for governmental and private purposes for $1,000,000. They are willing to allow the Government to use the patents for a million dollars and to have private contractors pay royalties for their use.

What is the exigency that demands the purchase by the Government of these patents? In the hearings before the gentleman's own committee—and I call his attention to that fact, because perhaps he may not have that matter so clearly in of thought.

mind-when Capt. McKean, the head of the Aviation Service, was before the committee, he testified as to the ease with which he could obtain these airships. He said, at page 483:

Some of them are coming pretty fast. We are getting certain types now pretty fast.

In all the hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs and before the Military Affairs Committee, which run into numerous pages, there is not one line of testimony to show that the Government has had any difficulty whatever in obtaining these airships for the use of the Navy or the Army.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. FARR. Does not Capt. McKean say that we are getting them as fast as one a month?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no.

Mr. FARR. Yes; he does.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will ask the gentleman to point that out.

Mr. FARR. It is in the testimony.
Mr. STAFFORD. I am pointing out that he said that some of them are coming pretty fast and that they were getting certain types pretty fast now. Neither Capt. Squier, who is the head of the Aviation Service, connected with the Army, nor Capt. McKean, who is in charge of this service, connected with the Navy, made any complaint whatever as to the difficulty in obtaining these airships for the Government. I go further. Even Dr. Walcott, when he testified in January in the regular hearings before the Naval Affairs Committee, did not complain about the difficulty of getting the airships for the use of the Navy has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. What did the patentees ask from the Government? Not an exorbitant sum. They asked for a royalty of only 5 per cent. Anyone can see that that is not an exorbitant sum.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield at that point?
Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield.
Mr. PADGETT. Dr. Walcott says it is generally recognized among the profession that 2 per cent is a large royalty instead of 5 being a reasonable royalty.

Mr. STAFFORD. If anyone will read the testimony of Dr. Walcott before the committee he will come to the conclusion, with all due deference to Dr. Walcott, who is an emineut scientist, but not a business man, that he had little information as to the willingness of the owners to transfer the patent rights to the Government. The advisory committee on aeronautics, of which he is the head, that considered this question, comprises nothing but scientists, men connected with educational institu-tions, and there is not one business man connected with it.

The question before the committee in the adoption of this amendment is purely a business one. We have a right as a Government under the act passed in 1906 to appropriate for the use of the Government any patent and use it for governmental purposes and compensate the patentee in the Court of Claims a reasonable allowance for the use of that patent. We have provided here that in case of war or other exigency in the determination of the President he may commandeer the private yards for the use of the Government. If there is an exigency arising in reference to our present strained relations with Germany the President can commandeer any private establishment and can direct-

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not in the middle of a sentence. He can direct their use for the making of these airships and can use any patent or device whatever in the use of them, and then the patentee can have the right to go to the Court of Claims and have the damages assessed, and in that suit the Government has the right to set up as a defense any ground of infringement or validity of the patent. I respectfully submit to the committee we should not launch into this untried experiment. There is no occasion for it. In case the Government was in need of airships that could not be obtained by private employment, that would be one thing, but there is no showing whatsoever in the hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs or in the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs of any difficulty of getting these airships in such quantities as are needed. only argument of Dr. Walcott is this

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield when he has finished the sentence?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield before proceeding on this line

Mr. FARR. The evidence was this: That with a tremendous need for airships, with all the facilities we have in this country we can not build more than 100 to 125 a month.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, if anyone has studied the situation as to the needs of the Government, both of the Army and the Navy, he will agree that 100 to 125 is more than the Government needs.

Mr. FARR. No; a thousand we need.
Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield any further at this moment. The reason advanced by Dr. Walcott that the Government purchase these is not that the Government needs them in obtaining additional airships, but we should come to the relief of owners or prospective inventors of improvements on the basic patents, so that the industry may be developed. There is a concern in Boston, backed by some money, that can not go ahead or is unwilling to go ahead with the payment of this royalty to the present owners of the Wright patents. The terms that the present owners of the Wright patent insist upon when it is used by another are that a payment of $10,000 on the base of a royalty of 5 per cent on the valuation of output, and anything above that output they would pay a royalty of 5 per

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield for a moment—the gentleman wants to have the facts clearly before the committee?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. The evidence before the Committee on Naval Affairs was that the Wright-Martin Co. insist upon a payment of $10,000 cash and 5 per cent on all the sales up to $200,000 a year. Those are the royalty terms being insisted upon by the Wright-Martin Co. that control the basic patents on flying machines.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I read the testimony, they require $10,000 as a condition precedent to the use of the patents

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Ten thousand dollars a

Mr. STAFFORD. Ten thousand dollars a year.

above $200,000?

Mr. STAFFORD. And if they manufacture devices above a valuation of $200,000 they are to pay in excess of that 5 per cent. It is a question whether at this time we should purchase a doubtful patent for a million dollars. We certainly have no right to take the patent for private use. We have already provided in the commandeering section the power to appropriate these patents, and there is the law of 1906 that enables the patentee to recover only the reasonable value for the use of the patent in the Court of Claims.

Mr. TALBOTT. It may be a doubtful patent, and if we acquire a doubtful patent and it is declared to be invalid we lose something

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing to be gained by the Government, looking only from a governmental standpoint. If we adopt this policy now, then as to every invention involving, for example, a submarine, a gun, or a basic patent of any kind, we will be called upon perchance by some advisory committee to appropriate an amount of money the patentee may see fit to ask of us, for the reason, as advanced in this instance, that the industry will thereby be developed.

Mr. BURNETT. I would like to know if this Aero Club that has been inflicting so much of its literature on the Members of Congress is in this business.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the testimony of Dr. Walcott before the Naval Affairs Committee-and this afterthought of his was since strained diplomatic relations have arisen—he stated it was but the opinion of the Advisory Committee on Aeronautics, which, as I said, is composed only of college professors. It is a scheme to aid some private concerns who own patents for improvements on the basic patent, so that they will be relieved of paying a royalty.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, aircraft, heavier-than-air flying machines, were Mr. Chairman, aircraft, heavier-than-air flying machines, were really originated by Dr. S. P. Langley when he was Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution. He did his work and made his investigations and experiments largely out of a fund which we had appropriated to the Army and which was applied by them through Dr. Langley for this purpose. He probably would have made a complete success except for the fact that the House at one time, as I remember, put a provision in the appropriation bill forbidding the use of the appropriation to the Army for this purpose. But he did make a flying machine which flew. The Wright brothers, to whom the country is under great obligations for the brilliant success which they made in putting the flying machine into use, took the ideas of Dr. Langley, and when the matter came into litigation subsequently the old flying machine which Dr. Langley flew was resurrected and put in a state of preservation in the Smithsonian Institution. I do not know how far that flying machine was used in the contest over the patent, but I assume that it was put in evidence in the suit which the Wright brothers had against the Curtiss Co.—I am not sure about the name, though I think I am right—as to the basic patent. My understanding is that that litigation is not finally disposed of. I have had the impression, although I may be entirely wrong about that, that the Wright brothers and the Curtiss Co. had reached or were about to reach a working agreement. It may be desirable for the Government to have the right to let anybody manufacture a flying machine under contract to sell it to the Government, or under a contract with the Government. I am inclined to think that is desirable. And it may be that the amendment offered now will accomplish that purpose.

I am inclined to think that in the end the Wright brothers' patent will not be held valid as to the basic patent if it is finally adjudicated in court. The Wright brothers' patent at the best runs out in six years. I suppose it is true that during the next six years, with the condition of mind that now exists in the country, and I fear is likely to continue, we will have a great many flying machines constructed for or by the Government of the United States. And I am inclined to join in that feeling, though I am not as hysterical as some gentlemen are about it. It is unfortunate that the Government of the United States when it grants a patent on an article to be used mainly by the Government, or which may be useful for the Government as a matter of defensive or offensive action, does not retain the right to use the patent either without compensation or by paying a reasonable compensation for its use. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will not undertake to discuss this question as an expert, but I have given it considerable thought. The aeroplane, or flying machine, evidently is an important factor in all modern warfare and warfare in the future. If a set of individuals control a lot of basic patents all the development of that institution will be controlled by the men who control those basic patents. I call to mind that the Singer Sewing Machine Co., I think, drew a royalty from every other sewing-machine company on earth, because no matter how much improvement they made they still had to use a needle with an eye in the point, and therefore the entire sewing-machine industry of the world was controlled by the man who held a patent, which was that of an eye in the point of a needle. Now, the same condition relates to these inventions, and if the Government paid a million dollars to open these flying machines to public thought, public ingenuity, and allowed this industry to be developed without extortionate royalties, and the public get the benefit of it, I am one of those who believe we had better cut off one or two big battleships and invest the money that way, for it is far more material as a means of defense. I am one of those who believe that the day will come when our aeronautic stations will be dotted all along our coast line, and a survey and a scouting expedition will be made a thousand miles over the ocean to locate an enemy and ascertain how to kill him off if he ever undertakes to land in this country. I say that this necessity is vital, and I want it to go through. [Applause.] The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to just put in the RECORD the form of applications, requirements, and exactions in order to enable a private manufacturer to manufacture aeroplanes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to insert certain documents in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following are the documents referred to:

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, Washington, February 9, 1917.

Hon. LEMUEL P. PADGETT,

Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,

House of Representatives.

I attach hereto a copy of the application for license and form of agreement of the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation, which may also be of service to you in consideration of the suggestions transmitted in my letter of the 6th.

Sincerely, yours, JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

APPENDIX B.

APPLICATION FOR LICENSE AND FORM OF AGREEMENT OF THE WRIGHT-MARTIN AIRCRAFT CORPORATION.

APPLICATION FOR LICENSE AND FORM OF AGREEMENT OF THE WRIGHTMARTIN AIRCRAFT CORPORATION.

Dear Sirs: The title to the basic Wright patent on aeroplanes has just been acquired by Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation. This corporation believes that it is for the best interests of aeronautics that all responsible makers of aeroplanes should be free to conduct their business without danger of suit under this patent. Accordingly a standard form of license agreement has been drawn up, a copy of which is inclosed. It is our intention to grant a license in this form to any corporation that desires to undertake the obligations of the agreement.
In regard to corporations that have in the past manufactured aeroplanes in infringement of this patent, we plan to waive all claims for past damages or profits upon making a payment as outlined in the inclosed application.

If you desire to acquire a license, please read the inclosed papers and return the application and license to us properly executed, together with your check. Royalites that accrue during the balance of this year may be freated as though accruing during January, 1917.

To the manufacturers and corporations whom we accept as licensees under this patent we give the benefit of national publicity carried on by us. This means that everyone interested will thoroughly understand that machines built under this patent employ the universally adopted and basic principles of control for aeroplanes—the Wright patent—which has been sustained. Its new owners do not intend to allow it to be disregarded.

Yours, very truly,

WRIGHT-MARTIN AIRCRAFT CORPORATION,

Agreement made this

Whereas the licensor is the owner of United States Letters Patent No. 821393, issued on May 22, 1906, to Orville and Wilbur Wright, for flying machines, and the licensee is desirous of obtaining a license

S21393, issued on May 22, 1906, to Orville and Wilbur Wright, for flying machines, and the ilcensee is desirous of obtaining a license thereunder:

Now, therefore, it is agreed as follows:

1. The licensor grants to the ilcensee a nonexclusive license to make, seil, and use flying machines embodying the inventions described in said letters patent, together with parts thereof, throughout the United States and its Territories and dependencies, and to make or sell such flying machines and parts thereof within the United States and its Territories and dependencies for use or sale abroad.

2. The licensee admits that said letters patent are good and valid in law and cover all types of heavier-than-air flying machines having one or more supporting planes in which it is possible to vary the lifting power of one wing in relation to the lifting power of the other wing through the medium of wing warping or by the use of one or more allerons or by any other means.

3. The licensor hereby releases the licensee from all claims for past infringement of said patent.

4. In consideration of the foregoing license, the licensee agrees that it will pay to the licensee for the terms of said license 5 per cent of the gross receipts of the licensee or any subsidiary or controlled selling corporation, received in connection with the manufacture, use, or said of said heavier-than-air flying machines, such gross receipts include among other things all sums received for the sale of complete aeroplanes requipped with motors, or parts of aeroplanes, aeroplane engines, instruments used on aeroplanes, or other accessories, together with receipts from aviation exhibitions or aviation schools conducted by the licensee, but it is particularly understood that if the licensee shall sell aeroplanes receipts therefrom. It is further provided that from all such gross receipts therefrom. It is further provided that from the licensor. The licensee for such aeroplanes only shall be 10 per cent of the gross receipts there may be deducted the amount of

The licensee further agrees that on the 10th day of each April, July, October, and January during the terms of this license, it will render to the licensor sworn statements showing its gross receipts in the aeronautical business as defined in paragraph 3 hereof for the preceding quarter year. When any such statement shows that the royal-ties accrued for that portion of the calendar year for which the statement is rendered are in excess of the minimum sum paid in advance for that year, the licensee agrees that at the time it renders such statement to the licensor it will pay to the licensor the amount of such excess, and that in rendering statements for the business done in the balance of that year it will pay the royalty accrued without any deduction.

-, Secretary.

6. The licensee agrees to keep full and complete books of account concerning its aeronautical business as defined in paragraph 4 hereof, and to allow the duly accredited agent of the licensor to inspect such books at all reasonable business hours.

7. The licensee agrees that it will attach to each flying machine it sells under this license a name plate bearing the licensee's name, a serial number, and the statement "Licensed under United States Patent No. 821393 of May 22, 1906."

8. This license shall remain in force until the 23d day of May, 1923, but it is particularly provided that if the licensee shall fall to pay the royalties provided for in paragraph 4 hereof, or to render the statements and make the payments provided for in paragraphs 4 and 5 hereof, the licensee 30 days notice in writing of its intention so to do, unless the breach complained of is remedied within said 30-day period, or (b) of electing that the minimum royalties provided for hereunder for all of the remaining years of the license are forthwith due and payable to the licensor without discount. The election by the licensor of either of the foregoing remedies shall not deprive the licensor of the right to recover any sums due under this agreement.

9. Upon the termination of this license for any cause the licensee agrees to make to the licenseer's aeronautical business but likewise an inventory of all complete or partially completed articles, which if they had been sold would have been the basis for royalty under this agreement, and the licensee agrees to pay royalty on the market value of all such complete or partially completed articles, which if they had been sold would have been the basis for royalty under this agreement, and the licensee agrees to pay royalty on the market value of all such complete or partially completed articles.

10. Nothing in this license is granted (except for the terms on which releases are granted for claims for past infringement), it will notify the licensee and permit it, at its option, to accept such oth

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Page of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20632, the naval appropriation bill, and had instructed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that that committee has had under consideration the naval appropriation bill, and directs him to report it back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hicks] be excused indefinitely, on account of serious illness

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hicks] be excused indefinitely, on account of serious ill-Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it up. will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. OLIVER moves to recommit H. R. 20632 to the Committee on Naval Affairs with instructions to report the same forthwith to the House with the following amendments:

"Strike out all appropriations for 2 of the 3 battleships now carried in the bill and insert in lieu thereof appropriations for the construction of 30 destroyers instead of 15 and for 30 submarines instead of 18, the type and cost of such additional destroyers and submarines to be the same as those now carried in the bill."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit. The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division, and, pending that, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

pending that, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama demands a division and makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty-two gentlemen have risen—

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand for a division and demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama withdraws his demand for a division and demands the yeas and nays. These who favor taking this vote by the yeas and nays will.

Those who favor taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Thirtythree gentlemen have risen in the affirmative—not a sufficient number—and the yeas and nays are denied. The motion to recommit is lost. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MANN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. Those in favor of taking the year and a gentleman from the year and year year.

taking the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Evidently a sufficient number. The Clerk will call the roll. Those who favor the passage of the bill will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 353, nays 23, answered "present" 2, not voting 55, as follows:

corded as voting?

The SPEAKER. In the negative.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Is my colleague [Mr. Chiper-FIELD] recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER. He is not. Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Then I desire to withdraw my vote and to answer present.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the hall listening?

Mr. KENT. No; I was not here. I just came in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INQUIRY UNDER HOUSE RESOLUTION 429.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, on the 17th of January 30 days additional time was allowed to the Committee on Rules for the consideration of resolution 429, commonly known as the leak-inquiry resolution. That time will expire on the 16th. The committee are compelled to take a trip to New York to-night for probably one day, and it is apparent that there will hardly be ample time to prepare a report within the 30 days. By instruction of the Committee on Rules I therefore ask unanimous consent that 10 days' additional time be allowed the committee for the consideration of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Pou], by authority of the Committee on Rules, asks unanimous consent that the time limit on the so-called leak investigation be extended 10 days. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CERTAIN INDIANS IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 8092) confirming patents heretofore issued to certain Indians in the State of Washington.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report. The Clerk read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8092) confirming patents heretofore issued to certain Indians in the State of Washington, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

JNO. H. STEPHENS, C. D. CARTER, Managers on the part of the House. KEY PITTMAN, Moses E. Clapp, HARRY LANE, Managers on the part of the Senate.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Stephens of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 20748, making appropria-tions for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, and pending that motion I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] if we can reach some agreement as to time for general debate.

Mr. CANNON. I have had one or two applications on this side for a little time for general debate.

Mr. MANN. I had expected to take about half an hour this afternoon, but I had rather postpone it and take it on the military bill.

Mr. KAHN. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] half an hour in the general debate on the military bill. Mr. CANNON. There will be general debate on the military bill, will there?

Mr. MANN. Probably three hours on a side.

I understand that we are to have three hours Mr. KAHN. on a side, six hours in all, on Thursday. To-morrow being Calendar Wednesday, it will not be called up then.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. OAKEY] wants five minutes

Mr. RAUCH. How much time does the gentleman want? Mr. CANNON. I fancy 30 minutes will be sufficient, and I do not know that there will be any time desired on this side beyond the five minutes for the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. OAKEY].

Mr. MANN. Let me suggest to my colleague that the Printing

Committee has a lot of chicken feed that we all want. Mr. BARNHART. That has been waiting a long time.

Mr. MANN. The Printing Committee probably will not have chance to get in with those resolutions for some time unless they come in to-day. Why not let them in this afternoon?

Mr. CANNON. I intended to ask for at least an hour on this side, but frankly I have no objection to the passage of the pension appropriation bill. I intended to discuss other matters, but I have no desire to embarras; the Committee on Printing or to take the time of the House. I fancy we are unanimously in favor of this pension appropriation bill. In fact, it would be a tolerably bold man on either side of the House who would oppose making appropriations to pay pensions under the law. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Oakey] can get his five minutes under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. He does not wish to discuss the bill. He wishes his time under general debate.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose you allow this side 20 minutes-and

I may not desire to consume that much time.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Speaker, pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate on the pension bill be limited to 35 minutes, 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Can-NON] and 15 minutes by myself.

Mr. BARNHART. Reserving the right to object, the Committee on Printing has an accumulation of some 25 or 30 little resolutions, insignificant in general but of much importance to individual Members. The committee has been trying to take up these resolutions at some time which would not interfere with any of the appropriation bills. It has seemed impossible to do We are now nearing the end of this Congress. these resolutions must be sent to the Senate, and unless we can put them through in the very near future it will be impossible to have them considered by the Senate before the close of the present session of Congress. They will require probably 30 or 45 minutes, or if no one interferes not more than 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. They will take more time than that. Mr. BARNHART. Well, an hour; and if we can make an arrangement to get through with the general debate and then give the Printing Committee the balance of the time, that will be agreeable to the Printing Committee.

Mr. MANN. I think nobody will contest the right of the gentleman after the pension bill is out of the way. The military bill is not to be brought in to-day.

Mr. BARNHART. The right of the Printing Committee will be contested if the pension appropriation bill occupies the balance of the evening and the Military Affairs Committee want to come in to-morrow

Mr. RAUCH. The pension bill is short, and I know of no objection to it.

Mr. MURRAY. Let us vote "aye" on it. Mr. CANNON. I refrain from taking time upon this bill for the reason that this session draws to a close, and I would be glad to see the necessary legislation from every standpoint enacted before the 4th of March. [Applause.] I stand to help to expedite that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. RAUCH] asks that the general debate on the pension appropriation bill be limited to 35 minutes

Mr. RAUCH. I understand that the gentleman from Illinois has withdrawn his request for time.

Mr. CANNON. Except for five minutes for the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Oaksy].

Mr. RAUCH. Therefore I ask that general debate on this bill be limited to 20 minutes

Mr. MANN. Make it 15 minutes.

Mr. RAUCH. Be limited to 15 minutes, 5 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] and 10 minutes by myself. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that debate on this bill be confined to 15 minutes, 5 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] and 10 minutes to be controlled by himself. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. RAUCH, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20748) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, with Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20748) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from Indiana wish me to use my time now?

Mr. RAUCH. Yes.
Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes, all the time I have, to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Oakey].

Mr. OAKEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Illinois for the courtesy he has extended to me. My apology to you is that I simply want to make a correction in the Record which has worked out an injustice to myself and to a part of my district. I shall endeavor to be very brief, I assure you. In the bill reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was an appropriation for a town in my district, Manchester by name. The bill carried with it an appropriation of $40.000 for a new building in that town where the Government had owned for some years a site, a lot of land 120 by 130 feet. The committee asked me to choose what town I would like to have an appropriation made for and I selected this town, consisting of two communities, Manchester and South Manchester. I presented to them as carefully as I could the figures concerning these communities. I found that they had recommended the sum of $40,000, which I thought was entirely too small. I wrote them, calling upon them the second or third time, and asked them to increase it because it seemed to me that the figures for this great, live community warranted more. The Supervising Architect's Office advised an appropriation of $45,000, but the committee made it $40,000. I let it go for $40,000.

Much to my surprise I found in the back part of the RECORD the other day two criticisms that were made against this appropriation by Members of this House-one by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] and the other by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good]—putting this appropriation into the porkbarrel list.

All of this came, my friends, because I believed that the Supervising Architect's Office was not aware that the appropriation asked for was for both of these towns rather than for one, and therefore, peculiarly enough, they selected the one which is very much smaller than the other and gave to the patriotic gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Iowa figures on the small town. After the Supervising Architect had recommended an appropriation of $45,000, which was reduced to $40,000, they gave him the figures on the small town and thus put the community in the undesirable list of appropriations.

Mr. GLYNN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. OAKEY. I will yield to my colleague.
Mr. GLYNN. The gentleman has stated that this appropriation was for two towns; I think he means for two post offices in one town.

Mr. OAKEY. It is two communities now, and when we combine them, as far as the post office is concerned, it will be one town. The cause of this series of errors was that one of these communities was named Manchester and the combined community, when they get the new post office, if they ever do, will be also Manchester.

Now, my friends, the population of this community is approximately 18,000. The postal receipts for the last fiscal year were thirty-three thousand and some hundred dollars. grand list is twenty-one million. They do not manufacture shoddy in Manchester, they manufacture silk. [Applause.] It is one of the greatest silk manufacturing communities in the world. They are not making subterfuge for the purpose of asking something they are not entitled to, they make American flags. [Applause.]

These communities are not only the most progressive, but the most beautiful and the most up-to-date communities in America, and are modest in asking for an appropriation with these figures. I protest, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, against this modest appropriation being put into the Record, in the back part when it was not read in the House, as a pork-barrel proposition, when it is a porterhouse steak. [Laughter and applause.1

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, this bill comes from the Committee on Appropriations and carries the amount of $160,060,000. It is in accordance with the estimates of the Commissioner of Pensions, and I ask for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk, in reading the bill for amendment, read as follows:

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons, pensions, for services rendered within the fiscal year 1918, $60,000: Provided, That hereafter the fee for each examination made at the claimant's residence by an examining surgeon of the Bureau of Pensions for use in a pension claim shall be $4 and in lieu of actual traveling expenses there shall be paid 15 cents per mile for the distance actually traveled each way, but not exceeding the distance by the most direct route between the surgeon's office and the claimant's home.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. RAUCH. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the reason for incorporating this language in the bill is given by the Commissioner of Pensions as follows: Under the decision of the comptroller, these examining surgeons when they visit the home of a claimant are required to make a detailed report giving the items of the expenses they incur in making the trip, and it has resulted, according to the testimony of the Commissioner of Pensions, in a large and useless amount of details which he thinks can be avoided by adopting the language carried in the bill. He does not ask for an additional appropriation on account of this change in the language.

Mr. MANN. He will if it becomes necessary.
Mr. RAUCH. Yes; of course. As illustrative, they gave the committee some of the items set forth in the returns of one of the examining surgeons. He charges up for engine oil 25 cents, kerosene oil 1 cent, transmission grease for bearings 1 cent, cup grease 1 cent, and so on, with a number of very small items, to which under the law he is entitled to be paid, but which, according to the decision of the comptroller, must be set forth in detail. No doubt he drove an automobile.

There is another feature in connection with the system under the present law and that is the large expense incurred in making some of these trips when an automobile is hired, or a taxicab for instance.

They told the committee that some trips amounted to as much as fifteen or twenty dollars under the present law.

Mr. MANN. Then they ought to discharge such an examining surgeon. If the surgeons are working them, all the commissioner has to do is to fire them. He has that authority.

Mr. RAUCH. I do not think there is any doubt about that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman speaks of a man going in an automobile that he owns. I take it there would have to be a showing made, first, as to what is the most direct route between the surgeon's office and the claimant's home; second, the distance actually traveled each way, and that will be some burden, but 15 cents a mile is a pretty large charge. We have had a controversy in this House for years as to whether or not we should be paid 20 cents a mile for bringing our families into Washington and taking them home. The surgeon's family does not have to go on these trips with him, yet it is proposed here by unanimous consent to allow 15 cents a mile each way, or 30 cents a mile one way, to a man who rides in an automobile, a train, or any other way, by himself, nobody accompanying him, for the distance between his office and the claimant's home, though, as a matter of fact, he may visit three or four claimants at the same time, without going to his office at all.

Mr. RAUCH. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that the suggestion by the Commissioner of Pensions was a fee of $5 and a mileage allowance of 20 cents.

Mr. MANN. He got that from our allowance, I suppose.

Mr. RAUCH. He did not so state.
Mr. MANN. Oh, no; but that is what the basis of it was. There are a great many things that he does not know. He does not know that that allowance is supposed to cover the cost of a man's family coming to and going home from Washington.

Mr. RAUCH. The language is clearly subject to the point of

Mr. MANN. There is no doubt about that, but what I am trying to do is to see if we can not cut down the 15 cents to a reasonable amount.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, you have got to have enough to compensate the surgeon, otherwise he will not perform.

Mr. MANN. There are plenty of them who will perform if he does not.

Mr. CANNON. The evidence was that they now perform in cities like Chicago and New York very largely for the sake of having a certificate to hang up in their offices. I was under the impression that this would reduce the amount that the surgeons receive after hearing all that was told about it.

Mr. MANN. It would reduce some of the amounts.

Mr. CANNON. I mean in the aggregate.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the city of Chicago is a large city, and the surgeon would have his office down town. He might live 10 miles out. He may visit half a dozen or a dozen of these people 10 miles out, and under this provision he is to get 30 cents a mile one way for each claimant for the distance between his office and the home of the claimant, though he may not travel it at all. Fifteen cents a mile each way to ride in an automobile is considerable. I dare say it does not cost anybody who owns a Packard that much money.

Mr. RAUCH. Or a Ford. If the gentleman cares to offer an amendment reducing it to 10 cents a mile, I shall not object.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have had experience, and I think, taking everything into consideration, the wages of the driver, the wear and tear of the machine, I am inclined to think that from 35 to 40 cents a mile would about cover it.

Mr. MANN. That has not been my experience.

Mr. RAUCH. I will say to the gentleman that the amount of money expended for this work is not great, of course, in comparison with the other work performed by the Bureau of Pensions.

Mr. MANN. I think 10 cents a mile is enough.
Mr. RAUCH. They do say they have great difficulty in securing surgeons to perform this work.

Mr. MANN. All they need to do is to advertise that fact. have had great difficulty at times in giving proper excuses for not getting men appointed on the board.

Mr. RAUCH. Does tht gentleman desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. MANN. I do if it is going to be agreed to. Mr. RAUCH. I stated that I would not oppose it. Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman support it?

Mr. RAUCH. Yes; I will support it.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order, and move to amend, in line 15, page 2, by striking out the word "fifteen" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "ten."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 15, strike out the word "fifteen" and insert the word ten."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Indiana moves to rise, I desire to announce that I have just been informed that the Speaker of the House is a granddaddy. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if I may be allowed a moment, as a grandfather for 21 years I take great pleasure in welcoming the Speaker of the House to the company of grandfathers-I sometimes say old fool grandfathers. [Laughter.] And I know he is qualified, for he is the recipient of a hat of the vintage of 1852, donated by the gentleman from California [Mr. Kent.] [Laughter.]

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker resumed the chair amid applause.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the House, one touch of nature makes the whole world kin. [Applause.] The happiest moments in my life have been the day I was married, the days my children were born, the day that this, the first of my grandchildren, was born [applause], and I hope there will be many more of them. [Laughter and applause.] The more Americans there are the better the country and the world are off. other happiest day of my life was when I was a student at the Kentucky University, when at the end of the first examination in Greek four of us made the grade of 100 on a scale of 100. [Applause.] That was the first victory I ever won among strangers, and it was a very happy occasion; and from the very bottom of my heart I thank this House for this last evidence of its love and affection for me and mine. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois.
Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20748) and directs me to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.
On motion of Mr. RAUCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. FULLER. There is a little pension bill concerning proof of widowhood in pension cases that will take about two minutes, and I ask unanimous consent now that it may be considered now in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 20353). Is there objection?

Mr. GARDNER. What is the bill?
Mr. STAFFORD. Let the bill be reported.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report by the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20353) concerning proof of widowhood in claims for

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill will be called up in its regular order on Monday

Mr. FULLER. No; there will be no chance to reach it unless it can be passed now. It will not take two minutes. It has a unanimous report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and there can be no objection to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I went over the bill on last unanimous-consent day, and I object.

The SPEAKEP. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. FULLER. It will take but a minute.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Wisconsin has obiccted.

RESOLUTIONS FROM COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a privileged resolution, and, preliminary to the consideration of it, I want to make a very brief statement. The allotment by the Appropriations Committee for the printing of the Congress for the last fiscal year was $1,340,000. Of that three-fourths has been expended; and if the Senate will be as economical up to the close of the session as the House has been we will have been the session as the House has been we will have more than a quarter of a million dollars of this to turn back into the Treasury.

to turn back into the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. I will yield.

Mr. MANN. They have just sent a deficiency estimate for congressional printing, I think, of about half a million dollars.

Mr. BARNHART. If that is correct, it has come from the Senate side and within the past 24 hours.

Mr. MANN. It came from the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. BARNHART. That may be for departmental printing, not for congressional printing.

Mr. MANN. It says congressional printing.
Mr. BARNHART. The report we have from the Government printers shows a balance of $313,862 quite recently.
Mr. MANN. Unless I am very much mistaken—and I might be—the deficiency estimate just received from the Secretary of the Treasury carried several hundred thousand dollars deficiency for congressional printing.

Mr. BARNHART. Well, if that is the situation, it has developed within a very few days; and I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the House has not expended any such amount in the past six months.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BARNHART. I will yield.

SLAYDEN. Has not the Senate recently enacted some legislation in the way of economy of expenditures by setting some limit on the material that is to go into the RECORD?

Mr. BARNHART. The Senate passed an abbreviated printing bill, the one that the House has considered twice and passed once and the Senate has passed once, and that was passed at a night session, placing a limitation upon publication in the Con-GRESSIONAL RECORD and providing for the distribution of documents in a somewhat modified way from the plan which we proposed in the bill we have heretofore enacted, giving to each Member of Congress the documents that he needs rather than apportion to him an allotment of all documents printed, many of which he can not possibly use.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Are we going to have an opportunity to vote on such wise legislation?

Mr. BARNHART. We will have an opportunity to vote upon such wise legislation if somebody does not interpose an objection to unanimous consent, or the Rules Committee will give the Committee on Printing a rule to bring in such a bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The RECORD of to-day has about 150 pages

Mr. BARNHART. I will say in that connection that a matter came up day before yesterday in which a Member of the House asked unanimous consent to insert some reprint in the RECORD, and when I inquired about it I was told it did not amount to very much. But I went and looked up the figures and discovered that that one item, that is, the item of inserting in the RECORD along the one particular line by this one particular Member, amounted to 119 pages, which will cost the Government for the printing alone $3,850, and the franking privilege will be in addition to that. It is a limitation bill on such extraneous matter that the Committee on Printing hopes to be able to get up for consideration and passed within an hour, if we can get the consent of the House to call it up.

OPINION NO. 4229 (H. REPT. NO. 1468).

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution. The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 464.

Resolved, That there shall be printed, for the use of the House of Representatives, 10,000 copies of Opinion No. 4229 of the Interstate Commerce Commission, designated as Document No. 9284, relating to the car-supply investigation, to be distributed to Members of the House through the folding room.

Also, the following committee amendments were read:

Line 2, strike out "10" and insert "5," so that it will read "5,000 copies of Opinion No. 4229."

Line 7, strike out "folding" and insert "document," so that it will read "through the document room."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand the deficiency estimates from the Secretary of the Treasury dated February 5, 1917, and referred in this House to the Committee on Appropriations on February 6, 1917. The first item in it is "Legislative. Public Printer. Public printing and binding: For publlc printing, public binding, and for paper for public printing and binding, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the Congressional Record," and so forth—the same item that is carried by the appropriation bill for congressional printing—$520,937.05.

Mr. BARNHART. I hold in my hand a report dated January 28, in which the Public Printer reports a balance in the Treasury to the credit of congressional printing to the amount of $316,000. Somebody is evidently mistaken. I get my information from the Public Printer.

Mr. MANN. Over $300,000 out of millions of dollars is not very much left to the last of January, I will say to the gentle-

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not possible that this deficiency appropriation is desired to be used after the adjournment of Congress

Mr. BARNHART. Possibly so, but I call attention to the fact that the total of these bills that we are now considering will be less than $25,000, and if the balance of the money is expended it will be done by the Senate hereafter, because the House has very little more to do. The department is trying to raise their contracts for public printing, but so far the Joint Committee on Printing has been intervening and preventing it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

What is the document that is purposed to be authorized under this resolution?

Mr. BARNHART. This is the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission on car shortage. It is a little document that costs $118, a resolution submitted by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Slemp], and is said to be very important to the coal-producing regions of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BAILBOAD STRIKES AND LOCKOUTS (H. BEPT. NO. 1467).

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I send up another privileged resolution to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 438.

Resolved, That there be printed as a House document the pamphlet entitled "Railway Strikes and Lockouts," compiled by the United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation, containing a compilation of the laws of all countries relating to strikes and the settlement of industrial disputes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

OCEAN SHIPPING (H. REPT. NO. 1466).

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I send another resolution to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, before presenting another privileged resolution I want to call the attention of the membership of the House to a message just received from the Public Printer, in which he says that the unencumbered balance for printing and binding to-day is $208,000.

Mr. MANN. But this is only the first of February.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC RAILWAY CO. (H. REPT. NO. 1465).

Mr. BARNHART. Now, I submit another privileged resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. What expense would be occasioned by the printing of this document—the reprinting of the testimony concerning the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Co.?

Mr. BARNHART. It would cost $21.54. It costs $12 a min-[Laughter.]

ute to run the House. [Laughter.]
The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Thaddeus Kosciuscko and the speakers who took part in said celebration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Byrns of Tennessee). The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, that is presented as a privileged resolution. It is not, but I shall not make a point of order on it. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

NAVIGATION LAWS (H. REPT. NO. 1480).

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I send another privileged resolution to the Clerk's desk and ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 150.

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing is hereby authorized and instructed to have printed 10,000 copies of "Navigation laws, comparative study of principal features of the laws of the United States, Great Britain, Germany, Norway, France, and Japan," contained in report of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to the Secretary of Commerce on January 12, 1916 (Special Agents' Series No. 114).

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, the report of the committee there is that the resolution do not pass.

Mr. MANN. Move to lay it on the table.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana moves to lay the resolution on the table. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

SOIL SURVEY OF THE BILOXI AREA, MISSISSIPPI (H. REPT. NO. 1469).

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I submit another privileged resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 14.

Resolved, That there shall be printed 1,000 additional copies of the Soil Survey of the Biloxi Area, Mississippi, for use in the House document

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MANN. For whose benefit is it? Who represents the district?

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman from Illinois asks a very important question. There are about 15—
Mr. MANN. Why does not the gentleman answer it?
Mr. BARNHART. I am trying to answer it, if the gentleman will give me time. I can not answer as readily as the contleman from Illinois gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. These proceedings cost $12 a minute. All I want to know is the name of the Member.

Mr. BARNHART. The name of the Member is Mr. BORLAND.

He introduced the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Who will get these copies? This is a soil survey of a particular place, and I am not opposed to it, but just for curiosity I want to know the name of the Member who gets the copies.

Mr. BARNHART. We could have that read for each resolu-The documents go to the document room.

of the resolution is Mr. Borland, of Missouri.

Mr. MANN. But this is for a soil survey in Mississippi.
Mr. LEVER. Is there any special reason for printing these extra copies? As I understand, the Department of Agriculture prints 2,000 copies for the House of Representatives and 2,000 copies for the Senate, which would make 4,000 copies of any one particular survey. Is there any particular reason for this reprint?

Mr. BARNHART. The supplies are exhausted. I want to say a word in behalf of the Committee on Printing. than two years none of these soil-survey resolutions have been reported out of the Committee on Printing; but the pressure has been very strong from the Members who introduced these resolutions, and we decided to submit them all to the House for its consideration. The committee itself believe that this matter is or ought to be wholly in the hands of the Department of Agriculture, and that that department ought to provide an ample allowance. It is given an appropriation each year to take care of all these matters. Yet we are constantly besieged by Members who have requests for these soil surveys. for myself, we have had some soil surveys in the district which I represent, and I had notices placed in many of the newspapers stating that these soil surveys were available, but I think I have had less than 50 requests for them.

Mr. FOSTER. The farmers in the gentleman's district are

Mr. MANN. I have always been rather of the opinion that when the Government goes to very great expense in making a soil survey, which is primarily useful only to the men who occupy the soil, if they want to obtain copies of the survey they ought to have them.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But my curiosity is not yet satisfied. For the life of me, I can not see why the gentleman from Kansas City [Mr. Borland] should be interested in placing in the document room a thousand copies of a soil survey of Biloxi, Miss., and I think we are entitled to an explanation as to who is going to get the copies.

Mr. BARNHART. This is for Jackson County, Mo.

Mr. MANN. No; the Clerk read Biloxi, Miss. I think the gentleman is talking about the wrong resolution.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes. This resolution was introduced by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison].

Mr. MANN. That is different. I could not understand before. I have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire how many such resolutions the chairman of the committee has to report.

Mr. BARNHART. About 15.

Mr. STAFFORD. All relating to soil surveys?
Mr. BARNHART. All relating to soil surveys.
Mr. STAFFORD. What is the cost of the reprint?
Mr. BARNHART. Each one of these costs less than $500.

This one which I hold in my hand will cost $412. We cut the number down so that they would cost less than $500.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any resolutions other than those providing for soil surveys?

Mr. BARNHART. No others.

Mr. CANNON. The original survey was printed at the Agricultural Department?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. That is exhausted? Mr. BARNHART. The supply is exhausted. The plates of the maps, and so forth, are all preserved, and the cost of the reprinting is only nominal, in some cases only $150 for 2,000 copies.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why can not they now be printed in the Agricultural Department?

Mr. BARNHART. They ought to be printed by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman made any inquiry of the Agricultural Department as to why they do not reprint?
Mr. BARNHART. Yes; and they say they do not consider that the original appropriation or allotment for printing gives them authority to reprint.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many bills has the committee had under consideration providing for reprints?

Mr. BARNHART. Twelve or fifteen.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are any others pending?

Mr. BARNHART. No; no others pending. This covers the whole field.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is establishing a precedent that may come back to plague us in the future. If every Member who has a soil survey in his district comes here and wants a reprint it will be a burden on us.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman is mistaken in saying that reprints have not heretofore been authorized by the House, because I am advised that there have been frequently reprints ordered, but not within the time that I have been chairman of

Mr. STAFFORD. I think these matters ought to go over for further consideration. I hope the gentleman will not submit any more

Mr. BARNHART. I think that they ought to be submitted and disposed of. The committee has had them for a long time, and as far as the committee is concerned it would like to be absolved from any further obligation in the matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman assure us that there will be no more at this session?

Mr. BARNHART. There are no more before the committee. Mr. CARY. I would suggest to the gentleman that he offer them all in bulk, let them be read by title, and passed at once. Mr. BARNHART. If the gentleman will ask unanimous consent I am willing to have it done.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the chairman of the committee offer all these bills for reprint of soil surveys in bulk and the titles be read and we vote on them

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana may offer all of the resolutions in bulk and be voted upon as one.

Mr. MANN. I object. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

SOIL SURVEY, BRYAN COUNTY, OKLA. (H. REPT. NO. 1470).

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I submit another resolution and ask its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 102.

Resolved, That 2,000 additional copies of the soll survey of Bryan County, Okla., as made by the Bureau of Soils of the Department of Agriculture, be printed for use in the House document room.

Mr. MANN. How many copies are provided for in this resolution?

Mr. BARNHART. Two thousand.

Mr. MANN. I thought in the Harrison resolution it was fixed at 1,000 copies Mr. BARNHART. Probably that is all the resolution asked

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that that is all we ought to

Mr. STAFFORD. How many copies are provided for in the resolution just passed?

The CHAIRMAN. The resolution that was just passed provided for 1,000.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would remind the gentleman that some counties are much more populous than others. The counties in my district have 3,000 or more population, and certainly there ought to be a greater number in such counties than in counties with a less population.

Mr. MANN. The county in which my district is located has a population of 3,000,000, and yet I think a thousand copies of the soil survey will more than go around.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It so happens that the people I speak of have a great interest in these surveys.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that the Committee on Printing has investigated these matters.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the committee has not investigated

Mr. ALMON. I want to say that I went before the committee and explained to them the great demand there was in my district, and they cut it down a half.

Mr. MANN. How much does the gentleman get in his reso-

Mr. ALMON. I have had the promise of 2,000, and that will not supply the demand in Madison County.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think there ought to be one rule followed, We are granting favors to Members here.

Mr. MANN. After all, it is for the benefit of the people.

Mr. STAFFORD. We are picking out 12 and giving a persimmon to them in the nature of a reprint. Why should not the persimmons be for all?

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will not object.

The supply has been exhausted in most of them. Madison County is the largest county, and the county that has taken the lead in agriculture in Alabama, the first to organize a livestock association and the first to eradicate the cattle tick, and the people there are clamoring for these reports. I asked for 5,000, and the committee has cut it down to 2,000, costing less than $500. I trust that no one will object to it.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr.

STAFFORD], after hearing the pathetic appeal of the gentleman from Alabama, can understand how it is impossible for the Committee on Printing to resist.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can now understand the worries the gentleman has had in times past and how well he has borne up under them with his benign smile.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Dupré.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection, but I just like to know out of curiosity

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

SOIL SURVEY OF CHESTERFIELD COUNTY, S. C. (H. REPT. NO. 1475).

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I submit another privileged resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 267.

Resolved, That there be printed 1,250 additional copies of the pamphlet entitled "Soil Survey of Chesterfield County, S. C.," for the use of the House document room.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have had it in mind to introduce a resolution to provide for the printing of 10,000 copies of the Declaration of Independence in order that some of the people of the United States might reread that document, and also for the printing of 10,000 copies of the Constitution of the United States. Is the gentleman in position to say whether those two propositions would have consideration before his committee?

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, yes. All resolutions of that character introduced have consideration before the Committee on Printing, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if he will introduce his resolutions and come before the committee, will surely have a favorable hearing and most likely a favorable report.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman. I shall introduce the resolution and ask for the reprinting of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. It may do some good.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks upon the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I submit another privileged resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 379.

Resolved, That there be printed 1,250 additional copies of the Soil Survey of Decatur County, Ga., for the use of the House document

Mr. MANN. Who gets this?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Park, of Georgia.
Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House whether there is any resolution covering the Northern States which might possibly have impoverished soils, or is it confined to the Southern States?

Mr. BARNHART. The committee did not consider the question in a sectional way at all; it considered the separate bills as they came to the committee

Mr. STAFFORD. It just happened that the most of them are in the South?

Mr. BARNHART. The committee took the bills as they were introduced and as they happened to come before it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The presumption is that these soil surveys come from localities where there is a movement in real

Mr. STAFFORD. Then it would presume to be stagnant in the North.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I think so.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

SOIL SURVEY OF TIFT COUNTY, GA. (H. REPT. NO. 1477).

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I offer another privileged resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Byrns of Tennessee). The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 380.

Resolved, That there be printed 2,000 additional copies of the Soil Survey of Tift County, Ga., for the use of the House document room. The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

RESONNOISSANCE SOIL SURVEY OF NORTHEASTERN PENNSYLVANIA (H. REPT. NO. 1478).

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I submit another privileged resolution and ask for its passage.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 460.

Resolved, That there be printed 2,000 additional copies of the Reconnoissance Soil Survey of Northeastern Pennsylvania for use of the House document 100m.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "printed" strike out "2,000" and insert "1,500."

Mr. MANN. Who gets this?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Kiess of Pennsylvania, The question was taken and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The question was taken and the resolution as amended was agreed to.

BIOGRAPHICAL CONGRESSIONAL DIRECTORY (H. REPT. NO. 1479).

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I submit a final privileged resolution and ask the attention of the House while it is being read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 23.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound 10,000 copies of the Biographical Congressional Directory, revised and corrected to the Sixty-fourth Congress, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, 7,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives and 3,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Does that involve two volumes?

Mr. BARNHART. Two.

Mr. MANN. One being the old volume?

Mr. BARNHART. No; it only brings it up to date. It is revised and corrected.

Mr. MANN. That is what I thought; it is to take the old volume

Mr. BARNHART. And add another to it.

Mr. MANN. And add another volume to it.
Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain what it will cost for the printing of this?

Mr. BARNHART. Six thousand four hundred and twentyseven dollars

Mr. STAFFORD. Will an additional expense be occasioned by the payment to any clerk attached to the joint committee?

Mr. BARNHART. There was not in the last revision. There was an effort made to secure an allowance, but Congress never did allow it.

Mr. STAFFORD. And a good chance Congress will not allow it now.

Mr. BARNHART. Would not allow it by consent of the present chairman of the committee.

Who is supposed to do this work of Mr. SMITH of Idaho. revision?

Mr. BARNHART. That is supposed to be done by the clerk of the Joint Committee on Printing, I take it.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It seems to me he has got his hands pretty full now to take on such an important work as that.

Mr. STAFFORD. The work has been going right along Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It has been done heretofore by extra time, and the clerk ought to be paid for it.

Mr. BARNHART. It was done by extra time, and the last time there was no allowance.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. And he should be entitled to his pay. He worked at night.

Mr. STAFFORD. This work has been done in the recent past in connection with his regular work as clerk of the committee. Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No; it was done by a clerk in the Secretary's office.

Mr. MANN. The Congressional Directory for years has carried information about the duties of the various departments of the Government. Why is that left out of the last one?
Mr. BARNHART. For the reason that from time to time the names that were submitted by the departments had accumulated into such a volume that the directory was too cumbersome; and, moreover, the enormous expense of print paper at present is such that it is the purpose of the Joint Committee on Printing that the number of the pages in the book be curtailed to the immediate needs at this time.

Mr. MANN. That does not answer the question. The gentleman talks about names. What names does the gentleman have reference to?

Mr. BARNHART. The names of the subordinate officers of the various departments.

Mr. MANN. Those are in the directory. Evidently the gentleman has not given consideration to it. What they have left out is the part that describes the duties of the different departments. I do not know how other gentlemen are, but that is a matter of constant reference in my office. We do not keep old directories lying around. New directories are on the table.

Every day, nearly, some letter comes along, and you want to know what department to visit in order to find out about it. My secretary constantly refers to the Congressional Directory for that information, which is valuable. You have left it out, although it is the most valuable information in the directory outside of the names of Members of Congress

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? I have in my hand a recent issue of the Congressional Directory, which gives the work of the various departments, and I wonder whether he refers to something else besides the duties of the various departments and duties of the Government.

Mr. MANN. The trouble with the gentleman is that he is slow.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not so very. Of course, slow in comparison with the gentleman as the leader.
Mr. MANN. Yes. You have the December directory. The last edition was issued in February.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is the one I received at the Clerk's desk. I do not have the latest here. Of course, no one can keep pace with the pacemaker of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

President pro tempore of the Senate.
J. F. TOLTON,
Speaker of the House.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have received a great many letters, telegrams, and petitions with reference to the European war situation, which I have not presented to the Senate, not baving deemed it necessary to do so; but I have here a letter which speaks for and speaks to a large class who, in my judgment, are among the best and most patriotic citizens of my ment, are among the best and most patriotic citizens of my State. I feel that in justice to many of our citizens whose loyalty is repeatedly questioned this letter should be read to the Senate and be printed in the Record. It is a letter from the president of the German Alliance of the State of Washington to the various bodies of that organization in the State. It should not be deemed necessary for any American citizens or any organization of American citizens to be proclaiming their loyalty in any national crisis. Their loyalty should be assumed. Citizens of every descent and different organizations are constantly proclaiming their loyalty. In view of this and because of the special and distressing circumstances, it is not out of place for those of German descent to set forth their out of place for those of German descent to set forth their views and attitude and declare to the world that their supreme allegiance is to the country of their adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TACOMA, WASH., February 6, 1917.

To American citizens of German birth and descent.

BRETHERN: As the president of the German-American Alliance of the State of Washington, I deem it my duty to address you a few lines in regard to our duties and obligations as citizens, as they appear to me.

At the present time we as no other citizens are being tested as by fire. Our patriotism, our loyalty, and our love for our adopted country are being tried now as never before, and it behooves us now to guard our very words and actions lest they be misunderstood.

Look back over the pages of history and see how your forefathers fought and at all times were ready and willing to lay down their lives and to offer all they had at the altar of their adopted country. They were always at the front with a burning desire to defend the country of their choice against any enemy that sought to trample upon its right. They fought and fell for its Constitution, its liberties, and for the exercise of free speech and religious toleration.

Our forefathers, history abundantly proves, were loyal to their adopted country, and so will we be found to be. Let us as their offspring stand firm to our oath of allegiance. Let us, as they did, defend our homes and our adopted land and all its institutions against Germany, if need be, as well as against any other nation or combination of nations who would dare to trample on our sacred rights.

combination of nations who would dare to trample on our sacred rights.

It may be that before this message reaches you that some American or other ship loaded with munitions of war but officially designated as "merchandise" may be destroyed by the Germans in defense of their homes and their country, and on that same ship there may be some American citizens, who dare anything to amass dollars out of this murderer's trade, may be lost.

If this should happen it will be more taken notice of than it was with Mexico, and no matter under what conditions the jingo press and the unthinking mob will howl and rage. Then, my fellow citizens of German descent, is the time you will be tried as by fire to show the world that you are indeed for America and its free institutions first, last, and all the time.

But then, my brethren, as long as this country is not at war we have the right to enter a protest against what we consider unjust and unfair. While we stand as one man for our country when it is in danger, we are not willing to offer ourselves and give over our sons for the benefit of any European nation. Nor are we willing to sacrifice ourselves and our blood for Wall Street or any combination of capital or any combination of ammunition makers who might lose their fortunes if we do not hold up the hands of their creditors.

Our blood and the sufferings of our wives and children will be freely offered on the altar of our country for the protection of its sacred rights, but should it be offered for the few daring monsters who have loaned millions of money to foreign countries that they may be made secure in their investments by our sacrifices?

Trusting to God that in the near future this dreadful calamity will be ended, and that we emerge from it as pure as gold from the furnace, and trusting that you will at all times remember your holy duties to your adopted country, and that no disloyal act of any of you disgrace our Nation, I am.

Sincerely, yours.

STATE OF IDAHO, DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, W. T. Dougherty, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of senate joint memorial No. 4 (by Evans) to the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (passed the senate Jan. 24, 1917; passed the house Jan. 31, 1917), which was filed in this office on the 8th day of February, A. D. 1917, and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State. Done at Boise City, the capital of Idaho, this 9th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1917 and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-first.

W. T. DOUGHERTY, Secretary of State.

Senate joint memorial 4. (By Mr. Evans.)

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represents that—

Whereas by an act of December 29, 1916, Congress has provided for stock-raising homestead entries of not to exceed 640 acres of lands "the surface of which is chiefly valuable for grazing and raising forage crops"; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior is authorized by the said act, on application or otherwise, to designate the lands which shall be susceptible of entry under the said act; and

Whereas the application of the said act to the State of Idaho and the designation of lands thereunder would work great and irreparable injury to the small ranchers and farmers and stockmen of this State, in this: That the greater part of the said small ranchers, farmers, and stockmen will be incligible to enter grazing lands under the act designated above; that the grazing lands of Idaho are of such character that 640 acres used for grazing purposes only are wholly insufficient to support a family; that as a natural result of these facts patents for the lands so designated will go to entrymen who can not use the land for the purposes intended by Congress, and that the said lands will ultimately pass into the hands of the large cattlemen and sheepmen, who will thus obtain a virtual monopoly of the grazing lands of this State, while the small ranchers, farmers, and stockmen will find themselves wholly deprived of lands available for grazing purposes; that much of the land subject to designation under the act is of such character that if left open to other forms of entry it will within a few years become available for dry-farming purposes as this industry is extended within our State; and Whereas there is strong evidence to indicate that the lands already applied for have been applied for by dummy entrymen acting in the interest of the large cattle and sheep men of this and surrounding States:

Now, therefore, your memorialist earnestly requests and recommends that the said act be so amended by Congress, at the earliest possible

Now, therefore, your memorialist earnestly requests and recommends that the said act be so amended by Congress, at the earliest possible opportunity, as to make it inapplicable to public lands within the territorial limits of the State of Idaho.

The secretary of state of the State of Idaho is hereby instructed to forward this memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America and copies of the same to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Senate joint memorial 10, relating to the recession to the State of Oregon by the United States of all its right, title, interest, and claim in and to Lower or Little Klamath Lake, in Klamath County. Oreg., and all its right, title, interest, and claim in and to any and all of the lands surrounding said Lower Klamath Lake in Klamath County, Oreg., ceded to it by an act of the Legislature of the State of Oregon approved January 20, 1905 (Statutes of 1905, p. 63).

Whereas the Legislature of the State of Oregon passed an act approved January 20, 1905, of which the following is a copy:

" CHAPTER V.

"An act to authorize the utilization of Upper Klamath Lake, Lower or Little Klamath Lake, and Tule or Rhett Lake, situate in Klamath County, Oreg., and Goose Lake, situate in Lake County. Oreg., in connection with the irrigation and reclamation operations of the Reclamation Service of the United States, and to cede to the United States all the right, title, interest, and claim of the State of Oregon to any and all lands recovered by the lowering of the water levels, or by the drainage of any or all of said lakes.

"Be it enacted by the people of the State of Oregon:
"SECTION 1. That for the purpose of aiding in the operations of irrigation and reclamation, conducted by the Reclamation Service of the United States, established by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., 388), known as the reclamation act, the United States is hereby authorized to lower the water level of Upper Klamath Lake, situate in Klamath County, Oreg., and to lower the water level of or to drain any or all of the following lakes: Lower or Little Klamath Lake and the Tule or Rhett Lake, situate in Klamath County, Oreg., and Goose Lake, situate in Lake County, Oreg.; and to use any part or all of the beds of said lakes for the storage of water in connection with such operations.

"Sec. 2. That there be, and hereby is, ceded to the United States all the right, title, interest, or claim of this State to any land uncovered by the lowering of the water levels, or by the drainage of any or all of said lakes not already disposed of by the State; and the lands hereby ceded may be disposed of by the United States, free of any claim on the part of this State, in any manner that may be deemed advisable by its authorized agencies, in pursuance of the provisions of said reclamation act."

Approved, January 20, 1905.

Filed in the office of the secretary of state January 20, 1905; and Whereas the Reclamation Service of the United States has not, during the 12 years which have elapsed since the approval of the aforesaid act, lowered the water level of said Lower or Little Klamath Lake, nor used the bed of said lake for the purpose of storing water to use in connection with the reclamation of the land adjacent to said lake, and there are no indications that the Reclamation Service intends to ever reclaim the land, thereby accomplishing the purposes of the Legislature of the State of Oregon as expressed in said act of January 20, 1905; and

Whereas there is a large body of swamp and overflowed land surrounding said lake in Klamath County unfit for cultivation without reclamation, upon the title to which a cloud has been cast by the abovementioned act, which it is necessary to remove before such land can be successfully thrown open to entry, reclamation, and cultivation: Therefore

Resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That we request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their influence to have a bill introduced and passed by Congress and approved by the President of the United States, ceding back to the State of Oregon the right to use all or any part of the bed of Lower or Little Klamath Lake for the storage of water connected with the operations of the Reclamation Service of the United States, and also ceding back to the State all the right, title, interest, or claim of the United States in or to any of the lands surrounding or connected with said lake in Klamath County ceded to it by the above-mentioned act of the Legislature of Oregon, to the end that such lake, water, and land shall be returned to said State as they were prior to the approval of said act, and be governed by the general laws by which they were governed prior thereto, reserving, however, to the United States the right to lower the water level in said lake, as provided in said act.

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the Senate of the State of Oregon be directed to transmit by mall a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States sanate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Oregon in Congress.

Senate joint memorial 15.

To the honorable the Senators and Representatives in Congress assembled:

To the honorable the Senators and Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the members of the Oregon Legislature, would most respectfully call the attention of your honorable body to an incongruity in our laws relative to naturalization and citizenship which works an injustice to quite a number of the citizens of the Republic:

Several States of the Union have adopted equal suffrage whereby both men and women are accorded equal prerogatives and privileges in the exercise of the elective franchise.

Under the law, a woman having all the qualifications of a legal voter—in fact, she may have exercised the right to vote—should she marry a foreigner not yet naturalized is thereby disfranchised, while if the woman from a foreign country, ignorant of our laws, should marry a citizen of the United States she at once becomes a legal voter.

This manifest injustice should be corrected, and we earnestly urge your honorable body to do so, either by amending the present laws or by some adequate enactment that will accomplish such desired result. All that we ask is that equal qualifications be required of, and equal privileges granted to, each individual voter irrespective of sex or the marriage relation in the States adopting equal suffrage, thereby harmonizing the operation of our laws with the civic progressiveness of twentieth-century civilization.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

The chief clerk of the Senate is directed, upon the adoption of this members of the Oregon delegation in Congress.

Hon. James E. Martine,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Hughes Commission report of 1912 states the commission is further of the opinion that it would be a mistake to discriminate between newspapers and magazines or other periodicals so far as educational value is concerned. No satisfactory distinction can be made, and we have no basis for the conclusion that the comparative cost of transporting and handling would justify a difference in rate. Manifestly the proposed amendment is grossly discriminatory in that it gives one class of second-class mail matter a privilege not enjoyed by all. Added to the already heavy burdens of greatly increased costs of production, especially paper, this confiscatory tax means bankruptcy for hundreds of publications. We strongly urge upon you the necessity for the defeat of the rider.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? [A pause.] There being none, the morning business is closed. Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19410) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, at the close of the session last night the matter in question was an appeal from the decision of the Chair. The junior Senator from Iowa happening to be occupying the chair at the time the decision was made from which the appeal was taken, I think it will very much shorten matters and will save time if the unanimous consent which I am about to ask shall be granted. The question was, I think, a rather intricate parliamentary one. The junior Senator from Iowa is no expert on questions of parliamentary law and made the best guess at it that he could. He would very much prefer, however, that the whole matter be relegated back for the decision of the Vice President.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that the question at issue concerning which the decision was made may be decided by the Vice President as if no decision had been made by the then occupant of the chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, the Vice President has something to say about that. The Chair does not think there is any conflict between the decision of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] when in the chair and the former ruling of the present occupant of the chair, unless it be upon the question as to whether the amendment was or was not general legislation. At one time the present occupant of the chair decided, where there was a motion to strike out and to insert, a point of order being raised and there being a request for a division of the question, that the point of order must be sustained or overruled as to the entire amendment, with the statement that, if sustained, then that portion of it which was not subject to the point of order could immediately be re-presented as an amendment. As the Chair now recollects the ruling, at the time it was made there was no request to divide the question until after the point of order had been raised. It seems that in the present instance the request for a division was made first and the point of order afterwards. So that the Chair does not believe there is any conflict in the ruling that was made by the Senator from Iowa when occupying the chair and the present occupant of the chair. Chair does not think it makes very much difference if there is.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like, if I may be permitted, to correct one statement of the Chair. I think the Chair will find upon examination of the Record that the point of order was made before the division was asked for. That of order was made before the division was asked for. will be found at the bottom of page 3619 of the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, it is not important enough to change the ruling. There has been an appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, in order to save both the Chair and the Senator from Iowa from embarrassment, I object to the unanimous consent. The VICE PRESIDENT. But there has been an appeal taken by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] from the decision of the Chair, and the question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the ruling of the Senate?

Mr. CATRON. Mr. President, I am unable to vote, because I do not understand what the question is. Will the Chair have it stated? The Chair has stated that the question is on the appeal from the decision of the Chair, but he has not stated the decision from which the appeal was taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the appeal. The Secretary. The Journal has the following minute:

On the question to agree to the reported amendment, on page 15, to strike out in line 10 all after the word "devices" down to and including the word "Brooklyn" in line 12, and in lieu thereof insert certain other words.

After debate,

Mr. POINDEXTER raised a question of order, viz, that the part proposed to be inserted by said amendment proposed general legislation to a general appropriation bill and therefore was not in order under the rule.

general appropriation bill and therefore was not in order under the rule.

Mr. Lodge demanded a division of the amendment.

Whereupon,

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Kenyon in the chair) held to be in order the first branch of the amendment, viz, to insert the following:

"$1,001,000: Provided, That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to extend existing contracts for pneumatic-tube service until June 30, 1918, and the Postmaster General is directed to expend this appropriation for the sole purpose of continuing the existing pneumatic mail-tube service, and no part thereof shall be expended for the transportation of mails in any other manner than herein authorized."

On that branch of the amendment, viz, to insert the following:

"Provided further, That a commission consisting of three members of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the United States Senate, to be designated by the Vice President, and three members of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the House, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the value of the pneumatic-tube service, their properties, franchises, and other equipment, with a view to the purchase and operation of the same or any portion thereof by the Government and to ascertain the cost and the terms upon which such purchase may be made. The employment of expert and other assistance is authorized, and the expense of such assistance and of the Inquiry shall be paid from the appropriation for service by pneumatic tubes, not to exceed $25,000, and said commission shall make a report, with recommendations to Congress, on or by the Ist day of January, 1918."

The presiding officer sustained the point of order.

Mr. Poindexter appealed from the decision of the Chair deciaring the first branch of the amendment to be in order.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, is this question debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT The Chair is converted as a the rest of the converted as a the risk of the converted as a the risk of the converted as a the risk of the converted

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, is this question debatable? The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is sorry to say that it [Laughter.]

Mr. WEEKS. I am extremely sorry to embarrass the Chair by taking a moment of time, but I do want to make a brief explanation, so that the matter will be reasonably clear in the minds of Senators who are present and who may not have been present last night.

I personally intended to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, but found that the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter] had already done so. I supposed that appeal would apply to both parts of the proposition in the amendment. Otherwise I should have taken an appeal from the second part, which the Senator from Washington evidently did not, according to the Journal. It was a case of misunderstanding on my part, and what I should like to know now is whether an appeal from the second part of the Presiding Officer's decision will be in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was not here at the time but was informed this morning that the Senator from Massachusetts had appealed from the ruling on the second part of the amendment.

Mr. WEEKS. Well, Mr. President, there was some confusion. It was about the time of adjournment. I asked a parliamentary question, whether an appeal had been taken in regard to the provisions of the amendment, and it was stated that it had been, and I supposed at that time it applied to both parts of the decision of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kenyon]. who was in the chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just one moment. [A pause.] The Chair is of the opinion that the state of the Record is such that the Senator from Massachusetts has a right to appeal from the decision of the Chair sustaining the point of order to the second clause, and for this reason:

Just at the conclusion of the session of last evening the Senator from Massachusetts said:

Mr. President, I wish to understand the parliamentary situation. I understand that the Senator from Washington has appealed from the decision of the Chair. If the Senate adjourns now, would that open up this whole question in the Senate to-morrow?

To which the Presiding Officer responded:

The Chair did understand that an appeal was taken, so that it will open up the whole question to-morrow.

The Chair thinks that a fair construction of the RECORD is that both the Presiding Officer and the Senator from Massachusetts understood that the entire question was to be settled by the Senate with reference to the decision of the point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—
Mr. WEEKS. A parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, the Senator from Washington did not intend to make the point of order against the second part of this proposition, and therefore the occupant of the chair made a ruling on a matter as to which an appeal had not been made from his decision. What is the parliamentary situation as to that?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair, of course, has not read the entire RECORD. The Chair thought that the purpose of this construction this morning was to enable the Senator from Massachusetts to formally state a point of order against the second clause and take an appeal therefrom.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, in connection with the parliamentary inquiry, and in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry bearing upon that, I want to ask the Chair if this would be

This provision, from line 12 on page 15 to line 11 on the next page, is all one amendment; and I want to ask, if the point of order is sustained to any part of that amendment, whether under parliamentary law it does not take out the whole amend-Now, I know that that is the rule in another body, uniformly, and if they want to present the remaining part they have to offer it as another amendment. I am not sure about the rules of the Senate, but it occurred to me

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what the Chair did decide, but the Senator from Iowa did not so decide last night; and the Chair is standing by the ruling of the Senator from

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

Mr. JONES. What I want to get at is this: If the ruling of the Senator from Iowa is sustained by the Senate that a part of this is out of order, does it not follow that the whole amendment then goes out?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair permitting the division of this question. I think the Senator from Massachusetts appeals because one part of it was held out of order. The Senator from Washington appeals because another part was held in order; but in order to permit them to do that the Presiding Officer decided that if was divisible. The Senator from Washington having made the point of order against the amendment, the Chair divided it. My idea is that the Chair had no authority to do that; and therefore appeal from the decision of the Chair permitting the division of the question.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the former occupant of the chair does not care anything about it, but I want to say this: When the question of division was suggested, the Chair asked if there was objection to it, and there was no objection. The Senator from Massachusetts demanded the division. I think the unanimous consent which I asked a while ago ought to be granted. It is apparent that this matter ought to go back where it was, and let the Vice President decide it; and I renew my request for unanimous consent.

Mr. ASHURST. That the subject be reopened? Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, there are now three different appeals from the Chair. I am afraid that there will be a fourth in a few moments, unless something is done to prevent it; and I therefore move to lay all three appeals upon the table.

Mr. REED. I raise the question of order whether a motion can embrace three appeals.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I desire to make a new point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Why do we not decide the question that is before the Senate, and that is the appeal by the Senator from Washington from the ruling of the Presiding Officer last night on the first part of this amendment? That is the question before the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand that, Mr. President; but it occurs to me that if the point of order which I now make should be sustained the appeal would be disposed of, and it would not be necessary to take a vote upon it. I make the point of order against this entire amendment, beginning on page 15, on the ground that a portion of it has been held out of order, and that, a portion of it having been held out of order, the entire amendment is out of order.

The Senator from Iowa, as Presiding Officer, did not decide that question. That point has never yet been made. The Senator from Iowa did rule upon a point of order being made to each portion of the amendment; but the point of order was not made, subsequent to the ruling upon those several points of order, that the entire amendment was out of order on account of part of it having been held out of order.

I submit that point of order upon the precedents of this body and upon the previous rulings of the Vice President.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Watson] will withdraw his objection to the unanimous-consent request. It is perfectly apparent that we for pneumatic-tube service.

shall be lost in this maze of parliamentary technicalities. That will get it back, and let the Vice President determine all questions; and I ask that my unanimous-consent request be submitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to setting aside all the rulings of the Senator from Iowa, as made last night, on the points of order to this amendment, so that the Senate may proceed de novo? The Chair hears none. Now, does the Senator from Washington renew his point of order?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am just going to renew my point of order and, if the Chair will permit me, to state in a word the basis of it, on the ground that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill. In order to make it clear that it is general legislation, it is necessary to say a word as to the effect of this amendment if it is adopted.

If this amendment is adopted, Mr. President, the Postmaster General will be compelled to make a contract for pneumatictube mail service in certain cities where contracts are already existing, for another year-for the year ending June 30, 1918. Under the existing law he is not compelled to make those contracts; and, although it is outside of the record, it illustrates the situation if I state that under the existing law he will not make those contracts. He has announced that he will not make them. The law does not require him to make them. There is nothing in the House provision which would require him to make them, nor is there anything in the House provision dealing with the question of making additional contracts for the year ending June 30, 1918.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for suggestion?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is it not a fact that until this committee makes a favorable report, as provided for in the law, the Postmaster General could not renew this contract?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Until what? I did not quite catch the Senator's question.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I say under the existing law he is compelled to have this investigation made before he can renew the contract, is he not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The investigation has already been made, and there has been an adverse report.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I understand; but the report is unfavor-

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Now, unless this amendment is adopted which the Senate committee has proposed, the Postmaster General would not be compelled to enter into this agreement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is what I was undertaking to

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, let it be thoroughly understood that the fact that the report happens to be unfavorable does not necessarily preclude the Postmaster General from entering into a contract.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is true.
Mr. VARDAMAN. But the fact that the Senate amendment compels the Postmaster General to renew it necessarily implies that it repeals existing law.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It all comes to this, Mr. President: The sum of $613,000 a year depends upon the adoption of this Senate amendment. If the amendment is adopted, the Government will be put to that expense. If it is not adopted, the Government will not be put to that expense. That is the difference between the adoption of the amendment and the rejection of the amendment; and we have here, in the most explicit terms, the statement of the Postmaster General that the mail service of the country will not be benefited by that expenditure of money.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. WEEKS. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Washington, so that he may not be deceived himself, to the fact that there is a provision in the bill as it came from the House adding $400,000 to the appropriation for automobiles. The department recommends the expenditure of $482,000 for pneumatic tubes; so that those two items would make $882,000, or less than $100,000 less than the amount appropriated last So that the statement that there would be a saving of five or six hundred thousand dollars is absolutely without any basis; and I can demonstrate to the Senator from Washington, when I have the time, that very largely the statements made in these reports are unfounded.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Massachusetts assumes that the amount which he has just stated will be expended

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I am assuming that instead of spending it for pneumatic-tube service the Postmaster General is asking for the $400,000 additional to spend for automobile service, so that it is not a saving to the Government; and the Postmaster General, in effect, is saying to Congress: "You may appropriate this money if you like, but I will not spend it as you want it expended. I will spend it as I want to spend it.'

Mr. POINDEXTER. Here is the statement, Mr. President, signed by the Postmaster General, and forwarded to me with a special letter indorsing it by the First Assistant Postmaster General. I understand that a portion of this letter has been already put in the RECORD. In it he says:

The department is confronted with this situation: Whether it shall continue the use of the service at an enormous rental and continue to impose on the public an inefficient service by delaying its mall when the mall can be expedited by other means which are efficient and which can save the Government $613,000 each year.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington will yield, I wish he would let this question go to its merits. want to take up in detail that letter of the Postmaster General, and I want to show the Senate that those statements are very largely without sound basis. As I have just explained to the Senator from Washington, we are appropriating $400,000 for automobiles to take the place of these tubes. In other words, the Postmaster General is saying to Congress, just as I said before: "I want to spend this money as it seems to me best, not as Congress thinks it should be spent." The question ought not to be involved in a point of order. It is an important service being rendered to five great cities of this country to the satisfaction of the business men of those cities; and to throw out that vervice on a point of order is entirely unjustifiable.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, just one word more. In this same statement from the Postmaster General he says:

In accordance with this act a commission composed of the ablest postal experts in the service was appointed, and, after thorough investigation, recommended that the service be discontinued in the cities of Boston, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Chicago, and St. Louis. These recommendations had the unanimous approval of the postmasters and supervisory officials of the post offices involved—and from the facts before me I am thoroughly convinced that the needs of the Postal Service are not such as to justify the expenditure involved for pneumatic tubes as the act of 1992 requires. The rental paid for the tubes ($17,000 per annum per mile) is exorbitant, and more efficient service can be rendered by other means at less than one-fifth of the cost.

These statements are so specific and so much in detail that it is incredible to me that they are not absolutely reliable.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from New York. Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say to the Senator it is absolutely incredible to me that the Postmaster General could ever make such a statement with respect to the unanimous approval of the postmasters of the cities involved.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator from New York dispute this statement?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has been inclined to hear the Senator from Washington, but the rules provide that these points of order are to be decided by the Chair without debate. The Chair is willing to hear reasonably upon the question, but is not willing to take the day to decide this point of

Mr. POINDEXTER. I submit the matter upon the point of

Mr. WATSON. I simply rose to discuss the point of order, but will not do so if the Chair is ready to rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule says it shall be decided by the Presiding Officer without debate, and it will save a little time, I think, because there is sure to be an appeal. Aaron Burr once said that the law was anything that was confidently asserted and plausibly maintained. So no one can speak with authority on these subjects.

As to whether this be general legislation or not, the Senate is the ultimate judge upon an appeal. The Chair does not think this is general legislation at all. The Chair believes that the Postmaster General is given the conduct of the affairs of the Post Office Department as a servant of the Congress of the United States and not its master, which conduct the Congress may change at will. The Chair thinks whether you make or lose money by any change in the method of conducting the Post Office Department is a question for the discretion of the Senate. The Chair saw yesterday where money could have been saved, but the Senate did not want to save it. It is entirely a matter for the opinion of the Congress of the United States. The Chair does not believe that this is general legislation and overrules the l point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the short way to settle it. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the ruling of the Senate?

Mr. POINDEXTER. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst Bankhead Beckham Brandegee Bryan Catron Chilton Clapp Culberson Cummins Curtis Fall Fernald Fletcher	Galliager Harding Husting James Johnson, Me. Johnson, S. Dak, Jones Kenyon Kirby Lane Lee, Md. Lewis Martin, Va. Martine, N. J.	Nelson Norris Oliver Overman Page Poindexter Ransdell Reed Robinson Saulsbury Shafroth Sheppard Sherman Smith, Ga.	Smith, Md. Smoot Thomas Thompson Townsend Vardaman Wadsworth Walsh Warren Watson Weeks
--	---	---	--

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON in the chair). Fifty-three Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the ruling of the Senate?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think we ought to settle this question as a question of parliamentary law and not determine it by the opinions the Members of the Senate may entertain with reference to the merits of the legislation. If we do not have some regard to parliamentary law we will soon be proceeding here without any law, and the effect is bound to be disastrous in the long run. The question is, Does the proposed amendment carry substantive legislation? Is this merely an appropriation we are making, or are we doing something more than making an appropriation and directing how the appropriation shall be expended?

I maintain that no lawyer can read this clause and read it fairly with an unprejudiced mind and arrive at any other conclusion than that the language under consideration does go beyond an appropriation, does go beyond directing the expenditure of that appropriation, and does make substantive provisions of law. We may disregard that; we may set it aside; we may vote on this question not according to its merits, but according to the merits of the general proposition involved, but it is not wise to do so.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to the language. lowing the language which makes an appropriation of $1,001,000, which the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to expend and to extend existing contracts, comes this language:

Provided further, That a commission, consisting of three members of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the United States Senate, to be designated by the Vice President, and three members of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House of Representatives, to be designated by the Speaker of the House—

To do what?

Is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the value of the pneumatic-tube service, their properties, franchises, and other equipment, with a view to the purchase and operation of the same or any portion thereof by the Government and to ascertain the cost and the terms upon which such purchase may be made. The employment of expert and other assistance is authorized, and the expense of such assistance and of the inquiry shall be paid from the appropriation for service by pneumatic tubes, not to exceed $25,000, and said commission shall make a report, with recommendations to Cohgress, on or by the 1st day of January, 1918.

Mr. President, that creates a commission; that authorizes a commission to do certain things. You can not create a commission by a new law unless that new law be a law, if I may perpetrate such a bit of Irish logic as that. You can not do a new thing by law—create a new thing by law—and then say you have not passed any law. With all respect for the opinions of others, I say that it is simply absurd to assert that that language is not legislation.

I have no special interest for the present in considering the merits of the question whether the pneumatic-tube service is a graft or is not a graft, although I unhesitatingly say in view of the investigations that have been made, in view of the report that has been made, probably they are charging the Government an exorbitant price. That is a question, however, aside from the question whether the tubes should be thrown out or not. But I do not care to discuss that question.

How can Senators under their oath, charged with the main-tenance of the laws of the Government, charged on their honor with the maintenance of the rules of this body, say that language which creates a commission and gives to that commission certain powers is not legislation? How can they say that you create a thing by law and yet that you are not passing a law?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Missouri that we ought to settle this question of the point of order without reference to our attitude toward the amendment itself. I have not any doubt about the correct ruling of the Vice President on the point of order. I have not any grave doubt about what ought to be done with the amendment itself.

The Senator from Missouri discussed the proviso beginning with line 20. After all, that language, clear to the end of the amendment, is to appoint a commission to investigate and report, that is all. It has no other power except to go out and gather information for Congress and report back to Congress. Undoubtedly under that provision of law it is authorized to be done by Congress; it is required to be done. If the rule provided that Congress could not enact a law in connection with a general appropriation bill, the conclusion of the Senator would be inevitable, but that is not the rule of the Senate. The rule of the Senate is that we can not put general legislation upon a general appropriation bill.

Now, is this general legislation? Is it general legislation for Congress to say: "Go out and get me some information and bring it in here?" I say it is not. I understand that term in the rule to mean that you can not put upon an appro-priation bill laws of a general and extensive character.

Mr. REED. Where does the word "extensive" appear?
Mr. BRYAN. That is my interpretation of what is meant y "general legislation." So far as that requirement is concerned, we could put private laws upon an appropriation bill; we could put upon it laws for the benefit of individuals. to pay the claims of individuals would not come within the prohibition of that provision of Rule XVI. That is shown very clearly by the fact that Rule XVI itself goes further, and by another paragraph prohibits private legislation or private claims on appropriation bills. I have no difficulty with that part of it. I think that it would be rather a strained construction to say that because Congress could not enact general legislation upon an appropriation bill it could not, therefore, provide for a commission to gather information and to report that information back to Congress. So much for the proviso.

The House of Representatives appropriated $1,061,000 for the continuance of the tube service.

Mr. LEWIS. How much did the Senator say that the House appropriated?

Mr. BRYAN. It appropriated $1,061,000. The Senate committee recommends the appropriation of $1,001,000 for the continuance of the service; but it is claimed-I do not know with what authority-that the Postmaster General says that though you can appropriate $1,061,000 for this service he does not have to spend the $1,061,000, and therefore he will not enter into the contract. So the committee thought if we were going to appropriate the money we would say to him, "Spend the money." That is all the other part of this amendment does. That, Mr. President, is the argument I make upon the point I will not at this time, at least, argue upon the merits of the committee amendment.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I want to take a moment of the time of the Senate to discuss the point of order and not the merits of this question.

The first part of this proposition is in exactly the same language which was used in last year's appropriation bill. Let me quote what the last year's appropriation act provided:

For the transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices, $976,000: Provided, That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to extend existing contracts for pneumatic-tube mail service until March 4, 1917.

That is exactly what we are providing in this proposition, that the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to do just what we authorized and directed him to do last year.

As to the second part of this proposition, we provided for a commission to consider the advisability of purchasing the pneumatic-tube system. That commission has made a report, and so far as the proposition in the pending bill is concerned, it simply considers carrying it up to the point of reporting to Congress the price at which the purchase may be made and the recommendations of the commission which was authorized. There is no power given to the commission to buy the tubes. They are simply authorized to report to Congress a price at which they may be purchased and then Congress will act on that recommendation. That would be legislation, but we are simply extending the powers of the commission, which was known as the Hoke Smith Commission, and which heretofore reported to Congress

Mr. President, in 1901 there was authorized one of the many commissions which have been appointed to consider this subject. The provision for the appointment was before the Senate, and the wording of the bill was as follows:

and the wording of the bill was as follows:

"For transportation of mail by pneumatic tube or other devices, by purchase or otherwise, for maintenance and extension in citles having the system, and for establishing the system in Chicago, $500,000: Provided, That all contracts hereafter to be made shall first be advertised publicly for proposals in the manner now provided by law for advertising contracts for carrying mails, and shall only be made after and upon the approval of a board of three engineers, one of whom shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury from the Treasury Department, one by the Postmaster General, who shall be some engineer known for skill and experience in such matters: And provided further, That all contracts hereafter to be made shall contain a stipulation that the United States may acquire by the purchase any system constructed or to be constructed under such contract upon the payment to the owner of such system of the value thereof, to be determined by a board of three appraisers, one of whom shall be selected by such owner, another to be appointed by the Postmaster General, and the third by mutual agreement, or, in case of disagreement, by the judge of the district court of the United States for the district in which such system is located. Said appraisers in determining such price shall award and determine the actual structural value of said system, considering the use for which the same was designed, and may also take into account the earning power of such system. The Postmaster General is directed to investigate and report what, if any, extra charge should be made by the Government to the citizen for the use of pneumatic tube."

Mr. Hale raised a question of order, viz: That the amendment promatic tube."

Mr. Hale raised a question of order, viz: That the amendment proposed general legislation to a general appropriation bill, and was therefore not in order under the third clause of Rule 16.

The President pro tempore (Mr. Frye) submitted the question to the Senate, Is the amendment in order?—yeas 55, nays 16. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 2685-2694.)

In other words, exactly the same question which we now have—which, in my judgment, has been correctly decided by the Vice President-was then before the Senate on a precisely similar proposition relating to the same subject; and the Senate then decided by a vote of 55 to 16 that the decision of the Chair was correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Vice President stand as the ruling of the Senate? Mr. WEEKS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays. Mr. VARDAMAN. I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. Presi-

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I inquire if the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] has voted? The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted. Mr. WALSH. I have a general pair with him, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I inquire if the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted. Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded. Mr. CURTIS. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Hardwick], but I am released from that pair on this vote, and I vote "yea."

I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dillingham] on account of illness, and will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. GALLINGER. I inquire whether the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a pair with that Senator, but on this motion I am assured that he would vote as I am about to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Colt]. I am told, however, that, if present, he would vote as I shall vote, and I vote "yea.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask if the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the junior Senator from California [Mr. Phelan]

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I should like to inquire whether the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Gronna] has voted? The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I have a general pair with that Senator, and in his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. REED (after having voted in the negative). voted a moment ago I had forgotten that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], with whom I am paired during his absence from the city, was not present. I therefore now transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I rise to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore], who is detained at his home through illness. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Chamberlain] on official business.

Mr. OLIVER (after having voted in the affirmative). I am informed that the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. Chamber-LAIN], with whom I have a pair, has not voted. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Colt] and will allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 14, as follows:

So the ruling of the Chair was sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, from the remarks of the Chair a moment ago the impression seems to be extensively entertained that the question before the Senate is whether or not the Postmaster General is the master of the Senate and Congress or the Senate and Congress the master of the Postmaster General, and whether the Senate should economize in expenditures. The Chair announced the conclusion, with which I, of course, agree, that the Congress is the master of the Postmaster General and that Congress can determine whether or not it wants to save money; but I should like also to remark in that connection that that proposition is about as far removed from the question before the Senate as a sing-a-way bird on the banks of a far-away river. Nobody denies the proposition stated by the Chair. But the question is quite different. Under the existing law the Government is not required to continue to maintain a mail service which has been declared by two different investigating boards and is now asserted by the Postmaster General to be obsolete. At the time this pneumatic-tube mail service was first adopted automobile truck mail cars for the delivery of mails in cities had not been developed. The parcel post had not been established and extended as it has been now. The conditions were entirely different. Under the revolutionary development of mail service in the cities of the country which has occurred since this service was first adopted these commissions and the Postmaster General find that the pneumatic-tube method of delivering mail is not only not an advantage but is positive disadvantage; and the question involved here is whether or not in its discretion, which nobody denies, Congress is going to compel the Postmaster General to make these contracts against the judgment of the authorities, who are attempting to save the $613,000 a year, or whether we are going to leave the matter as it stands now, with the discretion vested in the Postmaster General and the experts of the department to deliver the mail in the cities according to the best appliances which they are able to obtain.

One of the motives which is back of the powerful influence which is maintaining and perpetuating this pneumatic-tube mail service is the fact that they are obtaining for this service more per mile for pneumatic tubes than the railroads are obtaining per mile for the entire volume of mail that comes from all directions into these cities.

There is a provision in this amendment for an investigation. I hold in my hand a volume of considerable size which embodies the reports of investigations which have already been made, containing most voluminous details and figures and a discussion of every phase of the subject. On page 10 of the report they refer to another report which has been made prior to this report, in 1907, covering the investigation of the pneumatic-tube service by post-office inspectors, in which it was stated that this is the most expensive method of mail transportation in use, and the inspectors very much doubt whether, even under the conditions existing then, the advantages obtained were commensurate with the heavy expense.

Then this commission goes on to state that-

Since the present contracts for pneumatic-tube service were entered into the domestic parcel post has been established and has materially changed the conditions of Postal Service operation. The automobile truck, which is now used extensively in the commercial world, has also become available for the transportation of mail, so that the conditions prevailing in the service at present did not exist at the time of previous investigations.

The principal advantages of pneumatic tubes for the transportation of mail are:

1. A high rate of speed between the conditions and the conditions of the conditions o of mall are:

1. A high rate of speed between stations for limited quantities of mail.

2. Freedom from surface traffic congestion.

The principal limitations and disadvantages of pneumatic tubes for the transportation of mail are:

1. The capacity of each tube container is limited to about 5 pounds of letter mail, and all classes of mail can not be carried.

2. The rapidity of dispatch of tube containers is limited to intervals of about 15 seconds, so that only about 20 pounds of letter mail can be dispatched each minute, thus necessitating the paralleling of the entire system of tubes by vehicular service at the time of heavy dispatches.

of the entire system of tubes by vehicular service at the time of heavy dispatches.

3. Inability of tubes to carry many special-delivery parcels, owing to the limited size of the containers.

4. The necessary relaying of containers at way stations involves loss of time and requires that all intermediate stations be kept open, with attendants on duty.

5. The inability to dispatch mail to intermediate stations during continuous transmission between any two points.

6. Inability to dispatch mail to the point where it is received by or taken from the railroad companies without additional handling.

7. Frequent complaints resulting from damage to mail, caused by careless locking of containers and by the accidental opening of containers in transit.

8. Inability to prevent dampness and oil in the tubes at certain tainers in transit.

8. Inability to prevent dampness and oil in the tubes at certain times, resulting in damage to the mails.

9. Discontinuance of service on an entire line results from stoppage of the operation of the tube at any point on that line.

10. Inflexibility of the service, as it can not be expanded to meet recurring or emergent conditions, thus resulting in congestion.

11. The terminal equipment of the tubes occupies a considerable amount of desirable space in post-office quarters, for which high rentals are paid by the department.

12. The excessive cost of tube service ($17,000 per mile per annum).

The letter of the Postmaster General, addressed to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, has been printed in the RECORD; but in order that Senators who did not read it in the RECORD may know its contents I am going to read it, and then, if I may, ask that the printing of it in the Record be not duplicated. Before reading it, I should like to make this comment upon it:

Not only have the Post Office Department had the benefit of minute examination by a number of commissions appointed for that special purpose, but they have had the benefit of a far more reliable source of information than any investigation could possibly be, and that is the practical testing of these tubes through a series of years, the actual use of them in the regular business of the Government. For Senators, whether they are members of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads or not, to say that they are in a better position to determine the advantages of this particular means of delivering the mail than the employees of the Government, whose disinterestedness nobody has challenged, who are engaged in the use of these appliances every day, is entirely unreasonable.

This letter, addressed to Senator BANKHEAD, the chairman of the Post Office Committee, says:

The bill making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, now under consideration by the Senate, contains a provision, on page 15, which authorizes and directs the Postmaster General to extend existing con-tracts for pneumatic-tube service until June 30, 1918.

If I may interpolate here, rather by way of repetition, that statement contains the gist of all this question which the Senate has been considering yesterday afternoon and this morning. However we may indulge in sophistical arguments about its being a mere change of a provision in the House bill, we can not escape from the conclusion that the effect of this Senate amendment is to adopt the pneumatic-tube service, and that without the Senate amendment we do not adopt the pneumatic-tube service. That can not be denied by any reasonable man who reads this language; so what is the use of arguing that it is a mere condition attached to an appropriation, or that it is a mere enlargement of a provision in the House bill? It is far more than that. It is substantial and vital in the principle which it adds to the bill.

This proposed amendment is a change in existing law and practically nullifies the act of Congress of 1902 relating to this service, which provides:

"(a) That no advertisement shall issue until after careful investiga-tion shall have been made"—

This is the existing law which is changed-

"as to the needs and practicability of such service and until a favorable report in writing shall have been submitted to the Postmaster General by a commission of not less than three expert postal officials, to be named by him."

This amendment proposes to make these contracts of $613,000 a year without the investigation and favorable report of a commission of not less than three expert postal officials, which the law as it stands now requires. The effect of this amendment is to repeal that law, not only without sufficient information, but in the face of the best information that can possibly be obtained, and direct that these contracts shall be made without the favorable report of three expert officials, which the law requires. It is perfectly useless to talk about that being the imposing by the Postmaster General of his authority upon Congress, because it was Congress which provided this. It is in pursuance of the will of Congress. It was Congress which proposed that in the interests of honesty and economy contracts for new methods of delivering the mails should not be made until they had been approved by people who were informed about those things, and so they put it into the law; and yet we propose, in this amendment, to repeal that provision.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.
Mr. NELSON. Is the pneumatic-tube service in all these towns conducted and carried on by a single company or concern?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not informed as to that.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I will answer that question, if the Senator from Washington does not object.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not at all.
Mr. WEEKS. One company carries on the service in four or five cities where the pneumatic-tube service is installed, and one company carries it on in the city of Philadelphia.

Mr. NELSON. All Mr. WEEKS. Yes. All the others are under one company?

Mr. NELSON. I should like to ask another question, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly. Mr. NELSON. Perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts can answer it. Does the Senator know at what rate the companies which own this pneumatic service are capitalized? What is the capital of the company that is serving the four places, and what is the capital of the other company that is serving one place?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I do not know what the capital is in either case. Both companies have some outstanding bonds and some capital stock. I think the stocks of the Boston, New York, Chicago, and St. Louis company are listed on the Boston Stock Exchange. I have not looked at the price recently.

Mr. NELSON. Does the Senator know what revenue they get out of this allowance-what percentage it is on the capital?

Mr. WEEKS. They have not paid any dividends on the stocks for years. I do not know that they have ever paid any dividends on the stocks. They have simply paid the interest on the bonds and the operating expenses; and the bonds do not include, in the case of the Boston company, more than one-third, or I think about a quarter, of what it is claimed was the cost of the system.

Mr. POINDEXTER. A history of the original adoption of this service is contained in the report to which I referred.

There is another change in the law which this amendment makes. The present law provides that such an advertisement shall not be issued-

Until, in the judgment of the Postmaster General, the needs of the Postal Service are such as to justify the expenditure involved.

We override that.

In accordance with this act a commission composed of the ablest postal experts in the service was appointed, and, after thorough inves-tigation, recommended that the service be discontinued in the cities of Boston, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Chicago, and St. Louis.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who disputed the statement as to the fact that these recommendations had the unanimous approval of the postmasters and supervisory officials of the post offices involved, will notice that New York is not named in that list, so that it does not refer to the postmaster in New York

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary, A bill (S. 8148) to define and punish espionage.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the further consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair

hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think the Senator will find, upon examining the report of the commission, that New York is involved.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We were not talking about the report of the commission at the time the Senator disputed this propo-

I was reading from this same letter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the letter of the Postmaster General certainly gives the impression that the postmasters of all the cities involved are opposed to the retention of the pneumatic-tube service.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, I will let the statement speak for itself. I will read it over again. It says it is-recommended that the service be discontinued in the cities of Boston, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Chicago, and St. Louis.

Not New York.

These recommendations had the unanimous approval of the postmasters and supervisory officials of the post offices involved, and from the facts before me I am thoroughly convinced that the needs of the Postal Service are not such as to justify the expenditure involved for pneumatic tubes, as the act of 1902 requires. The rental paid for the tubes ($17,000 per annum per mile) is exorbitant, and more efficient service can be rendered by other means at less than one-fifth of the cost.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; I will yield for a question.
Mr. NELSON. I notice in the last part of the committee amendment that a commission is to be appointed to investigate the value of the property with a view to purchasing the property. What is the idea of purchasing the property? Are these people anxious to unload it on the Government? Can the Senator furnish any information on that point?

Mr. REED. Mr. President

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can furnish the suggestion that occurs to me from the amendment which is proposed. I suppose it comes from the same opinion that provides in a mandatory form that we should renew our contracts with them, without the usual safeguards that are thrown around Post Office contracts, and this being a portion of the same amendment, coming from the same source, I assume the desire is that the Government shall acquire these tubes. No doubt the owners desire that they all shall be unloaded upon the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri? Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think I perhaps can throw a little light on that question.

Some months ago I was in the city of St. Louis. A gentle-man insisted that he wanted to talk with me, and he began talking in favor of renewing the contracts for the tube system. He went on to say that the Government ought to acquire this system. I could not place the gentleman at first. I finally inquired who he was and what his business was. He said to me that he was the attorney for the pneumatic-tube company; and in further conversation he said to me that the Government ought to acquire these tubes, that the companies had not made any money out of them, and that they would be glad to sell them to the Government.

It looks very much to me as though that industrious gentleman is now about to secure the enactment of a law that will create a commission to buy these tubes from the companies. I do not think that there is the slightest doubt but that this is an effort of the companies to unload their apparatus on the Government.

I wish to say further, if the Senator will permit me, that it has been stated to me from what I believe to be reliable authority that at least some gentlemen who have come to the city of Washington and have been active in this propaganda had their expenses paid by these companies. I remember one instance which occurred, I think, about four years ago, when a delegation waited upon me; and at its head was a gentleman whom I understood was there as a public-spirited citizen. I have since been informed-and I believe my information to be absolutely reliable—that he has been an attorney for these companies all the time. I give this information in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I prefer not to yield just now.

Mr. LEWIS. I only wanted to submit an inquiry to the Senator from Missouri before the Senator from Missouri re-

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very well. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. LEWIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if, in the judgment of this commission, these tubes are efficient, if they are serviceable, and if they are beneficial to the Government service, would it not be better for the Government really to operate them than that private individuals should?

Mr. REED. If all those "ifs" are true, it might be the Government ought to acquire them. The trouble is, every investigation which has been made has resulted in their condemnation. However, I was answering the inquiry propounded by the Senator from Minnesota, whether there was a desire on the part of the owners of these companies to unload on the Government. That was his phrase, not mine.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Missouri would not regard it against the merits of these tubes if they are meritorious merely that there might be some advice on the part of some to turn them over to the Government for the Government to take and operate them?

Mr. REED. I regard any efforts by private individuals to get through a law which will ultimately compel the purchase of their property, as such a proposition as demands very careful investi-

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, upon the same question I should like to suggest that there is a very obvious reason for the desire of these tube companies to sell them to the Government, because they are so utterly unsuccessful that they can not be used in any other capacity than in the Government service. The Government is the only one that continues to pay them a profitable amount for their services.

In this same report, which I referred to a moment ago, at page 12, the matter is discussed. It says:

Pneumatic tubes have not been a success for commercial purposes. A line of 10-inch tubes, about 42 miles in length, was laid in Boston for commercial uses, but was not a success, and was subsequently leased to the Post Office Department—

An easy game, I suppose-

November 1, 1906, for the transportation of mail, at an annual rental of $17,000 per mile per annum for a period of 10 years.

Mr. WEEKS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. POINDEXTER. In just a moment, if the Senator pleases. Mr. POINDEXTER. In just a moment, it the Senator pleases. It will therefore be seen that the department has already paid approximately $500,000 for a service that was not a success for commercial purposes and of questionable value to the Postal Service. If underground pneumatic-tube service is as valuable as the tube companies represent, the commercial world would not have abandoned this means of transportation, but would have developed and improved it. In New York, with its many miles of subways, no attempt has been made to use tubes for commercial purposes.

The Senator from New York will know whether or not that statement is correct, but if it is correct it seems to me to be a very eloquent commentary upon the failure of this mode of transporting packages, whether packages of letters or parcelpost or ordinary commercial packages, in the business of the I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not want to let the impression pass that there is anything about this proposition of pneumatic tubes which is not in the regular order. The commission of Senators and Representatives considered this subject within three years, reported in the year 1914 in favor of purchasing the tubes, and the proposition which is in the bill does not require the purchase of the tubes. It simply says in furthering the purposes of the report which was made by the commission to which I have just referred, a commission shall be appointed to determine a price at which the tubes may be purchased in whole or in part, and to report that to Congress, so that Congress may then pass on the question whether it is desirable to make the purchase or not.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; I yield.
Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator remarks, "if they are efficient." I was very attentive at the hearings of the committee and I asked every one of the gentlemen who appeared before us as to their efficiency, men who were in the service, mercantile men, the postmaster of New York, and the universal response was, "Yes; they are very efficient."

The intimitation that somebody's expenses were paid to come here and advocate the purchase of these tubes seems to me monstrous. Who can believe that Mayor Mitchel, of the city of New York, who appeared before the committee, left his business and his great affairs to come here and advocate this measure and his expenses here were paid?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator yield? Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly; I do not want to take the Senator's time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Are these tubes in use commercially in any of those cities?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. They are not in use commercially.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why not, if they are so valuable?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The query remains, Why not? It has been less than 20 years that subways were used in New York. They have not grown up to it, but the fact is, if you are asking as to the practicability of it, the city of London is building an immense tube system for the purpose of transporting mails as well as for the transportation of parcels.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Instead of developing and advancing in this country they are declared to be obsolete.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not think they are obsolete at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Now, I will proceed, and my only purpose is to get the information before the Senate. I have not the slightest interest in this matter other than to have the Senate proceed with a reasonable amount of available information which these reports contain. For that reason, I want to read a few more paragraphs from this statement:

Notwithstanding the inefficiency and limited capacity of the tubes, the rental paid is greater per mile than the entire amounts paid the railroads per mile that enter New York City for carrying the entire volume of mail, and approximately three times as much as is paid the railroads that enter Boston for the same purpose.

Owing to the inflexibility of the tube service—

Here he points out in great detail not only the lack of advantages but of positive disadvantages of this system, how they not only do not benefit the service but they do a positive injury to it-and because it can not be expanded to meet recurrent or emergent conditions, congestion occurs and great quantities of mail are delayed. Only recently, during one evening, more than 700 containers were delayed in New York City in the territory below Forty-second Street, where the great financial and business institutions of New York City are located—

Let me say to the Senator-

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment. I should like to finish reading this paragraph-reading this paragraph—and because of this fact the congestion caused train connections to be missed and resulted in delays in some instances of 12 hours in reaching the addressee. In Philadelphia the incoming mail on December 29, 1914, was delayed at Penn Square Terminal from 26 minutes to 1 hour and 16 minutes before even the first container of mail from each train could be sent through the tubes; and similar conditions prevail in other cities where any quantity of mail is to be transported. Such conditions in the Postal Service are deplorable, and in justice to the public steps should be taken to render more efficient service. Approximately 87½ per cent of the mail now transported by tubes can be transported by the present means of surface transportation without additional cost or delay. If the tubes are abandoned, it will be necessary to provide transportation for 12½ per cent of the first-class mail now forwarded by tubes, which represents 0.7 per cent of the entire volume handled at the stations having tube service. It can be easily seen that the claim that this would greatly congest the streets is ridiculous.

The contracts for this service will expire on March 4, 1917, and the department is not under the least moral obligation to renew these contracts or to continue the service further, and the representatives of one of the companies so admitted when appearing before your committee.

This pneumatic-tube service as a means of transportation is obsoleto and has little or no merit. To continue its use would be an extravamittee.

This pneumatic-tule service as a means of transportation is obsolete and has little or no merit. To continue its use would be an extravagance and waste of public money. The companies, realizing this, have no hope of securit, a renewal of their contracts under the law of 1902, and are now endeavoring, although they admit the department is not under the slightest obligation to them to have the service extended, to continue the service by having the Congress direct the Postmaster General to extend the contracts to June 30, 1918. If this amendment prevails and the Congress directs the extension of the contract without competition or regard to the merits of the service involved, it will be establishing a precedent, as there would be nothing to prevent any other contractor for any other branch of the service coming to Congress and asking that the same consideration be shown him.

That the pneumatic tubes as a means of transportation are obsolete can not be demonstrated better than by the fact that a large portion of the system in Boston, which was installed more than 15 years ago for the use of the merchants in transporting parcels, proved an absolute failure and was abandoned and then railroaded on the Postal Service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did he use the word "railroaded"? Mr. POINDEXTER. I am reading the words:

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am reading the words:

The department is confronted with this situation, whether it shall continue the use of the service at an enormous rental and continue to impose on the public an inefficient service by delaying its mail when the mail can be expedited by other means which are efficient and which can save the Government $613,000 each year.

The Postmaster General is charged with the responsibility of administering the Postal Service in an efficient manner and must stand the criticisms of the public when he fails to do so. For that reason he should not have an inefficient service imposed on him, and I trust that the amendment will not prevail and that the department will be permitted to undertake the responsibility for working the matter out in its own way under the law as Congress has written it and in the interest of the public and without an extravagant waste of money. money. Very sincerely,

A. S. BURLESON, Postmaster General.

Mr. President, I have taken rather laborious means of getting the question before the Senate by reading at length the Postmaster General's statement and a portion of the report of the commission appointed to investigate this particular matter; and the Senate will vote, the country having knowl-edge of the facts, will know that when we are denying new rural-delivery routes in new sections of the country, where the people are engaged in opening up new lands and extending the resources of the Nation, establishing homes, adding to the power and the wealth of the country, and yet are deprived of the commonest, most ordinary postal facilities, we have taken $613,000 which might be used to give those facilities and devoted it to a service which is declared by the experts in the Post Office Department to be worse than useless. Not only that, but we are going still further with this most astonishing provision in the face of this report that this service is obsolete, that it is inefficient, that it results in congestion and delay of the mail, that it adds unnecessarily this large amount of money to the postal expenses, and it is proposed here to appoint a commission to ascertain terms with the view of the purchase by the Government of the pneumatic tubes and their franchises and so to permanently load it down with this utterly out-of-date equipment at a great burden of taxes and added annual expense, which such a purchase would entail.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION (S. DOC. NO. 711).

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I present a conference report on Senate bill 703, known as the vocational educational bill, and ask that it lie on the table and be printed.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 703) to provide for the promotion of vocational education; to provide for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such education in agriculture and the trades and industries; to provide for cooperation with the States in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

"That there is hereby annually appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sums provided in sections 2, 3, and 4 of this act, to be paid to the respective States for the purpose of cooperating with the States in paying the salaries of teachers, supervisors, and directors of agricultural subjects, and teachers of trade, home economics, and industrial subjects, and in the preparation of teachers of agricultural, trade, industrial, and home economics subjects; and the sum provided for in section 7 for the use of the Federal board for vocational education for the administration of this act and for the purpose of making studies, investigations, and reports to aid in the organization and conduct of vocational education. which sums shall be expended as hereinafter provided.

And the House agree to the same.

HOKE SMITH, CARROLL S. PAGE. Managers on the part of the Senate. DUDLEY M. HUGHES, W. W. RUCKER, CALEB POWERS. Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I ask that an order be made for a print of the bill as agreed upon in varying type, so that the Senate can understand the changes that have been made in the bill. This is necessary because the House adopted an entire substitute for the Senate bill, and otherwise it would be very difficult to take the two bills and the report and understand just what the conferees have done. We have undertaken to have it prepared in varying type and in a manner that the bill can be used by Senators so that they can easily comprehend the changes from the House bill and from the Senate bill in the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator to state that in the conference report there is new matter?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. SMOOT. New matter not considered by the two Houses? Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; the Senator misunderstood me. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia subsequently said: In presenting the report of the conferees on the vocational educational bill I also presented an order authorizing a republication of the bill. The Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] asked a question while I was presenting the report and the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] failed to yield the floor long enough for me to explain the facts.

I did not in any sense suggest that new matter was found in the conference report. What I wished the Senate to understand was that the House did not take the Senate bill and amend certain paragraphs in the bill. The House adopted an entirely new bill, striking out the Senate bill after the caption, but the House bill is in the language of the Senate bill almost from first to last. There were a few places in which changes were made in the Senate bill by the House, yet we had to deal with the entire House substitute as one amendment to our bill.

For that reason the conferees desire a reprint in varying type, from which the Senator can take the conference report and easily see just what changes were made by the House and just which of the changes by the House the conferees on the part of the Senate have agreed to. I ask an order for the print for the convenience of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair

hears none, and it is so ordered.

The order was reduced to writing, as follows:

Mr. BROUSSARD. I move to concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SMOOT. From the reading of the amendments made by the House I judge that there have been about as many claims added to the bill as were passed by the Senate in the original measure. I think it ought to go over and be printed so that we may inquire into some of the claims that have been added to the bill in the House.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I think I can explain to the satisfaction of the Senator from Utah how these amend-ments were placed in the bill by the other House, so that there will be no objection on his part.

Mr. President, this bill is an omnibus bill, containing some 64 other bills regarding mutual building associations which were taxed under the act of 1909. They were also taxed in 1910. The act of 1909 exempted from the operation of the special act of August 5 mutual building associations. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue construed the act to mean that some of the mutual building associations did not come within the purview of the law, and he collected taxes from such building associations. Subsequently there were two test cases made and the courts held that taxes were not to be collected from these associations. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue immediately proceeded to reimburse those building associations which had paid taxes less than two years prior to the decision. A great number of building associations, however, had paid taxes more than two years before the decision was rendered, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue held that he had no authority to reimburse those amounts.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand all that the Senator has said about the case, but what I wanted to know was why the Senate did not include the amendments which have been incorporated by the other House.

Mr. BROUSSARD. If the Senator will permit me, I can explain that very easily. At the time this matter was taken up by the Committee on Claims of the Senate there were 64 bills pending for a refund from 64 of these associations. The committee went over the case very carefully, and after investigation directed me to make a report on those 64 cases then pending. After this report was made many other cases turned up and were verified by me as directed by the committee, and, instead of bringing in another bill in the Senate for these cases, inasmuch as the Senate had already passed the omnibus bill which had been reported by the Committee on Claims, I advised the claimants to go before the other House and have their claims verified, as they had been verified in the first instance by the Senate committee. The amendments carry the additional number and include, as I understand, every possible claim growing out of such collections.

SMOOT. Does the Senator know whether all those claims that were put upon the bill in the House were reported upon by the department, and whether the department holds that they are just claims against the Government?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I know that the committee of the House proceeded in the same way that the Senate committee proceeded, and referred all of the bills to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; that the amounts paid were verified and checked, and that these amendments were incorporated in the House bill to simplify the proceedings and to get through the entire matter.

Mr. President, I believe that these claims can be disposed of Of course, if the Senator from Utah insists upon in this way. having the bill printed and go over, I shall have no objection to urge to that course, but I am satisfied that all of these amendments are correctly reported, and that every one of the building associations covered by the bill is entitled to the re-fund which is carried in this bill, and that it includes all of the refunds that will have to be met under the misconstruction of the act of 1909.

Mr. SMOOT. Upon the assurance of the Senator that these claims are just claims against the Government and in all respects similar to the claims that we have already allowed, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19410) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the Senate having cleared the parliamentary situation relating to the amendment on page 15, we now come to the consideration of the question upon its merits. I do not intend to consume more than seven or eight minutes of the time of the Senate in the discussion of

So far as the first paragraph of the amendment, in which the committee undertakes to direct the expenditure of the appropriations, is concerned, the custom in the matter is as old as the rules of the Senate themselves. To say that Congress may appropriate money for a purpose and that it has not the power to direct how that money shall be expended is equivalent to saying that the Congress has no power whatever over its appropriation bills. That is all I care to say, Mr. President, on that subject.

That brings me to a consideration of the second paragraph of this amendment, which provides for the creation of a commission for the purpose of investigating the whole question of pneumatic-tube service and report upon it to Congress. This provision of the emendment is simply an extension of the authority given heretofore to a commission to investigate this subject, commonly known in the Senate as the Smith Commission. That commission made a very thorough and complete investigation of the entire question, inquiring into the cost, inquiring into what the tubes could be duplicated for, and inquiring into the fact as to whether or not the rental paid was excessive on the investment made. Their final conclusion, Mr. President, was that the Government of the United States ought by some means or some process to ascertain what these tubes could be acquired for. They recommended that that be done, and, if conditions justified it, that the Government, at some price to be agreed upon after a thorough investigation of this question, might take over a part or all of these tubes under such conditions as might be agreed upon by the companies and the Government.

Mr. President, there has been a great deal said in this discussion about extravagance and about the unnecessary money that has been expended and is about to be expended in the operation of pneumatic tubes. When this matter was under consideration by the committee large and intelligent delegations of business men from all the cities where the tubes are operated appeared before the committee and protested in every way they could, and with all the earnestness they could command, against the discontinuance of the service, upon the ground that the use of the tubes greatly expedited the transmission of first-class While it is true, as everybody understands, that a very small percentage of the second or third class matter passes through these tubes, they are extremely useful in expediting the rapid transmission of first-class matter, registered matter, and other matter of similar character.

It must not be forgotten, Mr. President, by the Senate that 85 or 87 per cent of the total commerce of this country, in its last analysis, passes through the mails. I do not know-and I do not think anyone else knows-what economy there would be, if there would be any economy, by reason of the discontinuance of these tubes and the substitution of automobile service or any other character of truck service that might be substituted by the Government.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Alabama a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Those of us who have not had an opportunity to attend the hearings or had time to read them are at a loss to understand why the department should be so earnestly against this service and why they think it unwise to continue it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I can not answer that question, but from the evidence submitted to the committee there was not a dissenting voice against its continuance amongst those who appeared from the various cities which are enjoying the privilege of the tube service. Of course I have no means of knowing, except from what I have read in the report of the Postmaster General, what his objections to a continuance of the service are, but 1 am of the opinion, Mr. President, that the people in all the great cities where this service is maintained, cities where more than $75,000,000 of postal revenues are paid into the Treasury, are entitled to some consideration when it comes to a disturbance of the postal facilities which they have enjoyed so long and with which they are so well pleased.

Mr. BORAH. I agree to that proposition, of course, but it occurs to me that there must be some facts which have been gathered as the result of investigation upon the part of the department in some way disclosing the unwisdom of this proposition.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is true that the commission appointed by the Postmaster General almost two years ago was instructed to report at a certain time in order that legislation might be had. and that report does contain perhaps the information the Senator from Idaho would like to have.

Now, Mr. President, I am admonished that the Senate has an important function to perform at 1 o'clock, and so I have very little time in which to discuss this question. I desire to say, however, that during the consideration of this whole matter the question of economy in the post office service has never dis-furbed me in the least. I believe that the Post Office Department was organized and has been conducted for the purpose of rendering the best possible service that can be given to the people of this country in the transmission of their mails, and whether it costs a few hundred dollars or a few thousand dollars more to perform that service in one way or another does not concern me. What I want is efficient, rapid distribution of the first-class mails of this country, which so intimately and vitally affect the business and commerce of the Nation.

But, Mr. President, there is another question involved in the discussion of this matter, and that is the preservation of human life. We all know the condition of congestion that prevails, and has prevailed for a number of years, in cities like New York and other cities where the pneumatic-tube service is in operation.

Mr. President, for the present I yield to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson].

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19410) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on pages 15 and 16.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, that is the amendment which we had under discussion previous to our having gone to the joint session?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senate indulge me for a few moments. At the outset let me confess my interest in the city of Chicago, the principal city of the State which my colleague and myself represent, and the city I live in.

Mr. President, I am interested in maintaining these pneumatic tubes. I confess no technical knowledge concerning them and no personal knowledge of the manner in which they serve. The information which I have upon the subject is conveyed to me by the merchants of the city and by reports upon the subject which I have studied. I understand the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and one or two other cities and that one of my own State are practically upon the same footing, the interests of all being alike.

Mr. President, I should like to get out of the mind of the Senate what appears to me to be a false impression, created, of course, not intentionally, but deduced from the views expressed by certain Senators upon this side of the Chamber.

Mr. President, there is no effort here to wholly abolish all the automobile service and install in its place only the pneumatic tube at this time. Neither is there an effort to wholly abolish the pneumatic service as a service and substitute the automobile because of any contention that the tubes are not serviceable. The whole issue is presented upon the ground of economy of expense to the Federal Government.

Mr. President, at the outset I should like to make this observation. If it is a mere matter of economy of expense, and that is to be the only thing considered, I should like to urge that if the automobiles are cheaper than the tubes, then the horse and wagon preceding the automobiles are cheaper than the automobiles, and then the horse with the saddlebags of mail preceding the wagon was cheaper than the wagon; and if it is a mere matter of expense and that is the only consideration, then, sir, we might as well return to the primitive method, as much less expense would be involved then than by any modern methods which are now in vogue.

Mr. President, I have great respect for the Postmaster Gen-I know that his efforts are sincere; that his viewpoint is one of economy; that he is anxious to save the Government unnecessary expense, and that he is sincerely imbued with the impression that the system that he is opposing is more expensive than the one which he is advocating or he would not be advocating the one and denouncing the other. The Postmaster The Postmaster General, Albert Sidney Burleson, is a credit to his office and an honor to his country-

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President— The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PITTMAN in the chair) Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho? Mr. LEWIS. I yield to my honorable friend from Idaho, of course.

Mr. BORAH. What is the difference in expense as contemplated or urged by the Postmaster General? What saving does he contend will be made?

Mr. LEWIS. I should like to ask the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks]. He has some figures in his hand, and lest I be inaccurate in my statement, I would like the Senator to give the Senator from Idaho the exact figures that are presented.

Mr. WEEKS. I did not understand the Senator from Idaho.
Mr. BORAH. The question which I asked was what saving does the Postmaster General contend will be made in the way of economy by inaugurating the automobile system as a substitute for the pneumatic-tube system?

Mr. WEEKS. It is pretty difficult to answer that accurately, but he recommends an appropriation of $482,000 for tubes below Forty-second Street, New York, and there is an item in the bill of $400,000 additional for automobiles. Just how that is to be divided or how to be used nobody seems to know. The testimony is not accurate, but assuming that is to replace the tube system which is dispensed with, or the part of it which is to be dispensed with, it would mean $882,000, which would be about $60,000 or $75,000 less than the appropriation.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts. I was desirous of being accurate. The exact figures were not before me and I was about to repeat them from my best memory only.

Mr. President, I beg to impress upon the Senate a few thoughts in support of my contention. In the first place, Senators, in a great city such as Chicago, with 1,250 passenger trains a day and countless other trains carrying mail and expressage, with mail destined for every part of the world, Senators will readily see that celerity of service, haste, and certainty are of more worth to the business community than the mere matter of saving some expense in the transportation.

Now, assume for a moment, sir, that we abolish the tube system, that we return to the vehicles, and that these vehicles shall be automobiles, is there a Senator in this body passing through the city of Chicago, of which I have the honor with my colleague to speak, who can not perceive what that would mean? From 20 station points these automobiles would be clogged in the street for 10 minutes, 15 minutes, an hour, half a day, and sometimes the whole of a day, behind every form of delivery wagon. behind every form of obstruction. There is no law that gives them the right of way. They are not a fire engine or belonging to a fire patrol. Nothing need get out of their way. They are thus deterred, obstructed, and delayed. If they miss the particular train, say, bound for the Pacific coast, or that to the Atlantic coast, the mail may miss a ship, they may miss connection across the Pacific, one across the Atlantic; and the busi-They are not a fire engine or belonging ness of the country which should be done with quickness and celerity in that way is so delayed, so that weeks upon weeks may follow in delay when large business transactions fail, all because of that delay caused by our consideration merely of the lesser cost of the one system as compared to another.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LEWIS. Surely.

Mr. THOMAS. It seems to me, from the statement of the Senator, it would follow that we should use these tubes for the additional 88 per cent of mails which are now transported on the surface, that if the interference with speedy delivery is so great we should change it.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator's position would be well taken if it were not that mail is divided in classes. That which in the nature of things is first class and which has to go speedily is that in part which is committed to the tubes, and that which does not require such immediateness of delivery is that which is submitted to vehicles. There must always be these divisions. I am referring to that class requiring quick delivery and say to my distinguished friend from Colorado it is because of that that I must impress upon the Senate the necessity to consider something more than the mere matter of expense,

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] this morning called attention from the reports that, far from saving anything, to the contrary the very reports of the Department of the Post Office, if obeyed, will involve more money in their entirety than the full amount recommended by the committee for the tubes.

So in the finality there is really no money finally saved in the last analysis. The only amount of money that is saved is the proportion that might be paid for tubes, which might be less than a certain proportion of automobiles which they say would take the place of the tubes, but the amount for all the automobiles exceeds in its succession all the amount of the automobiles and the tubes

This system, Mr. President, comprehends continuing certain automobiles for certain service and the tubes for certain other service. As it has been reported, sir, by the business associations of the large cities to which I have alluded, this is necessary in order that they may increase their business and continue it.

Now, Mr. President, permit me to say, sir, there is a report read by the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. Poin-DEXTER] which starts out on the assumption that everything that is said in behalf of the tubes must be wrong. There seems to be wholly an abandonment; no reflection. There comes a report to-day denouncing the tubes as having none of the things which only a year or two ago they were specifically recom-mended as possessing. There seems to be a complete willingness to present reports here denouncing as wanting in the very things which under similar conditions one or two years ago were presented as having wholly the things which is now disclaimed. Surely these changes are brought about by the recommendations of subordinates of the Post Office Department made to its head, the head itself having no opportunity to learn the facts and taking the department's subordinates as the sole source of authority.

Mr. President, I charge no man with ignorance, but I do charge that it is gravely reflected in a community which I represent that large interests engaged in automobile manufacturing, which necessarily, of course, will benefit if the contracts for automobiles are given out by the Government, have been busy in convincing the subordinates of the Government that they can, by this automobile system which can be put into effect by the automobiles they may be able to sell to the Government, supersede the whole service of the tubes, both in service and time of delivery.

Mr. President, I now call to the attention of my learned friend from Colorado, and it is of record, that the exhibition given to prove that the automobiles could go successfully through the streets of Chicago and land from place to place with more certainty, of course, than the tubes was, as here reported, given on Sunday, when, of course, it must be perfectly apparent to all Senators present no real test could have been made under those circumstances, for Sunday could never have been a day by which it could be ascertained what blockade and obstruction would be put before those vehicles in a busy day, rendering them impotent, almost useless, for the quickness of service. I must respectfully insist, therefore, that these subordinates, who have been able to convince the heads of the department, have themselves been deluded by representations by tests that clearly were not made under circumstances that could be at all just.

Mr. President, my interest in the matter, as I have manifested very clearly, is that the merchants of the city for which I speak tell me that this service is to their welfare and their interest; that they have no financial interest in the tubes, they have none in the automobiles, but they are only anxious that they shall have an opportunity to send their goods as rapidly through the mails as possible, and send their mail as rapidly as possible. that end they are asking that both these systems be continued.

Mr. President, I ask to tender at this time, and I ask to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, the reply of the American Pneumatic Service Co., signed by its president, to certain charges made in the report read this morning by the Senator from Washington. I ask that it be printed as a part of my remarks in order that I may not burden the Senate by reading it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be so ordered.

The communication referred to is as follows:

AMERICAN PNEUMATIC SERVICE Co., Boston, December 9, 1916.

To our stockholders:

The annual report of the Postmaster General, just published, contains so many inaccurate statements regarding our mail-tube service, and exhibits such an unaccountable spirit of hostility to our interests, that we feel it our duty to call the matter to your attention and to request your aid and cooperation.

The statements of fact which are not true appear chiefly in the quoted extracts from the report of a commission appointed by the Postmaster General, but in part in the Postmaster General's own report. The prejudice against our company appears in both.

MISSTATEMENTS OF FACT.

master Generai, but in part in the Postmaster General's own report. The prejudice against our company appears in both.

MISSTATEMENTS OF PACT.

The report of the commission states that "the capacity of each tube container is limited to about 5 pounds of letter mail."

This statement is untrue. The capacity of each one of our containers is about 10 pounds, or 500 letters.

This report states that "the rapidity of dispatch of tube containers is limited to intervals of about 15 seconds."

This statement is untrue. Our containers are dispatched at intervals of 8 to 10 seconds, and under certain conditions can be dispatched at even smaller intervals.

The report states that "* * "only about 20 pounds of letter mail can be dispatched each minute." * * * "only about 20 pounds of letter mail can be dispatched each minute. The truth is that we can dispatch 60 pounds or more, or 3,000 letters each minute.

The commission states that the "paralleling of the entire system of tubes by vehicular service at the time of heavy dispatches" has been necessitated.

The inference plainly intended is that letter mail has frequently to be carried by vehicler, because our tube containers are so limited in size and infrequent of dispatch that they have not been able to do the work for which they were intended.

This statement and intended inference is untrue. Our service is ample for the dispatch of letter mail at all times, even during holiday seasons. The "vehicular service" referred to by the commission is provided for the transportation of second-class mall—newspapers, periodicals, and parcel post—for which the mail-tube system was never intended.

The commission further states that "complaints resulting from damage to mail "in our tube service are "frequent."

This statement is not in accordance with the facts. The truth is that complaints of damage to mail due to openings of the containers or any other cause are very infrequent. Our systems in five cities carry approximately 26,000,000 letters per day—8,000,000,000 letters in the MISLEADING STATEMENTS.

Besides these glaring misstatements the report contains statements of half truths with misleading inferences.

The commission says that the service is inflexible, and that "it can not be expanded to meet recurring or emergent conditions, thus resulting in congestion." The inference plainly intended is that there have been "recurring or emergent conditions" under which our service has broken down. But this is not the fact. Our service has never failed to carry efficiently and satisfactorily the letter mail which it was constructed to carry.

down. But this is not the fact. Our service has never falled to carry efficiently and satisfactorily the letter mail which it was constructed to carry.

The report comments upon "inability of tubes to carry many special-delivery parcels," plainly implying that our system has thus partially falled in what was expected of it. But the fact is, as already stated, our tubes were intended only for letter mail and not for parcel delivery, although, in point of fact, we actually carry those parcels which are not too large for our containers.

The report comments upon the "necessary relaying of containers at way stations," and the "inability to dispatch mail to intermediate stations during continuous transmission between any two points."

The statement exaggerates a trivial matter. The loss of time resulting is merely a matter of seconds and entirely negligible in the practical operation of the system. In point of fact, mail urgent for delivery at one point never has to wait for mail going to another, for at any moment the operator may shift at will the transmission of mail from one point to another.

The report comments upon the fact that the "discontinuance of service on an entire line results from stoppage of operation of the tube at any point on that line."

Naturally. It hardly takes a postal expert to know that if a tube is stopped up it can not be used until it is cleaned out. But the inference which this statement is intended to carry is that such stoppage frequently occurs in our tubes, and this is unfair and untrue. Such stoppages are exceedingly rare. In our St. Louis tubes there has been no such occurrence for over two years.

The report comments unfavorably upon the fact that our terminal equipment "occupies a considerable amount of desirable space * * *"

THE MERITS OF OUR SERVICE

The same trivial criticism might be made of any labor-saving machine or device.

The Merits CF Our Service.

Our mail system has heretofore had the approval of every Postmaster General since it was installed, in 1893, under Postmaster General Wanamaker. Five commissions appointed for the purpose, including leading engineers in the country, have investigated and examined our operations. Congressional committees have given the matter careful thought and investigation. Commercial and civic organizations in cities where our systems have operated have carefully investigated their use. Hitherto no one has ever reported otherwise than in approval of the usefulness and efficiency of our service. A congressional committee has recently reported its conclusion in the following terms:

"The pneumatic-tube service for the transmission of mails is a valuable adjunct to the mail-transportation service for handling first-class, registered, and special-delivery mails not furnished by other means of transportation, and is justified by the advantages of availability, expedition, security, and reliability.

The present Postmaster General disregards the opinions and judgment of all these gentlemen, including his predecessors. He apparently regards all their opinions as those which come under his characterization of "well-meaning but ill-informed citizens."

In his attempt to discredit in advance what we shall say in our reply to his attack upon our company, the Postmaster General makes a series of statements and charges amazing in their inaccuracy, discourteous in their phrasing, and baseless and unwarranted in their substance. As to these, we shall present the facts at the hearing granted us by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. It is enough now to say that these statements and charges, made by or upon the authority of the Postmaster General are unworthy of him and of his high position and ill beft an official Government document, which in its statements ought to be fair, unbiased, accurate, judicial, dignifed, and cour

WILLIAM H. AMES, President.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.
Mr. JONES. I want to say to the Senator from Illinois that I have very little information with reference to this matter. About all the information that I have I obtained through reading a copy of a letter from the Postmaster General, which was sent to the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, setting out the position of the department. I find this statement in that letter, and I should like to ask for information the Senator's view with reference

The department is confronted with this situation—whether it shall continue the use of the service at an enormous rental and continue to impose on the public an inefficient service by delaying its mail when the mail can be expedited by other means which are efficient and which can save the Government $613,000 each year.

There is a direct statement by the Postmaster General that he can render much more efficient service than we now have and that it will also make a saving to the Government of $613,000 annually. If those statements are correct, I do not know what would justify me in voting for this amendment. If they are not correct, of course I should like to know it.

Mr. YEWIS. Mr. President in the first place I wish to cove

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, in the first place, I wish to say to the able Senator from Washington that these figures of the Postmaster General, honestly presented and presented from a sincerity of his convictions, as I have said before, are born of the subordinates have subordinates have deductions taken from subordinates, which subordinates have been imposed upon, as I feel, by those who are interested in another form of service.

First, sir, they are but a calculation based upon an assumption of a condition of facts that they have never had an opportunity to work out, which are that if they had automobiles they could deliver and could deliver without obstruction and within a certain length of time and accomplish just as much as the tubes have already accomplished. Naturally the Postmaster General assumes that if these facts presented to him are true, this amount of saving, as suggested by him, would follow.

Mr. President, I may startle the Senator from Washington when I say to him that, for myself, I am not willing to take any system merely because it may be cheaper than another. hold that the mere saving of some money to the Government in lessening a service, to be supplanted by some service that might be rendered more cheaply, is not the first consideration. avail would it be to us

I yield to the Senator from Washington. Mr. LEWIS.

The Senator from Illinois did not understand me to say that I would vote for a system simply because it was cheaper; but the Postmaster General couples the statement of saving with a statement that he can do this work more efficiently, as well as effecting a saving.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the able Senator from Washington probably did not hear what I had previously, in the opening of my remarks, called attention to, that the deductions and prophecies of the Postmaster General were based on his honest belief in those who had reported to him. It is, of course a belief; and it may be, sir, that there are circumstances which might produce the result which the Postmaster General says would follow; it may be I am wrong; it may be all of those who have instructed me may be wrong; it may be that all the merchants of these large cities may be wrong who say that they have tried this system and they find it to be to the best advantage of commerce and business; but the only test we have had, I may say to the Senator from Washington, has proven that the tubes have, with a very slight exception, disclosed the capacity to deliver with celerity and alacrity, they having been obstructed but in rare instances—in St. Louis not once in even two years—whereas it must be perfectly plain that automobiles could never escape obstructions from time to time, hour upon hour, and day upon day, which would mean demoralization of the whole quick service of the mails through

Mr. President, there is a thing I beg to impress upon the Members of the Senate. There is no provision here calling upon the Senators to vote these tubes as a permanent policy upon the Government. There was a commission which reported concerning this matter. The only proposition that Senators are called upon now to sustain is that reported by the majority of the Post Office Committee authorizing these tubes to remain in their present service, not to disturb the service as it now is; that is, to continue it until the coming year. In the meantime a commission is to be authorized to investigate all of the facts. from all the persons, the merchants who have made representations to us, those who have made representations to the subordinates of the Post Office Department, the subordinates of that department themselves to be heard, and upon that report to reach the final conclusion: First, whether it is advisable for us to have the tube system; second, if so, shall the Government enter upon the construction and ownership of the tubes themselves; or, third, shall it be done through private compa-This does no more, as the Senate will see upon examining the report, than to give to these people a chance to be heard, not immediately disrupting their service but allowing time to elapse in which it may be decided, upon thorough investigation, what is the best system.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Illinois seems to be laboring under the apprehension that the automobile has not been fully tested to determine accurately whether or not it is capable of doing the service that the tubes are doing. The Senator ought to be aware of the fact that the automobile to-The day carries more than 50 per cent of the letter mail of the cities where the tubes are installed. The tube only carries, I think, in the Senator's city probably 50 per cent of the letter mail, which is only about 12 per cent of the total mail, making it a very small percentage of the entire volume of mail. The automobile has been thoroughly tested in carrying the mail, and I do not see how there could be made a more convincing or conclusive test than has already been made.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the system which prevails in the locality where I live-of course, I can not speak for New York or Boston, whose distinguished representatives here will speak for them-is so arranged that a certain class of mail that is clearly emergency mail, depending on its volume, is sent through the tubes and thus quickly expedited. The Senator from Mississippi, ever anxious to get at the justice of any matbe called letter mail, that is carried in automobiles. It is for that reason that I said that we were not seeking to wholly destroy either system but to include and continue both, and that we only asked to have the tubes continued for that particular special service so necessary to the welfare of the business of a city such as Chicago.

Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. LEWIS. I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suggest to the Senator that, while it is a fact that perhaps only 40 or 50 per cent of the first-class letter mail of the city of Chicago is carried in the tubes and that perhaps 60 per cent is carried by automobiles, the reason for that is that the tubes are very limited in extent and do not reach the greater portion of the city. Many of the substations are not supplied with the tube service. The greatest channel of transportation, as I understand, in Chicago, which the tubes provide, is from the general post office to the stockyards.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator is quite correct.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the tube service were extended, it could take all the letter mail.

Mr. LEWIS. I referred to that a moment ago without being so definite by using the words "geographical limitation." I did not assume that the Senate would know as to the location of the stockyards and the relative geographical points of my city, and therefore I did not allude to the stockyards by name. course, if the tube service should be extended all over the city, it is assumed that it would accommodate the full needs of the

But, Mr. President, when I yielded to the able Senator from Mississippi I was alluding to the fact that surely the Senate can find it agreeable to grant to Chicago and to the other large cities their request that they be allowed this particular kind of service that all of their people insist is a necessity.

Mr. President, will it be overlooked, and will I be condemned by the Senate, for calling attention to the fact that communi-ties which furnish such a large percentage of the mails and which have such large use for the post office might be heard and might themselves be the judge of that which best serves their necessity? When it is not a question of the interest of the automobiles or the tube service, but of the merchants themselves, surely their voice ought to be accepted, for they are the first to lose. If their position be not well taken, they would be the very first to suffer the disadvantage; and surely it will not be assumed that their representatives would come here and ask for a system for the accommodation of anyone whomsoever that would mean a loss to their business and a destruction of their precedence and prosperity in commerce. So, may I take the liberty to impose upon the Senate the thought that those who are so greatly interested, and who come without dissent, should be considered as the best equipped to express themselves upon that which best serves their interest? Even if it were conceded that a little increased expense did follow, if the increase is offset by the very great benefit to prosperity and commerce, that should be considered, as I see it.

I will not disguise to the Senate a personal interest. I am anxious that my community, represented by my distinguished colleague and myself, shall have that which they have appealed for; and I submit to the Senate that this is the first time, as it will recall, that Chicago has raised her voice and asked to be will recan, that Chicago has raised her voice and asked to be given any consideration. If she is entitled to it, she ought to have it; if she is not entitled to it, no appeal of hers should give it to her; but if, on the other hand, there be no potent or unanswerable reason why she should not be given it, she ought not to be denied it merely because there are certain sections of the country which, knowing nothing of her needs, have concluded that from their point of view she ought not to have it.

I respectfully ask that the amendment be agreed to, and that the judgment of the majority of the committee be acquiesced in,

Mr. WEEKS obtained the floor.

Mr. WEEKS obtained the floor.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. WEEKS. Certainly.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I did not know the Senator from Massachusetts had the floor. I yield to him, of course.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I desire to refer to some of the matters which have been discussed relating to this service, because I do not think that Senators generally understand all because I do not think that Senators generally understand all of its phases. It is a service that has been in operation 16 years. At least five commissions have given consideration to its adaptability and other questions relating to it, the last from Mississippi, ever anxious to get at the justice of any matter, is quite correct that there is also similar mail, that might for the Government to purchase this system. That was the commission of which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] was the chairman. The only commission that has ever expressed doubt about this service was the one created in 1901; but later, in 1902, another commission, made up of experts outside of the Post Office Department, reported favorably on this system. Its report was indorsed by those who had been members of the 1901 commission, and it was in 1902 that the rate of $17,000 a mile was established. Certainly if that was a fair rate at that time, it can not be a high rate under the conditions which exist to-day.

I do not pretend, however, to say what is or is not a fair rate for this service. I do know, however, Mr. President, that the hearings indicate that the service is not profitable; that no dividends have been paid on the stocks of these companies; that about a third, or less than a third, of the cost is represented by bonds; that interest is paid on the bonds alone; and that the officers of the Philadelphia company, for instance, receive no salary whatever and have not received any. The probabilities are that the net returns, based on a charge of $17,000 a mile, are not more than 3 per cent, and probably not more than 2½ per cent, on the capital actually invested, which was reported by Senator Smith's commission as being about $10,000,000.

While I do not base any claim for a renewal or a continuance of the service on the moral issue, I submit to the Senate this proposition, that when private citizens are invited by the Government to invest their money in a service which is used solely by the Government there is some connection, at least of interest, which should give at least a fair consideration to a renewal of the service, if it is not altogether inefficient.

In this case it should also be brought to the attention of the Senate that there is not a single rod of service which has been installed except at the request of the Post Office Department. We can not, of course, hold former administrations responsible for what has taken place, but there have been extensions made in the service under this administration. Last summer, while we were considering a renewal of this appropriation, there was an application from the department to the Pneumatic Tube Co. to extend the service to accommodate a change in the Back Bay post office, Boston, at an expense of between $30,000 and $40,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, does the Senator intend to say that there has not been a rod of this service that was not constructed except at the request of the Government?

Mr. WEEKS. I mean to say that none of it has been installed at the expense of the Government-

Mr. VARDAMAN. I mean at the request of the Government. Mr. WEEKS. In the last 10 years during the time the same contract has been in effect-

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator understands, of course, that the system in Boston was put in for a very different purpose.

Mr. WEEKS. Oh, yes; and, as the changes have been rung on that, I may as well answer that suggestion here and now. Some 15 years ago the merchants of Boston decided that they would like to try the experiment of transporting packages to suburban sections through a pneumatic-tube service. Boston, as most Senators know, is peculiarly located. There are about 700,000 people in the city proper and about as many more located within 10 miles of the State house. Boston is surrounded by a chain of cities ranging from 30,000 to 150,000 in population. In order to get the packages from the center of Boston to the outlying districts, the merchants tried the experiment of sending them by means of a tube service. It was found to be too expensive a method of handling packages, and, after trying it for two or three years, they concluded that they could use to better advantage the local express companies, which run from the center of Boston to the outlying communities, because that would obviate the handling of the packages as many times as would be necessary under the tube system. For instance, in order to use the tubes, a merchant would have to send his packages to a central station or to a tube station, and then have a team to receive them at the other end to deliver them. Sending them direct by the local express companies simply meant loading them into a wagon of the express company at the store, and delivering them from the very same wagon.

I think that there is not another service like it in the United States; but that tube was taken over on exactly the same terms that new ones were constructed. Instead of the 10-inch cylinder being used, an 8-inch cylinder has been run through the 10-inch It did not pay to send packages through the tubes; but Senators should not forget that this tube service is primarily for first-class mail, mail that demands and requires rapid transit. It was never intended to send second, third, or fourth class matter through the tubes; it has not been done, and quite likely it is not desirable that it should be done.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] raised within few minutes the point that not more than half the firstclass mail of these cities is carried by the tubes. Of course that is true, because the tubes only reach certain sections of a There are at least 25 substations to the Boston post office not reached by the tubes at all; and, of course, the mail between those substations and the main office must be carried by automobiles or in some other way. That is the reason why $400,000 in addition to the $5,600,000 already appropriated for screen-wagon service and other service of that kind is added to the appropriation this year. Four hundred thousand dollars-and I want this to answer what the Senator from Washington has said—presumably $400,000 is to be appropriated to buy additional automobiles. The department recommends that $482,000 shall be appropriated for pneumatic-tube service below Forty-second Street in New York City. Add that $492,000 to the $400,000, and it leaves a difference of about $75,000 between the total department's appropriation for this service and what is recommended by the committee for the tube serv-In other words, instead of there being a loss of $613,000 from the worst standpoint, there is a loss of less than $75,000. Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes. Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Massachusetts contend that the adoption of this amendment will represent a difference of only about $75,000?

Mr. WEEKS. About that.

Mr. BORAH. Then the statement which was read by the Senator from Washington as to a saving of something over $600,000, the Senator contends, is not well founded?

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator can see that it can not be true, because the Postmaster General recommends $482,000. Add to that the amount which he says he will save, $613,000, and it would amount to $1,095,000, while the committee only appropriates $966,000.

Mr. BORAH. Now, another question. Who owns these pneumatic tubes?

WEEKS. The American pneumatic-tube service is owned by three or four thousand stockholders-I do not know how many.

Mr. BORAH. Who are the principal stockholders?

Mr. WEEKS. I have no idea. I never have looked up the stock list. There have been no dividends paid on the stock since the year 1.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There are over 3,500 stockholders. They are scattered mainly all over the New England States, although, of course, there are stockholders in other sections.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask the Senator another question. Is he of the opinion that we should, then, continue to patronize this pneumatic-tube service in the ownership of private individuals, or should we own it?

Mr. WEEKS. I should like to ans I should like to answer that question now. The Post Office Committee, perhaps with the exception of one or two members-one member certainly-believes that the Government should own this service at some price; and that was the purpose of putting in the provision to have a commission investigate the price and report to Congress. That is simply carrying out the report of the Hoke Smith Commission, which recommended the purchase of these tubes, but did not go any further. Now we are going to the extent of asking somebody to find out what the tubes can be bought for and then to consider whether or not we shall purchase them.

Mr. JONES. Or a portion of them.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. BORAH. To purchase a portion of them or all of them. One other question. Does the Senator think that the price which we are now paying for the tube service is a reasonable price?

Mr. WEEKS. All I can say is that I would not think of putting a cent of money into this proposition based on the present rental to the Government. Whether it is reasonable or not I am not competent to say; but I think that a man comes pretty near being crazy to invest money in this enterprise under present conditions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. As to the matter of stockholders, I will ay that I have received during the past two months, I think, 20 letters, mostly from citizens of New Hampshire, and several of them from women, saying that they have stock in this corporation; that it is not a profitable stock; and expressing the hope that unfavorable legislation will not be enacted. I did not before know that the stock was scattered in the way stated. but it seems to be held to a very large extent throughout the New England States, and manifestly it has not been a very good paying stock, from what I learn from my correspondents.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Has the Senator from Massachusetts any idea how much charge per mile would be profitable if ,000 per mile is not profitable?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not know about that, Mr. President, but I know I would not put money, and I would not advise anyone else to put money, into the company operating this service based on a charge of $17,000 a mile.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator dispute the fact stated by the Postmaster General that, even at $17,000 a mile, which evidently can not be maintained if it is unprofitable, this is the most expensive mail service in existence?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not think it is the most expensive when I do not think there what it does is taken into consideration. is any justification for that statement. It is the most expensive per mile service, but you can not compare this service with railroad service, where the carrying of the mail is only supplemental to the real purposes of the railroad, and that comparison which the Postmaster General has made would never have been made and would not be given any consideration by any business man of standing.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, it might be given consideration by Of course, the conditions are somewhat different, but still the results to be obtained are very much greater by one method than by the other.

Mr. WEEKS. One might as well compare the fleetness of a race horse with the speed of an ox as to compare the service performed by pneumatic tubes with what is done by the rail-

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Postmaster General says that the net result is that the mails are delayed.

Mr. WEEKS. If the Senator will bear with me, I will demonstrate to him that there is nothing in that statement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Another question-

Mr. WEEKS. And, moreover, let me say now, as long as I have the floor and can answer it, that the Postmaster General gave instances where mail was delayed below Forty-second Street in New York, and yet recommends that the service be continued in the very place where he says there were delays.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether he knows anything about the salaries that are received by the officials of the companies, and where does this $17,000 per mile per year go, if the stockholders, the widows and orphans to whom the Senator has referred, get no part of it at all? Who gets it? Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President-

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one word in addition. It seems to me that a pneumatic-tube service, in the very nature of the thing, would not be very expensive in operation. Possibly there could be some large saving made somewhere; and if the Senator knows who receives those amounts of money, I should like to have him inform us.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not think there can be a saving unless there is a saving made due to the attacks of the Government on this service, which is entirely dependent upon the Government. I have never been through the books, and I suggest to the Senator from Washington that he make an investigation in his own time and on his own account relating to that. I never have heard it suggested that there was any undue or unreasonable salary paid to anybody connected with this service, or that the expenses were greater than they should be for conducting such a service. I do know that the stockholders do not get any dividends. That is perfectly apparent by looking at any financial return; and I do know that nobody will put his money into this service, and has not been willing to do so for years, at a less rate than about 7 per cent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The only reason why I asked the question was because the plea is made here that this thing must be maintained on behalf of the stockholders, and yet it is said that the stockholders are getting no benefit from it. I should like to know where the motive comes from for this tremendous campaign to keep this service in operation if it is of no benefit to anybody.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I will tell the Senator where my motive comes from. My motive comes from a belief that this service really expedites the Postal Service, and that it is a most reactionary step to give it up.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is a perfectly proper motive; and I did not refer to the motives of Senators when I asked the ques-I mean the motives of the private individuals. Senator certainly will not contend that the private company that owns this pneumatic-tube service is actuated by any such motive as he describes, and that it wants to maintain this service at a loss for the public benefit.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington came pretty near reflecting upon Senators when he was addressing the Senate two or three hours ago, and if he will examine his remarks he will find that he did. But the motive of these stockholders and their representatives is that they have invested ten millions of dollars in a service at the request of the Government, and if this amendment is not agreed to it means that their investment goes to the scrap heap. Now, has the time come when citizens of this country who invest their money for a purpose which is solely for the Government's benefit can not come to Washington and see their Senators and Representatives and make such statements as they think are fair and right in order to protect their property? If that time has come, our citizens are without redress whatever may be their grievance. I say that it is the duty of people to come here and to tell Senators and Representatives what they know about this system, and what they think should be done and why they think it should be done. If they did not do it, they would not be doing their duty by themselves or the stockholders whom they represent.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator was diverted from the line of his talk a while ago, and I thought possibly before he resumed that he might not object to answering a question which I should like to ask him about this letter of the Postmaster General.

Mr. WEEKS. I shall be glad to answer it. Mr. JONES. I think the Senator has answered one suggestion in this letter, that the experience at Boston about 15 years ago had demonstrated that transportation by pneumatic tubes is obsolete. I think the Senator has explained the incident upon which I suppose that statement is based. I understood the Senator to say, early in his remarks, that a commission appointed under this act of 1902 had reported in favor of the continuance of this service.

Mr. WEEKS. They did, and they reported that $17,000 a mile was a fair rate.

Mr. JONES. Here is what the Postmaster General says in the letter which I have referred to heretofore:

In accordance with this act-

That is, the act of 1902-

a commission composed of the ablest postal experts in the service was appointed, and, after thorough investigation, recommended that the service be discontinued in the cities of Boston, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Chicago, and St. Louis. These recommendations had the unanimous approval of the postmasters and supervisory officials of the post offices involved.

I do not know that the letter says so, but the Mr. WEEKS. Senator from Washington has confused that commission with the commission that has just reported. It is the commission that has just reported that reported to that effect.

Mr. JONES. Well, he says, "in accordance with this act"; that is, the act of 1902. Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. JONES. And I thought that was the commission to which the Senator referred.

Mr. WEEKS. No. The commission of 1902 established the present system and the present rate of pay; and it is under the contract which has covered this service in the meantime that the commission of last year-or year before last, rather, to be more accurate—was appointed, and has made the report which we are now considering.

Mr. JONES. That report was a recommendation for the discontinuance of the service in the cities mentioned here?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. JONES. And that was the commission that was provided for in the act of 1902?

Mr. WEEKS. It was provided for in the act of 1902.

Mr. JONES. So that the commission to which the Senator referred was another commission?

Mr. WEEKS. Oh, no. I think I may be lacking in clearness in the statement which I have made. The act of 1902 provided as to various phases of this question, including the rate per mile to be paid; and it also provided that a lease or a contract should be made which should run for 10 years, and that at the end of that time the Postmaster.General should appoint a commission to report to him on the advisability of continuing the service. So that the commission which has just reported was really provided for in the act of 1902; but the commission of 1902 did not make any recommendation about discontinuing any

Mr. JONES. I was mixed about that. I wanted to get it clear, because I wanted to find out about this report that the Postmaster General says was made by a commission; and he refers to the act of 1902, in which he says they recommended discontinuance, and then in this same paragraph he goes on to refer to this rental of $17,000 a mile as being entirely too high.

Mr. WEEKS. That is what that commission recommended, $17,000 per mile.

Mr. JONES. That is, the early commission?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Of several years ago? Mr. WEEKS. Yes; 13 years ago.

Mr. JONES. But not the commission to which he refers in this letter?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not know what he refers to in that letter, but I assume that he refers to the commission which has just

Mr. BORAH. The commission which has just reported did not report for discontinuance, did it?

Mr. WEEKS. They reported for a discontinuance in Boston, New York north of Forty-second Street, Philadelphia, Chicago, and St. Louis.

Mr. JONES. And Brooklyn. Mr. WEEKS.

And Brooklyn.

They reported that the pneumatic-tube service Mr. BORAH. should be discontinued?

Mr. WEEKS. That it should be discontinued.

Mr. BORAH. The last one?

Mr. WEEKS. The one which has just reported-the commission which reported last fall.

I want to say a word about that commission. It was appointed in July, 1915, with instructions to report before the 1st of October, 1915. As a matter of fact, it reported so that the report was made public on the 11th of December, 1916; and that was one reason why we found it necessary to put in the appropriation bill last year a provision making it obligatory on the part of the Postmaster General to expend the appropriations for this service, because the commission, although the report was more than a year overdue, had not then made a report. There are circumstances connected with that which I think might well be investigated by some other commission. However, I am not going into those matters at this time. All I know is that they did not report promptly. They gave the excuse that they were making investigations of tube services abroad, and other things which everybody knew about, which were already on file, which had been investigated over and over again, and for some reason they did not report for more than a year after the time they were instructed to do so by the Postmaster Gen-

Mr. JONES and Mr. VARDAMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield, and to whom?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to the Senator from Washington first. Mr. JONES. Has the Senator any information with reference to this statement of the Postmaster General?-

These recommendations had the unanimous approval of the post-

Yes: I have some information on that subject. Mr. WEEKS.

Mr. JONES. I should like to have it.

Mr. WEEKS. Now, let me tell the Senator from Washington who is in favor of discontinuing this service. These three men, the man who is now First Assistant Postmaster General, recently the chief inspector; the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, and another member of the commission connected with the same service. They are old post-office employees, but no one of them has ever had anything to do with the pneumatictube service. They never have been, as far as I know, associated with the post offices which have used the pneumatic-tube service. Although they are post-office employees of long standing, they undertook this investigation as a new proposition.

In addition to the commission who have favored a discontinuance of this system? First, the postmaster at St. Louis, an appointee of this administration, of course; and incidentally I want to say in regard to the postmaster at St. Louis that he did not make the figures which he reported, and did not know what the figures meant when he was asked a question about the kind of service that could be used in place of the pneumatictube service there. He did not know what the gross receipts of his own post office were, although he had been postmaster more than three years. He did not know what the net receipts were, within a million dollars, although he had been there very nearly three years. He had written a letter previously, only two years before this investigation, in favor of this tube service, and he stated on the stand before the Senate committee that he did not take back a single word of that letter.

The postmaster at Chicago was a hold-over Republican, because it had been impossible to agree on a Democrat to take that office. Incidentally I have seen, within a day or two, that the President has appointed a postmaster at Chicago to succeed Mr. Campbell, and, lo and behold, they find that he also is a Republican! But, in any case, that postmaster had been on one of these commissions, had previously reported in favor of the tube service, and he stated that he did not take back any of his previous statements, but he thought there should be some modifications or some changes, or words to that effect.

Then, there was the postmaster at Boston, also an appointee of this administration, formerly a Member of the House of Representatives, and a bright man. The postmaster at Boston said that he was not entirely opposed to the tube service, but he thought that tubes should be retained only where there were long distances, and that the virtue of the tubes was the continuous passage of mail through them. If an automobile were used, it would be on a half-hour or hourly service, while in the tube service at least six of the containers could be dispatched every minute, and that was the virtue of the tube service.

The postmaster at Philadelphia was not brought here at all. I am told that the reason why he was not brought here is because two employees of the Post Office Department had been sent to Philadelphia for the practical purpose of running that office. Anyway, they did not take chances with that postmaster, but they brought over one of the employees of the post office in Philadelphia who was connected with the general post office in Washington to testify relative to the local service.

The other postmaster involved—the postmaster at New York—as the Senator from New York has stated, has been 40 years in the Postal Service. He commenced as a letter carrier and has occupied every position which a man would naturally fill up to the place which he now holds. He has been postmaster for more than eight years and is universally commended as one of the ablest men in the Postal Service. He testified directly contrary to the other postmasters. He says that this service ought to be maintained, and that it will be a great mistake to discontinue it.

I have named every man who in any way has given any testimony in favor of the discontinuance of this service. Now let us see who the people are who want to retain it. peared at the Senate hearings representatives of the organizations I shall name, and many others at the House hearings.

At the Senate hearings there appeared representatives of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Boston, the United Improvement Association of the city of Boston, the street commissioner of the city of Boston, and the mayor of the city of

From New York, the mayor of the city of New York in person, representatives of the Merchants' Association, The Bronx Board of Trade, the National Hotel Druggists' Association, the Central Mercantile Association, the National Clothiers' Asso-ciation, the Silk Association of the United States, the Manufacturers' and Business Men's Association, the Safety First Association, the Safety First Federation, the Traffic Squad, the National Dry Goods Association of New York City.

From Philadelphia, representatives of the Board of Trade, the Philadelphia Bourse, the Commercial Exchange, the Master Builders' Exchange, the clearing house, the chamber of commerce.

From Chicago, the Association of the Chamber of Commerce, the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, the Rotary Club, the Advertising Associations of Chicago.

From St. Louis, the Merchants' Exchange and the civic organizations were all represented.

There has not been one single word, Mr. President, in opposi-tion to a continuance of these tubes from the citizens of the cities in which the tube service has been in operation.

Now, what does that mean to those cities? Let me point out some of the reasons why this service should be continued.

The city of New York has spent $350,000,000 to get traffic off the streets. The streets are all torn up now, as every Senator knows, digging subways in order to get rid of traffic on the surface of the streets. The city of Boston has spent $35,000,000 to get traffic off the streets. The city of Philadelphia has spent $40,000,000 to get traffic off the streets; and there is not one of those cities that is not extending its plans for that purpose. They are talking about overhead sidewalks and about an elevated street in Boston, about a subway under the subway, about widening streets that are now constructed, at great expense, for the purpose of lessening the congestion of traffic. The testimony is universal about the condition of the traffic in these cougested cities. Those Senators who come from the newer sections of the country, where the streets are broad, can hardly comprehend the situation which exists in Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, where the streets are very narrow.

I stated before the committee, Mr. President, that, for example, in Boston I never take my automobile down town beyond the State House, because I can walk faster than the automobile goes, and it is not safe because of the danger to life and to property as well. The traffic commissioner of the city of New York testified that there were very nearly 700 deaths caused on the streets of New York by the traffic on the surface of the streets last year, and more than 22,000 persons were injured; and he testified that the trucks used in carrying the mails were 10 times as destructive as the average vehicle on the streets. is a very important question in these days-this question of life, as well as the question of property; and when cities are expending the enormous amounts of money which are being spent in order to get traffic off the streets, for the Government to insist on putting traffic back on the streets, even if it could save some money in doing so, would be unjustified, in my opinion.

Moreover, Mr. President, these five cities show a net return to the Post Office Department of more than $50,000,000 a year.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Seventy-five million.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator from Alabama says $75,000,000 a year, or 75 times as much as this whole pneumatic service costs. Is there a Senator here who, if he had five customers out of whom he was making $75,000,000 a year, would think for a moment of taking away from them a service, even if he thought it could be performed otherwise as well, which they objected to having taken away, and which cost only $1,000,000 a year? I say that these cities have some rights.

I notice that the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter] referred to rural service and said that if this $613,000 could be saved it should be spent on the rural service. Now, no Senator here wants in any way to modify the rural service, and yet it costs the Government $40,000,000 a year more than the Government gets out of it. If we wanted to save money, as the Vice President suggested this morning, we had an opportunity to do it yesterday. We are paying a subsidy, according to the reports of the Post Office Department, of more than $80,000,000 to those who produce second-class matter, and yet we are discussing here the question of saving a few hundred thousand dollars by taking away a service from the people who really produce the great net revenue of the Post Office Department

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair) Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not make the inquiry in any spirit of criticism, and I do not know whether or not the Senator is familiar with the particular question that I want to ask about, but it strikes me that it would have some bearing on the wisdom of continuing this system. Some years ago I was shown in New York what was represented to be a system like this, in use, I think, by some of the larger newspapers. dered whether the Senator knew whether the proprietors of those publications had found it expedient to continue the underground system as against carrying on the surface?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not know. I can not answer that ques-

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to the Senator. Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Massachusetts stated two or three times that this system had been installed at the request of the Government. By whom?

Mr. WEEKS. I ought to make this change in that statement, if the Senator from Iowa understood it in that way: That since the 1902 contract all extensions made have been made at the request of the Government, and more than half of the system has been installed since 1905.

Mr. CUMMINS. And always at the request of the Government?

Mr. WEEKS.

Mr. WEEKS. In every instance.
Mr. CUMMINS. What form did the request take?
Mr. WEEKS. It requested the extension of the tube to a certain point, with the proviso, of course, that the company should be paid at the rate of $17,000 per mile.

Mr. CUMMINS. What officer of the Government made the

Mr. WEEKS. My impression is, the First Assistant Postmaster General; but I am not quite certain.

Mr. CUMMINS. Was he authorized by the law to do it? Mr. WEEKS. I think so. I would have to look that up to answer definitely

Mr. CUMMINS. It seems to me that is a very material inquiry. Mr. WEEKS. I think the reason for the appointment of the commission which has just reported was to report on the advisability of extending the tube service rather than the advisability of discontinuing it. That is my own impression.

Mr. President, I want now to refer particularly to this letter of the Postmaster General, of which every Senator has received a copy, and to the statements which are made in that letter, because I think the statements ought to be very materially modified, and I think they are creating in the minds of Senators impressions which are not justified. I am going to take those up one after another and make my answer to them,

The letter states that the Post Office appropriation bill contains a provision, on page 15, which practically nullifies the act of Congress of 1902 relating to pneumatic-tube service. This provision was put into the bill because First Assistant Postmaster General Koons notified the Senate Post Office Committee-I should like to have Senators listen to this statement-notified the Senate Post Office Committee that the Postmaster General would not carry out the vote of the House of Representatives on this matter unless the Senate mandatorily directed him to do so. In other words, the Postmaster General, unless directed mandatorily to expend an appropriation, would refuse to make the expenditure; and that is the reason why we put this provision in the bill last year directing him to pay for this service up to the 4th of March of this year, and it is the reason why the committee has put the same provision in the bill which is now before the Senate.

The act of 1902 was clearly meant by Congress to refer to new installations of pneumatic tubes, as I have just stated, I think to the Senator from Iowa, and was drawn to prevent the Postmaster General from extending the pneumatic tubes beyond the limits prescribed by Congress. When the tubes are once installed it is self-evident that no further investigation on account of their need and practicability is necessary, if they are doing a service which is satisfactory at the time to those officers who have the matter directly in charge.

The Postmaster General's letter states that "in accordance with this act a commission composed of the ablest experts was appointed. This commission consisted wholly of subordinates of the Postmaster General, including one member who probably wrote this letter which is signed by the Postmaster General, and who has since been appointed First Assistant Postmaster General. He was then at the head of the inspector's This is the first unfavorable report since the tubes were established under the law of 1902; and I want the Senator from Washington to understand clearly that that is the case. It is the first unfavorable report that has been made, and four different commissions have reported since that time. These commissions have consisted of engineers and men of business experience. This commission consists entirely of subordinates of the Postmaster General.

The Postmaster General's letter states that the committee recommended the discontinuance of the service in Boston, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, and St. Louis. It does not state that this same committee recommended the continuance of part of the service in New York City, where approximately one-half of the total mileage of the country is in operation, and the most expensive.

The letter states that the postmasters of the cities involved unanimously approved the recommendation to discontinue the The St. Louis postmaster, as I have suggested, told the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads that the Government should own and operate the system in St. Louis. That is stated in a recent letter from that postmaster.

The hearings before the Senate committee developed the fact that the tubes are claimed to be the most efficient service in use by the Government; that they have been indorsed by every previous commission, and by all Postmasters General under whom they have been used, and that they were installed to carry firstclass mail alone, as I have explained. They have a capacity of 200,000 letters an hour; and the reason why they are not carrying all of the first-class mail has been explained twice this afternoon. It is because they do not reach some of the substations in the cities where the tube service is in operation.

The Postmaster General's letter states that 87½ per cent of the mail now carried by pneumatic tubes can be handled by the present surface transportation—in other words, with the parcels post and newspaper mail. The basis of such a statement is conceivable only from the standpoint that there is not any benefit obtained in expediting the mails. Of course, we all know that it costs more for a passenger to travel on trains that make a limited service than it does to travel on regular accommodation trains. Speed is the thing desired. It costs more to ship freight by a fast freight service than it does by the ordinary freight service; and it should cost more, and does cost more, to send the mails on trains by fast mail trains than it does by the ordinary mail conveyance. Expediting the mails, as I believe these tubes do, even if there were to be a saving by replacing them with automobiles, I do not think such a saving would be justified.

The St. Louis postmaster told the Senate committee that it would cost $4,700 to take the place of the 2 miles of tubes in St. Louis. The Postmaster General in this letter says that $4,000 is sufficient to take the place of the $34,000 now expended for tubes. Yet the postmaster testified that it would require three automobiles to perform that service, and it would cost $2,700 a year for those automobiles, or cost $8,100. That was the lowest estimate that he could make when he got down to definite figures. In other words, it will cost twice as much as the Postmaster General states in this letter, and will cost nearly twice as much as the general statement made by the postmaster of St. Louis.

I do not know how many more automobiles it will require than three, but it was confessed that at least that number would be required.

The congressional committee of which Senator SMITH was chairman, and which reported on October 24, 1914, stated that the pneumatic tubes carried 3,089,000 pieces of mail in Boston every day—that is, 76.5 per cent of the first-class mail—at a cost of 100 letters for 1 cent.

Remember that this service is intended for first-class mail alone, and there we carry 100 letters for 1 cent, or one onehundredth of a cent a letter.

In Chicago they carried 5,614,000 letters a day, or 75.7 per cent of the first-class mail, at a cost of 125 letters for 1 cent; in New York and Brooklyn they carried 9,332,000 letters a day, or 49.8 per cent of the first-class mail, at a cost of 79 letters for 1 cent; and in St. Louis they carried 308,000 letters a day, or 93.7 per cent of first-class mail, at a cost of 39 letters for 1 cent.

Based on the report of the 1909 investigating committee, some 3,000,000,000 letters made connections daily by pneumatic-tube service, and charging all of the cost of the pneumatic-tube service to the letters thus so materially benefited, the cost amounts to six-tenths of 1 mill per letter.

Yet we are talking about discontinuing a service which is satisfactory to everybody who is receiving the service, where it only costs one-hundredth of a cent a letter to perform that service, remembering all the time that this service was installed for the purpose of transporting first-class mail, and first-class mail alone.

I should like to have Senators go to New York or Boston or Philadelphia and make some of the tests that were reported to have been made by this commission. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] a few moments ago referred to the fact that one of these tests was made Sunday morning, when, of course, the streets were clear. It makes all the difference in the world whether an automobile or any other surface transportation line has a clear way. Blockades occur every hour of the day, very frequently several times an hour, and these tests were made un-der such conditions that no blockade did exist. So it is not a fair trial of the two systems. The pneumatic-tube service has a maximum speed of 30 miles an hour, and a saving of 26 minutes was made, even as reported by these tests, between the New York general post office and the Pennsylvania Station.

Senators should remember that one of the great values of this service is that the mail is carried in tubes which transport 5 to 10 pounds in each one of the cartons, as they are called, and they are dispatched every 10 seconds or 12 seconds, as the system is gauged. So you would transport from 30 to 50 pounds a minute through one of these tube services. It is of great importance whether that is being received at the other end of the line in that way or whether it is being dumped in at one time by an automobile service that runs every half hour or every hour. There may be a part of the mail which otherwise would be delayed for a considerable time transported by this pneumatic-tube system which would get to a train going into a remote section of the country, making 6 or 8 or 10 or 12 hours' difference in time of reaching its destination. That is one of the most important phases of this service.

· Mr. President, I have given a great deal of time first and last to the consideration of this subject. I have always admitted that $17,000 a mile seemed like a high price to pay, yet I do not But I am opposed, it could be done any cheaper. unalterably opposed, to anything which is going to affect a service which is satisfactory to more than 12,000,000 people, which is satisfactory to the great business interests which those people represent, to people who are furnishing the larger part of first-class mail which originates anywhere in this coun-Any such step as that would be reactionary in the extreme, and Senators, in my judgment, ought not to be unduly influenced by the statements which have come from the depart-

I am not able to explain any more than was the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] what is in the mind of the master General, but I am satisfied that he is using bad judgment in this case. Every administration from John Wanamaker down to this time has been in favor of a continuance of the tube service. Every postmaster as far as there is any record down to those who hold position at this time by the will of this administration has been in favor of a continuance of this service. There is substantially no report since 1902 which has not been in favor of its continuance.

Now, are we going to throw $10,000,000 worth of property into the scrap heap because the commission appointed under one administration has come to the conclusion that it can perform the same service in some other way as well as that? It is not fair, and it is not good business; and this service should be continued on some reasonable terms

I was in favor of inserting in the bill a proposition to consider the purchase of the tubes, because I think these tubes are just as much a part of the mail service as are the mail bags or any other mail facility which is used. I think they should be purchased at the lowest possible price, and I suspect that a very low price will be made if the owners of these tubes conclude they are going to have their property confiscated, as seems to be the present purpose of the Post Office Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire, if possible, to have the attention of Senators to the situation with respect to the city of New York as it might be affected by the rejection of the amendment recommended by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. Before indulging in a discussion of the merits of the pneumatic-tube service permit me to say and to make it entirely clear that I am impelled to oppose the abandonment of the pneumatic-tube service not, primarily, on account of any interest which I have in the financial success or failure or sufferings, it may be, of the stockholders of the company. I think I am correct in saying I am not acquainted with a single one of them; I do not know who they are. Nor can I give very serious consideration to the suggestion that has been made upon this floor that so-called "powerful" and "sinister" influences are supporting this amendment and should lead people to cast discredit upon the legislation proposed or to indict the conduct of the Post Office Department in the past or the Senate to-day, if it should decide to support its own committee.

I am impelled primarily to oppose the abandonment of the pneumatic-tube service because the people of the city of New York are overwhelmingly in favor of its retention. Their interest in this matter is superior to that of any other people or group of people affected directly or indirectly by the operation of the Post Office Department, the Postmaster General to the contrary notwithstanding. The people of that city, as I assume also the people of Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, and St. Louis, entertain the idea that they are in part the masters of this Government and not its servants; that they are entitled to service from the Government, and so long as they are called upon and do in fact pay their fair share, and, in some instances, more than their fair share, of the taxes which support the Government, they are entitled to that service.

Mr. President, as has been related by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] a commission was appointed by the Postmaster General composed of three gentlemen who have held subordinate positions in the Post Office Department for varying periods of time. The commission, as I understand and remember, was appointed and directed to start investigations in 1915. It did not complete and present any report until December, 1916, approximately 18 months later; but when we come to the point of examining into this report we ought not to forget that prior to any commencement upon their part to investigate this subject, the Postmaster General had already committed himself against the pneumatic-tube service, and, having appointed three of his own subordinates, it is not to be wondered at that they should report somewhat in favor and along the line of his own suggestions made prior to their appointment.

Now, as to the investigation which they actually made: For one I am astounded that a report of this sort should be sent to Congress with the hope that it should be taken with absolute seriousness, for in my humble judgment their investigation was not worthy of the name. The testimony taken before the Post Office Committee indicates that this commission spent about two weeks in the city of New York. There was no notice whatsoever given to the public of their coming, or to any of the associations or their accredited representatives that any such investigation was to take place. No patron of the New York City post office was ever asked his opinion in connection with the pneumatic-tube service, in spite of the fact that the three commissioners and the Postmaster General himself must have known that thousands and thousands of people were deeply interested in the pneumatictube service and were entirely, or almost entirely, dependent upon it in some portions of the city for rapid mail transportation and were entitled to be heard in any investigation made of the question.

The testimony also before the Post Office Committee indicates that in making the automobile tests which were made by these three commissioners just two days' time was consumed. I will challenge any three men on earth to test the traffic conditions of the city of New York in two days. It is absurd upon its face, and when we come down to the point of the fairness of the test they did make, confined as it was to two days, we find that they made their test of automobile service upon the streets of the city of New York in the middle of the summer, at which time it is well known by the city administration, and could have been ascertained by these three gentlemen that the traffic is about 50 per cent lighter than it is in the middle of winter, and that furthermore there is not the slightest chance in July or August of a snow storm of 10 or 12 inches depth, which would make automobile traffic for hours at a time absolutely impossible.

The report of this commission does not contain a single suggestion or intimation that snow ever falls in the city of New York. Congress is invited to believe that for 12 months of the year, every day of the month, the same conditions will exist in the city as existed in the month of July, or August, I forget which one it was, when these gentlemen made their two days' test of the traffic conditions of a city of 5,000,000 people.

May I add also, Mr. President, that one of the two days was a Sunday? They made a test of the time which it would take to carry this first-class mail now being handled by tubes from the post office to the Grand Central Station at Forty-second Street, where the great volume of mail departs for the New England States and the far West.

Let me suggest that upon the efficient handling of the United States mail at the Forty-second Street Depot in New York City depends the promptness of the conduct of the business of a very large portion of the industries of the United States—for New York is the metropolis. It is the clearing house industrially and financially of this country, and should anything be done to interfere with the efficient and rapid transportation of mail at the Forty-second Street Depot or at the Pennsylvania Terminal at Thirty-fourth Street and Seventh Avenue, New York will not suffer alone; the business interests of the country generally will be affected, including those of Chicago and St. Louis, and as far west as San Francisco and Seattle.

Mr. President, these gentlemen in making this test reported that the distance could be covered in a certain time by automobile trucks, and they ran the trucks for two days, or made the test during two days in the month of July, and in order to justify their own contention that these trucks would maintain such a schedule they had to run them 21 miles an hour. Certainly no Senator who has ever been in the city of New York will believe that any such speed is possible for 365 days in the year without a dire threat to the lives of pedestrians, and even if we were to wipe out of consideration entirely the matter of the saving of life, which incidentally is a very serious matter upon the streets of New York, we are forced to take into consideration the fact that there are many, many days when the streets of the city are blocked by ice and snow, when it would be utterly impossible for a mail truck to maintain a speed of 21 miles per hour.

The postmaster of the city of New York is one of the postmasters of cities affected who does not agree with the Postmaster General nor with the three members of the commission. One or two Senators have endeavored to allay my anxiety upon this subject by indicating or attempting to persuade me that the Postmaster General did not include the name of the city of New York in the list of cities contained in his letter addressed to the chairman of the Post Office Committee, a copy of which we have all received; at least, I have received one, and I assume we all have. I can not understand the purpose of the Postmaster General in leaving out from his letter the name of the city of New York, because it is his declared purpose and that of his three commissioners to abandon the pneumatic-tube service in the city of New York above Forty-second Street, and by such an abandonment the mail facilities afforded to the citizens of New York and also to the citizens of the whole country are very seriously affected.

Any intimation in the letter to the effect that the postmasters of the cities affected or involved in this proposal are unanimous in support of the department is not borne out by the facts, and I can not believe that the Postmaster General does not know it. The postmaster of the city of New York, which city is involved in this matter, came in person before the Post Office Committee of the Senate and protested against the abandonment of that particular part of the tubes in the city between Forty-second Street and One hundred and twenty-fifth Street.

I hesitate to take the time of the Senate and I shall not do so in reading from the testimony of the postmaster of the city of New York. The Senate has heard the career and record of that gentleman recited briefly but comprehensively by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks]. He has been in the service 44 years, has risen from letter carrier to postmaster of the greatest city in the Western Hemisphere, and has been postmaster of that city 8 years. His views upon the matter of tube service receive no attention in this commission's report. Congress of the United States is not invited by this commission to entertain any consideration for the postmaster of New York. who knows more about this subject than any man in America, and who has been responsible for the successful operation of the greatest post office in the United States; successful in keeping that office upon the highest plane of efficiency, so much so that there is grave hesitation on the part of this administration in displacing him.

Mr. President, let me point out one or two things in the commission's report which are, to say the least, inaccurate and are calculated to mislead the Senate. The commission's report says that these cartons or carriers in pneumatic tubes can carry about 5 pounds of mail. The postmaster of New York says that they carry up to 15 pounds of mail, but that they carry 10 pounds on the average. Why did not the commission say that they carried 10 pounds very often, and, in fact, in the majority of cases, which is the fact?

This commission also says in its report that these cartons or carriers are dispatched on their journey on an average of once in 15 seconds. The postmaster at New York says that the average is once in 10 seconds; and he has seen the system operate every day for eight years.

There are other claims made by the commission directed against the alleged defects of the pneumatic-tube service, and a desperate effort is made to persuade Congress that an automobile-truck service would be of more value to the patrons of the post office than the tube service. This is the only concern, aside from the protection of life, that I have in this whole question. To my mind the matter of cost is at most of secondary importance.

In that desperate effort to show that the automobile service would be more efficient than the tube service they have made the automobile tests, a report upon which is contained and included in their report to the Postmaster General, which has been submitted to Congress. I have described the nature of the tests which were made in the city of New York. Another test was made in the city of Boston. There is a pneumatic tube in the city of Boston, running from the central or general post office to a place called Uphams Corners. The distance, as I remember it, is 4.4 miles. First-class mail is sent through that tube in a constant stream.

The commissioners put on some experimental automobile trucks to test out the question as to whether or not they could perform the same service. The tube, however, supplies and offers facilities for three intermediate stops between the general post office and Uphams Corners, the final destination; but when they came to make the automobile tests they ran the automobiles clear through, without stopping at any of those three intermediate substations. Then they report to Congress that the automobile trucks can perform the same service as the tube in the same period of time. The speed which they would have to maintain in covering that distance in order to do it in 13 minutes, as they say the automobiles did, would smash all the speed regulations of the city of Boston, and approximate 30 miles an hour. But they would not and could not perform the service, because they did not stop and did not intend to stop at the three intermediate substations.

Mr. President, I do not pretend to understand what lies back of the insistence of the Post Office Department that this service shall be abandoned. I know I can state, without any fear of contradiction, that the people of the great city of New York are exceedingly disturbed at the proposal which has been made during the last two or three years that the service be abandoned, even in part. The postmaster of New York City not only recommends its maintenance, but he recommends its extension. He recommends its extension across the Harlem River into the Borough of The Bronx, which now contains 700,000 people, who are dependent for the delivery of their mail upon the general post office at the lower end of the city of Manhattan. The tube system now only reaches One fundred and twenty-fifth Street. From there the mail to The Bronx must be taken in automobile trucks, which must cross the bridges of Harlem River, every one of which is a drawbridge, and subject to constant interruption due to the passage of vessels in the Harlem River. The Harlem River contains and carries more commerce by three times than does the harbor of Savannah. That commerce runs into the does the harbor of Savannah. That commerce runs hundreds and hundreds of thousands of tons annually.

The result is that the people of The Bronx-suffer grave delay in the delivery of their first-class mail. Sometimes it will take as long as 24 hours for a letter to come from Brooklyn up through Manhattan Island and to be delivered at the house of the person to whom it is addressed in the Borough of The

My own hope was, to tell the truth, that the committee would insert an amendment in the bill authorizing that very extension for it is sadly needed for one of the largest cities in the country, if we choose to assume and regard the Borough of The Bronx as a separate city. It is as large as Detroit.

Let us consider the Borough of Brooklyn. It has been suggested that the tube service from Manhattan Island across the East River to the city of Brooklyn, containing nearly 2,000,000 people, should eventually be abandoned and that the automobile trucks shall proceed in the old-fashioned way over the Brooklyn Bridge. If there ever was a step backward suggested in the governmental operation of any facility which is supposed to be of use to the people, here is such a step.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield. Mr. GALLINGER. On that very point, I desire to state that I do not think this commission could have visited Brooklyn and have observed the congestion that frequently occurs at the Brooklyn Bridge. I myself was held up there for 15 minutes not long ago in an automobile.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Why, Mr. President, the mere statement of the fact that these three gentlemen only spent two weeks in New York City is sufficient to indict the entire report, so far as it affects that city. It is a physical impossi-bility for any three men to study and to comprehend traffic conditions in that town in such a length of time and to make satisfactory test with the automobile in two days

Mr. President, the mayor of that city and the chief of the traffic squad have been before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and called the attention of the committee to the traffic conditions of the town. I happened to be present at the hearings. I am not a member of the committee, but my interest drew me there. The police of New York are confronted with the most difficult traffic problem in the world. There is nothing that can compare with the complexities and physical difficulties presented by the city of New York in the matter of traffic upon streets.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to ask the Senator from New York if he has ever been in the city of Boston?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have been in Boston. I admit it, Mr. CLAPP. I think Boston beats New York in that respect.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, in the numbers of persons to be handled, in the degree of congestion, and the size of the problems, I venture to suggest that New York is even worse than Boston, though I have been on Washington Street, in Boston, and have seen the trouble there.

Mr. President, as is well known, literally more than a million people start every morning from the upper parts and outlying sections of the city of New York, and try to get down into the region below Fourteenth Street, and the rush happens within a period of two hours. The same million of people, or more, endeavor to get out of the region below Fourteenth Street be-The same million of people, or more, tween 4 and 6 o'clock in the evening and to get back to their homes in the outlying portions of the city. The traffic in the streets has become so enormous that in many places pedestrians can actually make better time than can automobiles. A person can walk now from Thirty-fourth Street, we will say, to Fortysecond Street on Fifth Avenue faster than he can make it in a taxicab. It is not at all unusual for traffic to be held up at the intersection of Forty-second Street and Fifth Avenue for seven or eight minutes at a time while the cross-town traffic is crossing Fifth Avenue. When the suggestion is made that more mail trucks with the words "United States mail" painted on the outside of them, carrying, as they must, a certain preference and "right of way" in relation to the traffic regulations, shall be added in any number whatsoever, no matter how small, to the traffic already existing, I am forced to the conclusion that the Postmaster General and these gentlemen have either no regard for the problems of New York or know nothing about them.

There is one person injured every 23 minutes of the day and night, and there is one person killed every 14 hours of the day and night throughout the year upon the streets of the city of

New York by vehicular traffic. The automobile truck, as a class, constitutes only 2½ per cent of all the vehicles, and yet is responsible for 18 per cent of the injuries. It is the most dangerous element in the traffic situation; and the testimony of Lieut. Myers, who has under his command hundreds and hundreds of the most skillful and well-informed traffic policemen in the world, is to the effect that the mail truck is the most dangerous of all, and that it is responsible, in proportion to its numbers, for the death of more people than any other class of vehicle; and yet the Postmaster General and these three gentlemen, after two days' tests, now propose to increase the number of mail trucks in the city of New York.

It has been suggested by the report, and perhaps by the letter of the Postmaster General, that very few additional trucks would be required. I do not know where we can draw the danger line in any of our cities in the attempt to restrain traffic and control it and save the lives of pedestrians. secretary of state of the State of New York reports that there are 314,000 motor vehicles licensed in the metropolitan district-that is, in New York City and its immediate environs. The mayor of the city, the commissioner of police, and the lieutenant in command of the traffic squad say that the danger of the loss of life is constantly increasing; and, so far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I am not, therefore, very much impressed with the suggestion that no harm will be done by the addition of a few more, particularly of the most dangerous kind of vehicles.

It goes without saying, Mr. President, that transportation of letters by pneumatic tube is more expensive than transportation over the same distance by automobile trucks, just as automobile transportation is more expensive than that by horse and buggy, and that by horse and buggy more expensive than that by the ox and oxcart. But the people of the city of New York, as also those of Chicago and Boston, have been struggling for years to reduce the congestion of their streets. The same argument as to increased expense would apply against any proposal seeking to compel the telephone company to put its wires underground in the city of New York. Without question a telephone company that is compelled by a city ordinance or State law to bury its wires rather than to carry them upon poles above the surface is subjected to extra expense. Underground conduits constitute a more expensive form of construction than above-the-surface poles and wires. Of course it is more expensive, and by just so much it tends to prevent the telephone company from reducing the rates it charges for its services; but no great city is so blind to this matter as to insist that it is wrong to bury telephone wires because at some time it might be used as an argument to prevent the reduction of telephone rates.

In the same way in New York the telegraph wires must be buried. They go through conduits and through tunnels and subways. That kind of construction, of course, is conducive to greater expense in administration, greater capitalization and interest charges, and to a certain extent prevents or tends to prevent the reduction of telegraph rates; but the benefit is in the long run to the people in having the telegraph wires We might just as well say that it is a highly out of the way. uneconomical proposal to compel the street railways to run their cars through subways, as they are now doing in New York and in Boston, because it is a more expensive form of construction.

Mr. CLAPP. Or to put fenders on them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; or to put fenders on them. It all costs money. Undoubtedly the spending of hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars by the city of New York and its street railway corporations in order to get the street cars off the surface of the streets, and either elevate them on elevated tracks or run them through subways has been one of the elements that has tended to prevent the reduction of street railway fares; but the people of the city of New York would not think for a moment that that was an argument against burying street car tracks, nor do I believe that the Congress of the United States will take seriously the argument of these three commissioners or that of the Postmaster General that this transportation of mails should not be buried below the streets because it is going to cost the Government a little more money

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from New York that he perhaps has overlooked the fact that there is seriously under contemplation a proposition in the city of New York to construct a subway under Fifth Avenue, from Fourteenth Street to Central Park, in order to divert the automobile traffic, or a part of it, from the street to the subway, and for that purpose only?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; I have heard of that project, and there are many other projects which eventually will have to be adopted in one form or another and for which the taxpayers of the city of New York will be called upon to furnish literally billions of dollars before that city is 100 years older.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator a question? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not been able to be here to listen to all of the discussion which has taken place, and it may be that my question has already been answered; neither have I had time to read all the literature on the subject; but, as I remember, this commission, or some other commission, I think, appointed by the Postmaster General to make the investigation, to which I understand the Senator has referred in his argument, in their report recommended that certain of the tubes in New York be retained. Is that not right?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Perhaps it would be more to the point to say that they recommended that some of the tubes in New York should be abandoned.

Mr. NORRIS. I think they did recommend that some of them should be abandoned; but I am trying to get at the facts.
Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true; yes.

Mr. NORRIS. They have not recommended, have they, that the Government abandon all of the tubes? I do not know which ones, but I think there was one in Brooklyn that was recommended to be retained.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will answer the question of the Senator from Nebraska by saying-

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me to finish my question, then I will be glad to have him make such explanation as he deems necessary, if any is necessary. I am moved to ask the question on the theory that probably a fair investiga-tion of the subject would show that some of the tubes ought to be abandoned in some of the cities, possibly some in New York, and that some should be retained in New York and perhaps in some of the other cities. I want to know whether in the Senator's investigation he has reached the conclusion that all of the tubes now in use ought to be continued, or whether some of them ought to be abandoned and some of them still used?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, of course, I am not familiar with the details in the other cities, nor do I boast of the least iota of knowledge as to the city of New York, for I do not live there. Incidentally I may say in the presence of the Senator from Washington that where I live my mail comes by rural delivery; but, so far as I am concerned, I am of the belief that the people of the city of New York are entitled to service just the same as the people who live on the rural routes. The people of the city of New York are asking that this service be maintained, and really they are asking that it be extended.

I would not hesitate so much at leaving this matter in the discretion of the Postmaster General if I were convinced that he had an open mind on it; but before this commission started its investigation he had already commenced his attack upon pneumatic tubes. The commission went into this investigation knowing what their chief wanted; and since the investigation has been made and the report submitted to the Postmaster General, and by him sent to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, the Postmaster General has had a conversation with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Vardaman], which the Senator was good enough to relate in his speech of yesterday, and I read it from the Record. This is from the speech of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Vardaman]. He says:

In conversation with the Postmaster General about this matter he said to me with great earnestness that if he had the power to act for the Government he would abandon the use of the tubes, even if the stockholders were to deed the entire system to the Government.

That is why it is essential that the people of the city of New York secure favorable action by the Congress directing the Postmaster General to continue the service.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Missouri. Mr. REED. The Senator from New York has very earnestly criticized the department for making a report as to the use of automobiles based upon a two days' test in New York City. I want to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the Post Office Department in New York City constantly employs large numbers of automobiles in doing that part of the business which is not carried through the pneumatic tubes?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, Mr. President, the Post Office Department does carry a great amount of mail in the city of New York now by automobile trucks.

Mr. REED. It carries the majority, the greater part of it, does it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator refer to first-class mail?

Mr. REED. No; I refer to all classes of mail.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Necessarily, Mr. President, the Post Office Department must carry the great majority of the mail in the city of New York by automobile trucks, because the tubes have not been extended to reach the different sections of the

Mr. REED. I am not now speaking of the reason. I thought the Senator sought to leave the impression upon the minds of the Senate that the Post Office Department knew nothing about the use of trucks in New York City except what it had learned by virtue of a two-day experience, whereas the fact is that for many years and all of the time the greater part of the mail of New York City has been carried by trucks, and therefore the department is already in possession of that experience. A report based upon that kind of knowledge is a very different thing from a report based merely upon a two-day experiment, and that, unfortunately, in the month of July, which the Senator seems to think a very unfair month.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the experiment which these gentlemen made was in the carrying of first-class mail in competition as to speed, regularity, and reliability with the pneumatic tubes.

Mr. REED. Does not the Senator think that all their other experience in carrying other mail for years would naturally and necessarily enter into their final judgment in making a report?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I should answer that perhaps in two ways. In the first place, they did not claim that their experience was sufficient. In the second place, presumably they made their test with the automobiles to find out whether the first-class mail could be carried over the same route as is now traversed by the tubes, in the same period of time, and with the same regularity. They knew nothing about it before they went there, and they spent just two days in finding out whether the automobile trucks could go from the general post office to Forty-second Street quicker and with a greater degree of regularity than the pneumatic tube could carry the letters.

Mr. REED. Yes; but, nevertheless and notwithstanding all that, if a man had been engaged in carrying vast quantities of mail by automobile, if he knew the traffic conditions of New York City winter and summer, snow and no snow, and, being in possession of that knowledge, he then sought merely to arrive at a test with reference to one particular matter, he would be acting from a very different standpoint as to knowledge than would the man who had not been engaged in the general business; and I think the Senator's presentation of that matter ought to be supplemented by the statement which has now been elicited.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I can not agree to the assumption of the Senator from Missouri that these three gentlemen knew all about the weather conditions of the city of New York and the class of traffic there before they arrived.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to detain the Senate for any length of time. I simply wish to say a word in regard to the pending motion.

I have always been a friend and champion of the extension of the Rural Free Delivery Service, to the end that the people who live out in the country might be the better served by the postal system, and one reason why I have done that has been that it affected them in a peculiar way. The figures show that there has been a decrease of insanity of 42 per cent among the agricultural sections since the introduction of the Rural Free Delivery System. It has broken in upon that long and dreary winter that so many people had to endure, far from neighbors and centers of population.

I am one of those who have no hesitation in saying that there is no excuse on earth for government unless it advances the moral and material and physical welfare of those who form the association. Applying this same rule, it seems to me that there is no answer to the proposition of continuing the pneumatic-tube system in our great cities. It may be that it is continued now at too great a price. I am not prepared to pass upon that question. It may be that we are paying more than we ought to. If we are, then we should ascertain that fact, and reduce the expense. Personally, I believe that the system should be owned by the Government, just as the other accessories and instru-mentalities are owned by the Government.

But, Mr. President, it requires no statistics, no opinion of experts, to satisfy me that we should not do anything to increase the congestion in these great centers of population. I regret the building up of them, as every student of history must regret it. They are, ever have been, and are to-day a menace to our institutions. It is unfortunate that our people gather in these great, vast centers, numbering millions of people; but it is a condition that confronts us. They seem bound to do this. these great centers gather and grow, and in these great centers every effort is being made to lessen the amount of traffic or to prevent the growth of more traffic upon the surface of the streets. They are building their subways and their overhead railroads, and the same spirit which would prompt me to support a system of rural free delivery in the interest of the people of the country from which I come impels me to support a system in the interest of the welfare of the people of these great cities.

We all know—and it is no reflection upon the men who conduct these trucks-that there is a certain sense of power coming to the man who is running a great mail truck in a city. part of a great government. We are so constituted that we can not have great power vested in us without more or less responding to the sense of that power. Even in the city in which I live—and it has not yet reached the condition of congestion of some of the larger cities—the one truck above all others that the man has to guard himself against on the streets is the mail truck. When these cities are trying, by overhead means and underground means, to lessen the traffic that results in the toll of death that the figures show is gathered in some of these cities, it requires no effort on my part to support a motion to continue these tubes. I do not know who the stockholders are, or who the directors are, nor do I care. I do care, of course, if they are getting too much; but that is a question that is a subject of separate and independent regulation.

Mr. President, I, for one, in the same spirit which has prompted me in the past to support the extension of the Rural Free Delivery System for the people in the country, conducing to their interest and their welfare and their upbuilding, shall support a measure that lessens the toll of human life in these great centers of population.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there have been one or two inquiries made with regard to the ownership of these different pneumatic tubes in the five cities in which they have been installed. On page 1573 of the Congressional Record of January 15, 1917, there is a list of the stockholders of the American Pneumatic Service Co. That is the trust or holding company which controls the several local companies that operate the tubes in each one of the cities with the exception of Philadelphia. The local company in Boston is the Boston Pneumatic Transit Co. In New York it is the New York Pneumatic Transit Co. In Chicago it is the Chicago Postal Pneumatic Tube Co. In St. Louis it is the St. Louis Pneumatic Tube Co. The central control is in Boston, operated through the American Pneumatic Service Co.

I am informed, although I have not had a chance personally to investigate it, that above the American Pneumatic Service Co. is the Lamson Co., which controls the American Pneumatic Service Co., and through them the various local companies. In the report of the post-office officials who investigated very thoroughly the merits of the pneumatic-tube service and the advisability of abandoning it in whole or in part, dated October 13, 1916—and the Senator from Massachusetts said that there had been no adverse report upon this proposition since the report of a congressional committee headed by the Senator from Georgiathere is this most thoroughgoing report of post-office men-Joe P. Johnston, J. C. Koons, W. S. Ryan, and I. T. Mullinsrecommending the abandonment of nearly all of the pneumatictube service. In that report there are a number of appendixes in which are contained letters from these various local companies that I have named, from Boston, St. Louis, and Chicago, from which it appears, showing the common control of all the companies, that William H. Ames, of Boston, is president of all of them, and that Merton L. Emerson is the manager of each one of them.

In Philadelphia the pneumatic-tube mail service, which has the contract with the Government, is not directly controlled by the American Pneumatic Service Co. In Philadelphia the title of the company is the International Pneumatic Tube Co.

In the concluding pages of the report of the Post Office Committee to which I have just referred there is a list of the stockholders of this Philadelphia local company, the International Pneumatic Tube Co., from which it appears that Mr. J. E. Milholland, of New York, owns 84,000 shares of the common stock of that company and is by far the largest stockholder of those who are listed there. While I have not the data at hand, I am informed that Mr. Milholland is also a large stockholder in the New York Pneumatic Tube Service Co., which is a subsidiary of the Boston company, the American Pneumatic Service Co. So there at least is a connection between the Philadelphia company and this central Boston company, which controls the St. Louis, Chicago, New York, and Boston local companies.

Among the stockholders of the Boston company I find the following. I will give just a few of the principal ones, as showing the locality of the control of the company: There are Samuil Alland, of Boston, who owns 1,000 shares of preferred stock and 400 shares of the common stock; Oakes Ames, of Boston, who owns 1,610 shares of the preferred stock and 503 shares of the common stock; William A. Bradford, of New York, 525 shares of the preferred stock; Bright Sears & Co., of Boston, who own 995 shares of preferred stock and 3,027 shares of common stock; Blodget Co., of Boston, 222 shares of pre-ferred stock and 725 shares of common stock; Clement Parker & Co., of Boston, 1,245 shares of preferred stock and 995 shares of common stock; Harold E. Corey, of Newton, Mass., 1,100 shares of preferred stock; Curtis & Sanger, of Boston, 397 shares of preferred stock and 1,217 shares of common stock; Hayden, Stone & Co., of Boston, 10,812 shares of preferred stock and 7,305 shares of common stock; Henry C. Jackson, of stock and 7,305 shares of common stock; Henry C. Jackson, or Boston, 1,200 shares of preferred stock; Pettigrew, Bright & Co., of Boston, 1,335 shares of preferred stock and 1,450 shares of common stock; Paine, Webber & Co., of Boston, 3,807 shares of preferred stock and 717 shares of common stock; Henry Raynes, of Lowell, Mass., 1,000 shares of preferred stock; John Shepard, jr., of Boston, 1,283 shares of preferred stock and 1,285 shares of preferred stock Shepard, jr., of Boston, 1,283 shares of preferred stock and 1,385 shares of common stock; Townsend, Anthony & Tyson, of Boston, 2,670 shares of preferred stock and 145 shares of common stock; Tucker, Anthony & Co., 1,235 shares of preferred stock and 5,422 shares of common stock; H. C. Waimwright & Co., of Boston, 1,912 shares of preferred stock and 1,571 shares of common stock. Those are only a few of the principal stockholders contained in that list.

Mr. WEEKS. May I ask the Senator what inference he intends to draw from that recital of the names of stockholders?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The inference I intended to draw was that the preparation of the stockholders are under the control of the stockholders.

that the pneumatic-postal service was under the control of the Boston company and Boston people.

Mr. WEEKS. Let me suggest to the Senator that very many of those names that he has read are Boston brokers. As I stated to-day, there is no dividend paid or ever has been on the preferred or common stock of this company. It is customary under such circumstances, where a broker buys and carries for his customer, to transfer the stock in the broker's name, because it is a good street delivery, while the name of the private individual might not be. In the case the Senator has stated, he would not transfer what was to be used as collateral in a bank; and as no dividends are paid in this case there is every reason why the stock should be in the name of brokers. Very frewhy the stock should be in the name of brokers. Very frequently those certificates are out of the hands of the brokers, held by the owners, but held in the broker's name, because they are a street delivery. The recital of the names the Senator has read does not mean that they own the stock at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It means that the stock is listed in their names, and I read it in connection with the statement that the holding company is owned in Boston. The president of all these companies is president of the company, and the same individual is the manager of all of the local companies.

dividual is the manager of all of the local companies.

Mr. WEEKS. That is true. There is no disputing that.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Can the Senator give the aggregate capitalization of these companies with the holding company?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can not offhand. I will furnish it to the Senator.

There is one other comment that the Senator from Massachusetts made in regard to the increase in the appropriation for automobile trucks to $400,000 which, as I undestood it, he stated was intended to take the place of the pneumatic-tube service which was to be abandoned. I am informed that that is not the case at all, that that is not the purpose of this increase. The increase is found in the item of $5,965,000, on page 15 of the Post Office appropriation bill, and the purposes for which that amount is appropriated are stated as follows:

For vehicle allowance, the hiring of drivers, the rental of vehicles, and the purchase and exchange and maintenance, including stable and garage facilities, of wagons or automobiles for, and the operation of, screen-wagon and city delivery and collection services, $5,965,000.

It is the normal increase which is contained in every Post Office appropriation bill from year to year for the increased automobile delivery service of the year, principally in those cities where the Government owns its screened automobile wagons; and as the business is constantly increasing, of course there is increased need for these wagons. Nor is it confined to those cities only where the Government owns the wagons, but it applies to all increases throughout the entire country. So as to the assertion or argument made by the Senator from Massachusetts that the Postmaster General proposes to spend $400,000 for a portion of the pneumatic-tube service which is to be retained, and $400,000 for this increase in automobile wagon service, which will be made necessary by the abandonment of the pneumatic-tube service, making $800,000, a greater amount than the $600,000 which the Postmaster General says in his letter he will save. The fact of the case is, as already stated, that the he will save, increase for automobiles is not occasioned by, and has no connection except in a very small degree with, the abandonment of the pneumatic-tube service, and the saving of $613,000 the Postmaster General estimates in his letter will be saved from the abandonment of the entire pneumatic-tube service, and not only from a portion of it. So there will be no $400,000 under that plan for continuing a portion of the pneumatic-tube service.

There is a committee of the Post Office Department investigating this matter in New York now. My information is that the conclusions at which they have arrived are far more unfavorable to the pneumatic-tube postal service even than this report which had previously been made, in which it was suggested, as pointed out by the Senator from Massachusetts that the service below Forty-second Street in New York should be retained. I am informed from the Post Office Department that this committee of the department was sent there because of the thousands of complaints that have been received by the Post Office Department from cities surrounding New York, from Philadelphia, Boston, and other cities on account of the unreasonable delay in the receipt of the mail from New York, and cases are being cited in which mail stamped at 6 o'clock p. m. in New York was not received in Philadelphia, the city of the addressee, in time to be delivered on the first delivery in the morning mail, and upon an investigation into this condition, which was growing general or very extensive, the opinion of the experts of the Post Office Department is that it is due to the inefficiency of the pneumatic-

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I intended to discuss this measure at some length, but I feel now that it is entirely unnecessary. I think, perhaps, all has been said that can be said for and against the amendment, and I am entirely willing, so far as I am concerned, to leave the matter with the Senate.

I wish to ask the Secretary to read as a part of my remarks a part of the testimony of the superintendent of street traffic in the city of New York, which was given before the Post Office Committee at its recent investigation. I ask the Senate to listen to it, and then, if they are willing to discontinue these tubes, the blood of those people will be on their hands. I ask the Secretary to read what has been marked. the Secretary to read what has been marked.

The Secretary read as follows:

Now, gentlemen, may I add this: I believe that if to-day the proposition was submitted to the people of the city of New York to pay for, by popular subscription, the discontinuing of the present motor mail truck and a substitution of service by tube, that you would have within 24 hours ten times the money that would be required to pay for it, and I would be one of the first subscribers, because I have two little children, and they use the streets of the city of New York, and I know what it means.

If you gentlemen could have seen the pictures that I have seen on children, and they use the streets of the city of New York, and I know what it means.

If you gentlemen could have seen the pictures that I have seen on the streets of the city of New York: A mother running in the street and picking up the mangled form of her little child, its life crushed out by a mail truck, carrying it to the sidewalk, with blood trickling down over her dress, and the confusion—that is not one day, but every day in the year. Every 14 hours of the day a life is crushed out, and every 23 minutes some one is injured.

Now, I would consider, having had the opportunity to come down here and lay this before you gentlemen, that I would have been derelict in my duty if I didn't come down here and do it, because I know what is going on. I know the street slaughter that is going on, and I know what the truck means to the traffic in the city of New York. I do not want the blood of 281 innocent children crying to me and saying. "Inspector, you didn't tell the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads the actual conditions of traffic in New York City."

Thank you, gentlemen.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, it strikes me that the evi-

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, it strikes me that the evidence is about all in, the argument of counsel has been heard, and I presume the jury is ready to take the question under consideration and render its verdict. I am going to consume but a moment of the precious time of the Senate this afternoon, but I trust I may be indulged the privilege of saying that my information upon this question has been derived almost exclusively from the investigation made and the testimony given by the representatives of the Government in the Postal Service. I the replication of the resident citizens of the cities interested in the tube service testify. Their testimony was of striking similarity, all tending to establish one definite fact and reach a common conclusion. Of course, I understand the motives that would naturally move gentlemen, situated as they are, in giving testimony upon such a subject. Without imputing to them improper, selfish, or sinister motives, Senators will understand as well as I do the state of mind, or rather the attitude of mind, with which they would naturally approach the question at issue. In judging my fellows it is my custom, until the contrary is shown, to indulge the presumption that they are doing that which is right, actuated always by lofty and proper motives. For that reason I do not approve the reflection or veiled imputation that has been made by certain Senators upon the acts of the representatives of the Government in the Post Office Department, who have, in my judgment, earnestly and honestly investigated the subject involved in this controversy and given as a result of that investigation to the Congress and the American people an intelligent and patriotic conclusion. The able and versatile, distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] seems inclined to throw the mantel of charity around the Postmaster General for his part in this investigation. If he does not state it in definite terms he intimates that the Postmaster General is the victim of deception; that the automobile dealers, who have machines to sell to the Government, have imposed upon the subordinate officers of the Post Office Department by leading them to believe that the automobile could accomplish a service which in fact it can not accomplish, and the officers or employees of the Covernment have intermediated the Post Office Department of the Covernment have in turns which officers or employees of the Government have in turn misled the Postmaster General to an improper determination. With all due respect to my distinguished friend, the able Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis], I question the ingeniousness of his criticism. There are few crimes more regrettable in the life of a public servant than that of credulity. It strikes me that the honorable Postmaster General will acknowledge a very slight debt of gratitude to the generous Senator for his valiant defense, or perhaps I should say, apology. My good friend, the very able and always courteous Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] has deviated somewhat from his usual course in debate. thought the Senator was very unhappy, really unjust, in his statement criticizing the commission appointed to investigate the tube system when he said that the commission had delayed in making its report and gratuitously aspersed the character of the members of that commission by intimating that an investigation would not be out of place. Mr. President, it is a weak cause, aye more, I fear, an unworthy cause, that must be bolstered up by "damning with faint praise" or aspersing with innuendo the character of those who oppose it. I think the report of that commission stands for itself. The question of conscientious and faithful service on the part of the members of the commission needs no defense at my hands. The honorable Postmaster General, whose long service to the Government, his distinguished ability, and honorable station in official life in this city calls for no defense or apology from me. I believe these officers have done their duty. Their work is characterized by intelligence, fidelity, promptness, and loyalty to the right. believe in them personally, I have faith in them officially, and I shall manifest my confidence in the correctness of their conclusion by voting against the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I shall have very little to say about this matter, but I am unwilling that certain statements that have been made should go unchallenged. We are told that if the pneumatic-tube service in New York City is discontinued, the mails of the country will no longer be able to be handled in New York; and the impression is sought to be created that the abolition of the tube system will be in the nature of a complete revolution affecting all the mails. The fact of the matter is that at the present time there is only 12 per cent of the mail of New York City handled through the tubes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Five per cent.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Mississippi, who has given this subject great attention, tells me I am in error, that it is only 5 per cent.

The second proposition is that one which is backed by the tearful and pathetic appeal of the commissioner of traffic in New York City, which is read here for the purpose of creating the impression that if we abolish the pneumatic-tube system in New York City the streets of that great metropolis will be crowded with automobiles running at 40 or 50 miles an hour, destroying men, women, and children; and this amiable and tearful gentleman comes down here and says it is his duty to appeal on behalf of the women and children.

What are the facts? If we abolish the system in New York City, it would put on the streets of New York City just 30 additional Ford cars. You could put 30 additional Ford cars on any three blocks in New York City and not know they were That sort of argument is utter rot; it is something worse than rot; it is slobber; and yet it is put forward here as though it were a controlling fact, and that by it the Senate should guide itself. It is the cheapest kind of demagogery, and it ought not to be indulged in here.

I am not prepared to say, with the light I have, that the pneumatic-tube system should be abolished. If that question were presented alone, I might hesitate about my vote and might desire further light, particularly with reference to such cities as New York; but, Mr. President and Senators, that is not the question presented. I feel confident if these empty seats could be filled and Senators could be induced to consider the facts I am about to mention, there would be no chance for this particular amendment to be adopted.

The Pneumatic Tube Co. came here in 1902, and at that time an act was passed which provided for an investigation. investigation appears never to have been made until within the last few months. Nevertheless the company hold their contracts, and they have enjoyed the emoluments and profits thereof from 1902 to the year of grace 1917.

It is admitted upon all hands, I will say by way of preliminary, that the price we are paying is probably too high; but what are the propositions? The first one is that we must renew these contracts. There is no discretion left to the Postmaster General to bargain for a lower price. If the Postmaster General could secure this work to be done for one-half the present price, and if that would be a fair price, there is under this amendment absolutely no discretion left in him to secure the benefit of that reduction for the country. You will search far to find any other law that has ever been proposed which compels the head of a great department to pay absolutely the price that was fixed by his predecessors 15 years ago and which absolutely commands him to pay the same price now without right of contract. I am somewhat surprised to find a clause of that kind put into any bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, the Senator realizes that there is only one concern doing this work, and that, therefore, there is no need to let contracts and to ask for bids. As I understand, I will say to the Senator, who was not present during much of the discussion of the pneumatic-tube proposition, the reason there is no need to advertise for bids is that only one company can bid.

Mr. REED. I have not spoken of the advertisement for bids; but does the Senator claim that because this concern is a mo-Mr. REED. nopoly we must therefore waive the poor privilege of asking it to reduce its price?

Mr. BRYAN. I do not.
Mr. REED. Or of saying to it, "If you do not reduce your price, we will discontinue the service"? Does the Senator think we ought not to be in a position to bring some pressure in order to get a better price, because, forsooth, this blessed institution is a monopoly? Certainly the Senator does not mean

Mr. BRYAN. No. If the Senator will allow me a chance right there, I will tell him why I think the provision in this bill The other House authorized the expenditure of is as it is. this appropriation for continuing the pneumatic-tube service. The Senate committee was informed that notwithstanding the House language it was the intention of the Postmaster General not to spend the money at all. The Senator from Missouri realizes that we are limited in choice to one of two propositions-not to have the service at all or to pay the price that has been paid-because, if the Postmaster General and this company were left to negotiate as to the price, the Postmaster General will not offer them any price. If that statement is correct, he will get along without the service altogether.

I think the Senator can understand that. I say this in defense of the action of the committee. As I have already said, I do not feel sufficiently familiar with this whole subject to express a very positive opinion about it.

Mr. REED. I can understand the position the Senator takes; and yet let us analyze it for a moment. It is this: This company has a monopoly of pneumatic tubes. The Postmaster General represents the Government, which is the sole bidder for that service. So you have one institution alone that can furnish the service and one customer for that service. would seem to me that, if Congress were to say to the Postmaster General, "We appropriate a certain amount for a certain service, which shall be expended in that service," that would be going far enough; but you go further than that; you say he shall pay the absolute price which is now fixed.

Now, suppose the Senator from Florida was the proprietor of the pneumatic-tube service and anxious to have it continued and extended, and suppose there was no other person in the world who could furnish it, and suppose I was the Postmaster General, and there was nobody in the world who could take that service except the Government through me. Under those circumstances, with a threat impending that the service might be hereafter abolished, I think the Senator, as the proprietor of this system, would be very likely to come to me and endeavor to make a bargain on such terms as would enable him to continue his service in the years to come. The freedom of bargaining ought to be left, but this bill takes away my discretion and absolutely assures to the Senator, in the illustration I am using, the price he is now receiving. I repeat that we can not find in all the legislation of Congress, in my opinion, a proposition like that.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I think the Senator is hardly fair to the committee. Here is the situation: A contract was entered into for a term of years and extended once by act of Congress. The rate to be paid was fixed by a commission, the contract was drawn and signed. It has now expired. The Postmaster General not desiring to renew not only that contract but any contract at all, the committee decided that it was best to continue the service for another year, and in the meantime to have a commission view that property with the idea of buying it and the Government owning it. Unless we leave the contract as it exists to-day in effect for the next year how are we going to force any contract at all? How are we going to continue the service at all? It seems to me, in other words, that the committee is limited and the Senate and Congress are limited either to extending the contract as it exists to-day or not to have the pneumatic-tube service continued; but if that be not the fact, and the Senator can suggest any plan by which the service can be continued for a year, making it compulsory for the department to continue the service, he may write his own terms, and I think they will be acceptable to the committee. Mr. REED. Undoubtedly the committee could have put in a provision, since they are going to deal through a commission anyway, that the Postmaster General should continue this service and should pay for it such a sum as the commission should ascertain to be just and reasonable, not, however, exceeding the present contract price. That would have given the Government of the United States some chance to readjust these extortionate charges, whereas the committee's proposal absolutely compels the payment of the present price. Mr. BRYAN. Well, let us see if that can be done.

Mr. REED. Certainly it can be done. Mr. BRYAN. Hardly, I think, because the commission, within the time that now remains between this and the 1st of July, could hardly arrive at a conclusion. Perhaps if the Senator were on the commission he could do so; but this commission is being created for the purpose of valuing the property.

Mr. REED. I am not talking about valuing it; I am talking about making a bargain for the next year; and I undertake to say that a new bargain can be made with this pneumatic tube company in 10 days' time. They are practically forced to come to an agreement.

Mr. BRYAN. How would the Senator word the law so as to require the Postmaster General to continue the service and enter into a contract now, conceding that he will not sign a contract unless he is required to do so, and that he will not continue the service unless he is required to do so?

Mr. REED. This is hardly the time or the place to draft the phraseology of such a law; but I can frame it now on my feet.

Mr. BRYAN. Very well. Mr. REED. We could make such a provision as this: "The Postmaster General shall continue the present tube service and shall pay therefor such sum as may be fixed by a commission appointed "—specifying the manner of its appointment, and so forth—"Provided, however, That in no event shall be pay a greater sum than the present contract price."

Mr. BRYAN. A commission fixed the present price, I will say to the Senator. The Postmaster General did not fix it. The price was fixed, I believe, by a commission appointed by Con-

Mr. REED. How long ago-15 years?

Mr. BRYAN. I suppose so.

Mr. REED. Yes. Mr. BRYAN. Then there was another commission.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the contract was made 10 years

Mr. BRYAN. I am not familiar with it, but I think there has been only one contract made, and there have been extensions of it

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have spent enough time to make that point plain, so far as I can make it plain; but I repeat that the committee provision absolutely ties the hands of the Postmaster General and of the Government and forces us to pay the price this company is now exacting, and that in the face of the fact that it seems to be the general opinion upon the floor that the present price is too high.

Now I call attention to the second proposition embraced in the amendment. Mr. President, it is certainly a mooted question whether or not the pneumatic-tube service is of general benefit. The Post Office Department, after an investigation, has reported that it is not a useful or beneficial device, taking into consideration the price paid.

It has been argued that the Post Office Department did not make a fair investigation. That, of course, impugns the integrity of the department, the fairness of the department, the common honesty of the department; and it is a very serious charge for any Senator to bring against an officer of the Cabinet; but let us assume that that is true; let us assume that there never has been a real investigation upon which Congress can rely; then the question is an open question. We find certain gentlemen asserting that this system is indispensable; we find others asserting that it is of no value which will warrant us in continuing it; yet, with the question untried and undetermined-for I am assuming now that we throw out the evidence of the department-it is not proposed here to investigate whether we ought to continue the system; it is not proposed we have a trial and ascertainment of that fact and then, in the light of the facts thus developed, to purchase the system or to throw the system out. That is not the proposition; the proposition is, in the absence of investigation, in the absence of the ascertainment, to prejudge the case and commit the Government absolutely to the purchase of this system.

Under the amendment as it is now drawn, we come to this: The monopoly-and I do not use the term in an offensive sense, but simply to describe the condition-if this legislation is passed, gets two things: First, absolutely a renewal of its contract at the present contract price. Second, an absolute assurance that the Government will buy. And the only thing that remains as a matter of discretion is the question of value, and that is to be ascertained by the commission. Is that a way to conduct the Government business? I repeat, for I want to enforce it if I possibly can upon the minds of Senators, that if you throw out the opinions of the department, if you throw out the investigation they made, then you have the question in this shape—that certain citizens are asserting that this system of pneumatic tubes is very essential, the department asserting that it is not essential and not bene-The case, therefore, is open and undetermined; and yet, with the record in that shape, it is proposed to absolutely commit Congress to the purchase of this system!

What would be the fair and proper course? It would be to draw this amendment so that an investigation should be had. That investigation should cover two questions: First, Is the system desirable? If that question is answered in the affirmative, then, having been answered in the affirmative, the next question of ascertainment should be its value. But to foreclose that, to prejudice that, to say that the system shall be purchased-

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri what he would do with the tubes and the tube system while this investigation was going on.

Mr. REED. That is quite another question. I discussed that a few moments ago.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I know it is another question, but it is a very pertinent one.

Mr. REED. I discussed that in the absence of the Senator. I said that, if it was deemed necessary, you could provide for the continuance of the use of the system, but that you ought not to debar the Government of any chance to bargain-any chance to try and get a lower price-and compel the Government absolutely to accept the price now fixed in the contracts.

Now, there is not any mystery about this.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President

Mr. REED. Just let me finish my answer and I shall be glad to yield. There is no mystery about this-not a bit. It is about as plain as the nose on a man's face, where he has a good-sized nose. What is it? If we were dealing here for private parties, what would we do? We might say to our authorized agent, "Yes; continue the tube system"; but if we were empowered as the Government is empowered in this case we would never say, "Continue it at the present contract price" unless we knew that that price was one advantageous to us. We would create some sort of tribunal to fix the price, we fixing a maximum beyond which that tribunal could not go. Thus we a maximum beyond which that tribunal could not go. would save whatever advantages can be saved by this bill, and we would also have whatever advantages might come from a favorable decision. Second, if we did not know whether the system was a good one or a bad one, whether it was desirable or undesirable-if that was a mooted question we would never think of binding ourselves to buy it until we had determined first whether it was a thing we ought to buy; and yet that is exactly what the committee's amendment does

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, that statement is the statement that brought me to my feet. This amendment, I suggest to the Senator, does not commit the Congress to purchase this tube system. The Senator says that we are here binding Congress to buy out this system. I deny that. I say that it is simply a provision for an investigation and report as to the value of the tube system; and when that report comes back, then is the time for Congress to decide whether or not we will purchase it. I think the Senator will concede that much.

Mr. REED. I do not. I will read the language. Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator claim, then, that by the adoption of this amendment Congress is bound to buy this tube

Mr. REED. I mean to say that this amendment plainly and unequivocally commits us to the policy of purchase.

Mr. BRYAN. To the policy of purchase?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. Does it commit us to the purchase?

Mr. REED. Of course, a future Congress could refuse to Mr. BRYAN. Does it commit this Congress to the purchase of the system?

Mr. REED. Not irrevocably.

Mr. BRYAN. Does it commit Congress at all to the purchase? Mr. REED. I think it does. I shall read it.

Mr. BRYAN. Well, it either does or does not-one of the

Mr. REED. There can not be any difference of mere language between the Senator and myself.

Mr. BRYAN. No, Mr. President; it is rather an important thing, because the Senator

Mr. REED. I unqualifiedly say that if we adopt this amendment it will not force a future Congress to take this system; but I say that this amendment is a step in that direction and plainly points to the intent and purpose to commit Congress to that kind of policy.

Mr. BRYAN. That is a very different statement from the Senator's first statement.

Mr. REED. That is just the statement I have been making. and the Record will show that it is the statement I have been making. It reads:

Provided further. That a commission consisting of three members of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the United States Senate, to be designated by the Vice President, and three members of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the House of Representatives, to be designated by the Speaker of the House, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the value of the pneumatic-tube service, their properties, franchises, and other equipment, with a view to the purchase and operation of the same or any portion thereof by the Government.

"With a view to the purchase."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, that certainly can not compel Congress to purchase.

Mr. REED. Oh, it does not compel Congress to do it until the contract is signed.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I might go to Missouri to look at the farm of the Senator with a view to purchase, but that does not imply that I would be obligated to purchase.

Mr. REED. No, sir; but if the Senator already occupied my farm, and if he came to me and said, "I want to appoint a man in connection with you to fix the value of this farm with a view to my purchasing it," I would understand the Senator to mean that he was going to take that farm at the value fixed, and that I was to sell it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, I would not understand it that way at all. I would understand that my agent, whoever he might be, that conferred with the Senator, would report back to me. The proposition as proposed by the Senator from Missouri to my agent for the purchase of his farm might not be compatible with my ideas or my purse at all.

Mr. REED. Ah, but the Senator misses the point.
Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not, I think, at all.
Mr. REED. Of course, the farther East we go, the less we are bound unless the contract is solemnly sealed and recorded.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, no.

Mr. REED. But out West, out in the country where I come from, if I were to say to the Senator: "Do you want to buy my farm? We will appoint a man to fix the value, and when that is done we will have it done with a view to the sale," I would feel in honor bound to transfer the farm.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I repel that theory. I insist that the morals of the West are no better than the morals of the East. We will stand with you on that question at any time.

Mr. REED. Yes; but you do business in a little different ay. I know your morals are all right.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. We do it just as squarely, and we pay for what we get.

Mr. REED. But, Mr. President, we need not discuss the morals of New Jersey or Missouri.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No; and I did not bring in the moral question. The Senator brought in the moral question.

Mr. REED. But I say that any man who will read this language, and read it fairly, is bound to say that if the law is passed in this form two things will result. First, we will renew the contract of this company at the present price without any power or discretion left in the Postmaster General to get a better price if he can. Second, having renewed that contract, we will have created a commission to ascertain the value of these properties—and now I quote—"with a view to the purchase and operation of the same * * * by the Government." That plainly means and implies that we are now com-That plainly means and implies that we are now committing ourselves to the policy of purchasing that property. The ability to withdraw exists, and will continue to exist until the Government actually passes the money.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I agree with the Senator from Missouri in the construction he puts upon that part of the amendment, and call his attention to what must be admitted by everybodythat this commission will have no authority to report back to Congress upon the advisability of the purchase, discretion of that kind vested in them at all. There is no

The only power that the commission would have would be to ascertain the value of these properties with a view to purchase by the Government. In other words, the statute commits the commission to that policy in its very creation and regards it as so much of a policy already adopted, if this amendment is agreed to, that we appropriate $25,000 to pay the expenses of the inquiry for the purpose of ascertaining the value.

Mr. REED. Oh, of course.

Now, Mr. President, I have just one word further to say. I utterly repudiate and repel the idea that the findings of the commission that has already reported with reference to the pneumatic-tube system are to be thrown out and disregarded because the Postmaster General who appointed the commission himself had an opinion with reference to the value of these tubes. Of course, any Postmaster General is very likely to have an opinion with reference to the value of any part of the service. That is very natural, and he may have expressed that view; and if he had served upon the commission it would be well understood that he went upon the commission with the case prejudiced. But the Postmaster General appointed three experts to examine this question, and now it is asserted that their opinion is of no value because the man who appointed them had a particular opinion.

Now, I do not like that kind of innuendo. If the Senator from New York were the governor of that State and were called upon to appoint a commission to ascertain the facts with reference to any matter I should hate to believe that because he had an opinion he would pick a commission composed of such arrant scoundrels that they would report that which they believed was not the fact simply to please the supposed governor of New York. I should imagine that if the Senator from New York, being charged with the responsibilities I have mentioned, acting under the authority of law, were to entertain an opinion, no matter how positive it might be, nevertheless, in the selection of any commission to pass upon a question of fact, he would pick men of good judgment, of good morals, and good fiber, and that as an honest man and as a sworn public official he would allow them to proceed and render a verdict in accordance with the facts; and being charged with the duty of appointing the commission, if the fact that he had an opinion would bar him from appointing the commission, then a commission never could be appointed by any man who had an opinion.

The Senator from New York is generally a very fair man, and I hardly think he wants to leave the record in the shape that it now is; for his remarks amount to the bald assertion that because the Postmaster General himself has an opinion with reference to the utility of these tubes, he either selected a set of men with the particular object of finding men who agreed with him in advance, and thus violated his moral obligation to the Government, or, having selected these men, he interfered with the freedom of their judgment and thus violated his moral obligation to the Government; and it embraces a third proposition-that the three men themselves should be of that knavish and contemptible character which would make of them mere tools for a designing Cabinet officer who had willfully violated his moral obligation to the Government.

That is a pretty serious sort of charge for any man to make, and to make without any evidence whatsoever save the mere naked suspicion that a man, having an opinion himself, would therefore pick men, not to decide honestly, but to carry out his own prejudice.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the House left this bill in a proper enough shape. If it is enacted as the House sent it to us, the appropriation will be made, and I have no doubt that the Postmaster General will proceed to carry out the will of Congress and spend the money in the manner and form provided by Congress. I am in thorough accord with the idea of investigating this service further and ascertaining whether it will be of real value to the country, but I am utterly opposed to fastening this contract upon the country by law and committing Congress to the policy of purchasing that which may or may not be of use, and to do that in advance of any investigation.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I presume the Senate is anxious to vote as soon as practicable, and I do not wish to unnecessarily take time. There are some considerations involved in the proposed abolition of the tube service in some areas that ought not to be inconsiderately disposed of. There are certain congested areas in metropolitan districts that I believe the committee appointed by the department did not particularly investigate. Giving them full credit for any intention they may possibly have had, I doubt whether they took sufficient time or heard those who were sufficiently informed upon all the

There are certain cities that require imperatively some relief from the congestion. First is New York, next are Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, and certain other of the larger cities, including St. Louis. There is no relief from this congestion by recurring to the old form of surface transportation. Surface transportation must be relieved by sending it some place else. The elevated way does not furnish any relief; you can not navigate the air under the present condition of aerial science; and subways furnish the only available escape.

So far as the tube companies are connected with this problem the Government can protect itself. I do not yet see any disposition on the part of these private companies to practice ex-tortion upon the Government. Congress can always protect the department and protect itself and the revenue of the department by adequate provision in the bills that are passed annually for the support of this item. So I think we are in no danger from extortion; we are in no danger of imprudent contracts, nor the unwarranted expenditure of undue sums of money.

Mr. Milholland's name was mentioned, for instance, this afternoon as a shareholder. He has five shares of stock only. market value of the stock is about $10 to-day on the quotations. There is no such massing of shareholding by Mr. Milholland, who has been quoted as a sort of shareholding bogy man here, as would endanger the Government. I do not care to pursue this branch of it.

What I occupy the time for is to recur to the evidence of Mr. Myers, who is the superintendent of the traffic squad of New York City. Thomas Myers has had an extensive experience. Some of that is contained in a very few words in the printed hearings of the Senate committee. He says, for instance, on page 102 of these hearings that motor trucks in which the mail is carried-

Are 6 feet wide, 15 to 18 feet long, weigh 2 tons or over, and they must make time; they must get through the streets; they must make connections. We try to regulate them as best we can, but the idea that they are working or at least employed by the Government of the United States has an unconscious effect on a policeman. Further, according to law, they have the right of way. I have heard it said here to-day that it was not known whether they had the right of way or not. I will call attention to the Statutes of the United States, 1901, volume 2, chapter 9, section 3995, which says [reading]:

"Obstructing the mail—Penalties: Any person who shall knowingly and willfully obstruct or retard the passage of the mail, or any carriage, horse, driver, or carrier carrying the same, shall, for every such offense, be punishable by a fine of not more than $100."

Whether the policemen know that or not I do not know; but they do know that the mail must be given the right of way. Consequently, when traffic is moving uptown, say, north and south, and a mail truck comes from the east or west, immediately the traffic man stops all traffic; the mail truck passes through, jangling its bell; and, with the known or assumed authority that they are supreme over all, the drivers pass through, endangering the pedestrian and endangering other users of the highway.

Practically the same conditions obtain in Chicago in what is known as the loop district. There is during the business hours an extreme rush of both vehicles drawn by animal power and mechanically propelled, as well as the travel of pedestrians. that make any addition to the multitude extremely unwise. This has largely been presented by the report of the committee from the department that made this examination as if it were a matter of no consequence; that the addition of a few trucks to those already traversing the streets was not a serious matter.

Mr. Myers continues:

Now, the mail truck—I have not the exact figures, but they have killed five or six people within the last year. On December 14, the day that I appeared before the House committee on this same proposition, a boy 10 years old was on the sidewalk—not in the street, but on the sidewalk—and his life was crushed out by a mail truck that jumped the curb and went up on the sidewalk. That is from the recklessness and the character of the vehicle, the time that they must make, and the leeway that they are given by having the right of way, etc.

He continues:

I know, of my own knowledge of traffic and by observation in the United States of the various kinds of trucks, that 1 mail truck on a city street, in so far as the ordinary regulation of traffic is concerned, amounts to 10 other trucks, commercial trucks, which are ready to obey the voice or hand signal of a traffic policeman, keep to the right, and keep in the line of traffic. The mail truck is in the ratio of 10 to 1.

I have heard here that if the tube system be abolished in New York City it would require, when it is discontinued, from 140 to 145 trucks. Multiplying this by the ratio, you add to the vehicular traffic of New York City alone from 1,400 to 1,450 mail trucks of the kind, dimension, and weight described by the superintendent of the traffic squad. This is a matter of no small consequence. The inspector continues:

I am surprised to think that anyone who has any knowledge what-ever of traffic conditions and the great number of vehicles and the enor-mous number of pedestrians who use the city streets would think of adding even one truck to our already great maze of traffic.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] propounds the question:

Senator Hardwick. On the safety of human life they made no inquiry at all?

Mr. Myers. No, sir; not within the past three years.

Mr. Myers continues-and, to my mind, this is conclusive in relieving the surface of congestion and as to the necessity of keeping the two systems:

keeping the two systems:

If you gentlemen could have seen the pictures that I have seen on the streets of the city of New York—a mother running in the street and picking up the mangled form of her little child, its life crushed out by a mail truck, carrying it to the sidewalk, with blood trickling down over her dress, and the confusion. That is not one day, but every day in the year. Every 14 hours of the day a life is crushed out, and every 23 minutes some one is injured.

Let would be one of the first subscribers to provide the money to keep up the mail-tube system if it were abolished, because I have two little children, and they use the streets of the city of New York, and I know what it means.

know what it means.

I will not read from the testimony of witnesses who presented the conditions in Chicago, but content myself with saying that the conditions in the city of Chicago are practically duplicated by those in New York. Five hundred and ninety-one people are killed every year on the streets of Chicago under present conditions, and that juggernaut of the Government in the shape of a gasoline-propelled mail truck, with the dimensions and weight described by the inspector in his testimony, will never by my vote be added to the surface conditions of any of the large cities. any of the large cities.

It is not a question of money. It has been argued here as if it were a matter of compensating for the life that is destroyed by the payment of a few dollars. If the Government runs over somebody on the streets in Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, or Boston, come down to the Committee on Claims seems to be the idea and get paid for your dead. We can bury our dead without the Government. What we want is to have their lives preserved, and that is what I am voting for here.

It is not a matter of a few paltry Government dollars. It is a matter of adding governmental precautions to the safety of the citizens. The chances of raising a child in a city are sufficiently minimized now by lack of sanitary conditions, by the tremendous risk taken every time you go on the street. There is more safety on a steam railroad in the country between the rails than on the average street of the city of Chicago or New York. I would rather send an infant across a railroad track than over a street crossing in the crowded district where the millions that go and come in the loop of Chicago and the business district of New York City make those the most dangerous thoroughfares in the world.

You argue the question here this afternoon, my fellow Senators, as if it were a matter of compensating for the lives of the people who are lost. Let us diminish the risk and save the lives. I am not talking about saving money; I am talking about saving those who may have to take the risk at their own expense of the loss of life or limb.

Mr. President, if I had time I should like to make some further comments, but I am inclined to think the Post Office Department has made a very ex parte investigation of this question. I do not care to go into that. Their activities to save money are to be commended, but I would infinitely prefer, as I have suggested, to save life rather than the few dollars that might be cut out of this bill.

While I am talking about the activities of the department, I should like to offer an envelope, with the contents, that I received in due course of mail from the postmaster of Tyrone, Pa. It is a deadhead envelope; it is a franked communication. They are not trying to save money. They are showing the receipts of the post office and why they ought to have a Government building at that point. I commend to the Postmaster General, if he wants to save a few dollars, to call the postmaster at that point on the carpet and advise him to spend his time taking care of the duties of that office instead of lobbying here to add a few thousand dollars more to the public-building bill, that deserves strangulation in most of its items at the hands of an indignant public if not of the Senate. If you want to save money, regulate your own post offices and keep the postmasters in the line of their duty instead of clamoring for more expense and another public building.

When I see any sincere evidence of conversion, then I will be perfectly willing to cooperate when it can be done with safety to the congested centers of the larger cities of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I was favorable to the continuation of the pneumatic tubes for the succeeding year, but I have heard no answer made to the point made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] that this proposed amendment directs the Postmaster General to extend the existing contract for that service for a year's time without permitting him to get that service at a lesser rate. This matter was fixed some 10 years ago, as I understand. It seems that the Postmaster General is very much opposed to the continuation of the service. At all events, if this amendment is to go on the bill by the voice of the Senate, it does seem to me that it ought to be amended so as to permit the Postmaster General to make as reasonable an arrangement as he can. That can be done by having it as the subject of an arbitration between the Postmaster General and those who own these tubes. If the service is to be continued, I do not think that the hands of the Postmaster General ought to be absolutely tied so that he can not make a better bargain, if it be reasonable and be justified by the facts, which can be ascertained by an arbitrament of the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, and in support of it I send to the desk a paper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will first be stated.

The Secretary. On page 18, line 19, after the word "act," at the end of the committee amendment, it is proposed to insert:

That hereafter when railway postal clerks are transferred from one assignment to another because of changes in the service their salaries shall not be reduced by reason of such change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that the statement I have sent to the desk may be incorporated in the RECORD in connection with that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

The statement referred to is as follows:

The hearings before the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads contain a letter of instructions sent out from the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster General to be followed by the inspection service in the reorganization of the Railway Mail Service, which is now taking place in various parts of the country. This reorganization is stated to be for the purpose of eliminating all unnecessary space in trains and all unnecessary clerical force on trains so as to bring about economies in the payment for space and economy in the cost of the clerical force. The general superintendent stated to the committee that the force was being reduced, notwithstanding the fact that the volume of mail is increasing. On December 31, 1916, there were some 354 surplus clerks and 15 clerks who had been indefinitely laid off, due to reorganization plans which have been placed in effect. The Postmaster General, in a letter submitted to the committee, makes the statement that there has been a considerable reduction in the number of clerks employed because of the readjustment of the service. Reports are being sent in by the inspectors who are investigating the lines recommending the taking off of distribution and clerical force on trains. If this policy is to be followed upon all of the mall trains, and a careful perusal of the instructions sent out from the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster General can lead to no other conclusion, it will result in the placing of the clerks who have been taken off the trains in the terminals for the reason that the distribution taken off of trains will to a large extent be placed in the terminals and more men will be needed to perform the work. The maximum salary paid to distributors in terminals is $1,200 per annum, and that on the road runs from $1,200 to $1,500 per annum for distributors. It requires seven years of service to reach the $1,500 grade, and if these men are to be placed in terminals, many of them will be compelled to take a reduction in salary, and it does not seem fair to reduce the salaries of clerks in order to bring about further economies in the service. This amendment will not cost one cent additional, and its only effect is to prevent the department from reducing the salaries of clerks through administrative reforms that are, to say the least, of doubtful value to the service. The Postmaster General, in his letter to the committee, stated that the department does not contemplate a reduction in salary for the clerks, and in view of this statement there should be no opposition upon their part in opposing this amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, on yesterday an amend-

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, on yesterday an amendment reported by the committee and adopted by the Senate was, on the motion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. Bryan], reconsidered and a new amendment substituted in its place. I refer to the provision with reference to the pay of rural letter carriers for additional mileage traveled over 24 miles. I have no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, except that it commits to me those are more described. except that it occurs to me there are words omitted that ought to be included in that amendment. The original amendment referred to carriers on horse-drawn vehicle routes. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida, in its redrafting so as to include other routes, left out the words "horse-drawn vehicle routes." If there is no objection, I should like to ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which that amendment was adopted in order to insert the words "horse-drawn vehicle routes," so that the provision shall clearly apply to such routes as the committee intended to include. As it reads now there may be some question as to whether the provision would not apply to automobile routes or other than horse-drawn vehicle routes.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I do not think that the amendment the Senator proposes to offer will in any way change the meaning of the amendment already adopted, except that it will affect the rate of pay after a distance of 36 miles is reached, because when motor vehicles are allowed the rate of pay per mile provided by this amendment it is intended also to include them. I have no objection to allowing the Senator to offer his amendment, and have it adopted, so that it may go to conference.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the amendment referred to was adopted on yesterday

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Now, I move to amend the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida, by striking out the words "daily rural," before the word "routes," and inserting the words "horse-drawn vehicle."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I desire to invite the attention of the Senator from Florida to an amendment which I shall now submit to the bill, and ask whether he will not accept it and let it go to conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 14, after line 17, it is proposed to insert the following:

That in cases of emergency, or if the needs of the service require, letter carriers in the City Delivery Service, and clerks and other classified employees in first and second class post offices, can be required to work in excess of 8 hours a day; and for such additional services, and for all services performed after the lapse of 10 consecutive hours between the starting time and ending time of their schedules of duty, they shall be paid at double the rate of their salaries as fixed by law.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I can not accept that amendment, That gives to the letter carriers a privilege that is not accorded to other members of the service. It is a pretty serious proposition to double the rate of pay if clerks happen to be kept over-That does not apply in any of the other services. The fact is that the department is prohibited from working the clerks over eight hours except in cases of emergency, and then it can not pay them double time.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I know the Senate is pretty well tired out, and I do not want to delay the passage of this

If he will accept the amendment for the consideration of the conferees, I shall be satisfied.

Mr. BRYAN. Very well.
Mr. THOMAS. Well, just one moment, Mr. President.
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED in the chair). the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes. Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator the extent to which this amendment is going to increase the amount of this appropriation?

Mr. PENROSE. It does not increase it. It is simply to correct an abuse which has grown up in violation of the entire policy of the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. If it does not increase the appropriation, very

Mr. PENROSE. Now, Mr. President, I want to say one word

by way of explanation, and then I have done.

I had intended to ask the Senate to recede from the Senate amendments on pages 11 and 14 relative to the promotion of clerks and letter carriers, reducing the House provision for this purpose to 75 per cent of the clerks in first-class post offices, and so on down the line. As a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, however, I have some hesitation in not abiding by the verdict of the committee as far as the floor of this body is concerned, and I am content to let the matter go to conference, with the sincere hope that the Senate conferees may see their way clear to recede and concur in the House provisions regarding clerks and carriers in this respect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

SEVERAL SENATORS. What is the amendment?

Mr. PENROSE. I did not propose any. I merely made an explanation as to why I had not offered—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania was not agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. I thought it had been.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was accepted by the acting chairman of the committee, but not by the Senate. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which send to the desk as an additional section to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. It is proposed to add to the bill, as a new section, the following:

SEC. — In order to promote economy in the distribution of supplies and in auditing and accounting, the Postmaster General may hereafter designate districts and central offices in such districts through which supplies shall be distributed and accounts rendered, and may, for the above purposes, establish such branch offices within such districts as he may deem necessary; but in no case shall the postmaster at the central office be given authority to abolish offices or to change officers or employees in offices included in such districts.

Mr. WEEKS. That identical proposition has already passed the Senate. It is on a bill which may not be passed by the It seems desirable that it become part of the law.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I think that is a very excellent amendment, and I hope it will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. President, I offer the amendment which Mr. CUMMINS. send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The SECRETARY. On page 17, at the end of line 18, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That hereafter every railroad company carrying the mails shall carry on any train it operates, and without extra charge therefor, the persons in charge of the mails when on duty and traveling to and from duty, and all duly accredited agents and officers of the Post Office Department and the Railway Mail Service, including all terminal clerks, transfer clerks, and clerks assigned to the offices of division superintendents, and chief clerks and post-office inspectors, while traveling on official business, upon the exhibition of their credentials.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, this is an amendment which the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] intended to offer. In his absence I have offered it, though not on his behalf, because he did not request me to do it. I do it in my own behalf, and mention the circumstance simply to explain the heading of the amendment.

This is an exact reproduction of the law of last year, with the addition of the words "terminal clerks, transfer clerks, and clerks assigned to the offices of division superintendents." It has become necessary on account of a new policy which has been adopted by the Post Office Department, which I do not bill, which I assume the Senator is anxious to dispose of to-night. criticize, for I do not know anything about its merits; but through this new policy a great many of the railway mail clerks who had established homes along the line have been moved to the terminal transfer offices or terminal railway offices, and it is intended to allow them the same privilege of transportation which is now accorded to the railway mail clerk. In no other respect does it differ from the existing law upon the subject. The words I have quoted are inserted in the law as it now is, beginning with the word "including." It is simply an interpretation, rather, of the present law.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I feel compelled to raise the point of order on this amendment. The existing law allows free travel to the clerks in the Railway Mail Service. This amendment confers the same privilege upon clerks in terminal stations, transfer clerks, clerks assigned to the offices of division superintendents, and chief clerks. After the amendment was introduced it was referred to the department for its opinion, and

I quote from a letter, as follows:

The clerks specified in the language last quoted are those assigned to work in offices or to work in or near railroad stations at large terminals. Their assignments do not require them to travel on official business—

Which makes the difference between them and those who now enjoy the privilege.

The amendment appears to contemplate that railroad companies shall be required to transport such clerks between the place where they work and their homes located at such points out on a railroad line as the clerks may select.

Then the Postmaster General calls attention to this condition of affairs that would exist:

If the proposed amendment were to be enacted into law, then in the case of two clerks residing in the same town and traveling over the same line to a city in which they both worked, one employed in the office of the Superintendent of Railway Mail Service, the other employed in a post office, the former would receive transportation over the railroad without cost to himself, while the latter would have to pay for his transportation; and there would seem to be no good ground for making the distinction between the two clerks.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—— Mr. BRYAN. In other words, neither one of these clerks travels on the train in pursuance of his employment. The object of the amendment is to give them free transportation at the expense of the Government, because the Postmaster General then proceeds to point out that last year the question of compensation for railway mail pay was referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission; and undoubtedly if the Senate puts on this amendment in fixing the rates of railway mail pay the Interstate Commerce Commission is going to charge up to the department the expense of the transportation of these clerks not engaged in the Railway Mail Service. Such a clerk is no different from any other clerk who never has to travel on a train in the line of his duties. It is a simple gratuity. It is a free pass to these clerks. It is not in any way connected with their duties in the employment of the Government. There-

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes. Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, the comparison which the Senator makes between a clerk employed in the post office and one employed in the Railway Mail Service would not apply, because the reason for asking for this change of law, or, rather, this change of construction of the law, is not to take advantage of quite a number of clerks in the railway post office who have for a good many years built up their homes in localities where, on account of the change of a terminal or something of that kind, they now find themselves compelled to pay railroad fare in order to get to one end of the route over which they must run. At least that is as I understand it.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, no. Mr. NORRIS. And the reason that would permit or require those clerks to be carried by the railroad company would not apply at all to a clerk working in a post office that is permanently located.

Mr. BRYAN. No; nor in a terminal, because the privilege is granted to the postal clerks, because their business is to travel on the trains, and they may have to go from their homes to a

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but this amendment only applies to postal clerks.

Mr. BRYAN. This amendment applies to chief clerks and clerks in the terminals that never go on trains and handle the mail. New, let me state the point of order.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida

yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRYAN. Let me state my point of order. The point of order, of course, is that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President-

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator from Iowa. Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Florida has argued the merits of the matter on his point of order, and I presume he would have no objection to my saying a word in behalf of the amendment.

I could not hear all that the Senator from Florida said; but if he understands the amendment to extend the privilege of free transportation to the offices of the postmasters in the various cities or towns, he misreads it. It is limited to the clerks in the terminal railway mail offices. Now, these terminal offices have been established, because it was thought the business formerly done by the railway mail clerks on the train could be better done at the terminal offices; and so a great many of these clerks, as I understand, have been taken from the trains and transferred to the terminal offices, which do exactly the same kind of work that has been done and is being done upon the trains. These clerks, before their transfer, were entitled to transportation from the end of their runs to their homes, and I think they ought to be entitled to that transportation still, even under the law as it was passed last year; but there may be some doubt about that.

Mr. NORRIS. They are doing the same work, too.
Mr. CUMMINS. They are doing the same work.

Mr. NORRIS. The same work that they used to do when they were all railway postal clerks.

Mr. CUMMINS. And the amendment is proposed in order to clear up that doubt or to extend the privilege, if there be no doubt, to these people.

Mr. President, one of the greatest acts of injustice connected with the Post Office Department has been the transfer of the railway mail clerks from their former field of activity to the terminals. I remarked the other day that these railway mail clerks, under a policy that had been pursued for many years, had established homes, had built up their circle of friends, had created all the relations of life, and had reason to believe that this status would be continued. I am not complaining now of the policy which changed them, for I do not know enough about the subject to criticize it or to commend it, but it has been changed, and these clerks, instead of being compelled to abandon their homes, in which many of them have lived for years and years, asked the privilege of returning from the terminal to which they have been assigned to their homes without expense. The advance that will be made, if any, in the railway mail pay on account of this difference is negligible, it is so infinitesimal that it will never be considered by the Interstate Commerce Commission in determining the compensation for the railways. In the first place, there are not a very large number of them, and I understand the railways are perfectly willing to carry them in accordance with the old policy, but they can not be carried unless the Postmaster General gives each of them a credential or a commission.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska, Mr. NORRIS. The railroad companies prior to the order which was made did carry these same men.

Mr. CUMMINS. Undoubtedly.
Mr. NORRIS. The railroad companies made no objection to it.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no objection to it; and the suggestion that the Government of the United States will be compelled to pay any more for the transportation of the mails is purely

Now, with regard to the point of order, I do not believe, Mr. President, that this is general legislation. It is simply applying a statute already passed and which is now the law to the actual situation. It is simply removing a doubt which has existed with regard to the interpretation of the statute. I hope the Senator from Florida will not insist upon his point of order, but let us have a vote upon the amendment; and if it is the opinion of the majority of Senators that this ought not to be done, I shall be content. I am perfectly willing to take a rising vote in order to determine it; I will not call for the yeas and nays; but I appeal to the Senator from Florida not to make the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. If we are to vote upon this question I should like to know upon what authority the statement was made that the railroad companies are willing to carry these clerks free. I have been told that the railroad companies object to it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have a minute on my table, furnished me by one in whom I have confidence, in which that statement is made. I have not verified it by any inquiry from the railroad companies themselves insist on his point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida

Mr. BRYAN. I do insist upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BRYAN. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is within the Senator's province and it is satisfactory to the Chair. The Senator from Florida appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? Those who desire to sustain the decision of the Chair will please rise and stand until counted.

Mr. CUMMINS. As that is the question on which a division is called for, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me we had the precedent established to-day by the Vice President in the chair, and his decision was sustained on an appeal, that a certain amendment then pending was not general legislaton, and it came a great deal nearer general legislation than does this amendment. We had pending then an amendment which provided for a commission to make an investigation of the tube services all over the United States, and it included an appropriation of $25,000 to pay their expenses. It also gave the commission the right to employ experts and to make a complete investigation. The Chair held that it was not general legislation, and, as I said, the Senate on an appeal from the decision sustained the Chair.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator yield to me to make a motion to take a recess until to-morrow at half past 10 o'clock?

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will let me conclude— Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that it is the desire to take up this question in the morning.

Mr. NORRIS. All right; I yield.

RECESS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 10.30 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, February 15, 1917, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.

Rev. William Couden, of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Dear God, we know that Thou art far above considerations of earthly power and wealth, or numbers. Yet we feel that if Thou art mindful of two or three who gather in Thy name, Thou wilt hear the prayers of this our wide and populous We need Thee with all the shining of Thy light and love. Without Thee, the greatest is less than the least. With Thee, the weakest becomes strong, linked to the Eternal and Infinite.

In these days of uncertainty and stress we implore Thee to bless him who has been our President in the term now nearly past and who will soon enter upon another term of the great office. Guide all our leaders in thought and action, and move our people with truth and justice. If we are to have foes, judge Thou between us. And grant that our triumph always and forever shall be that we remain steadfastly on the side of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 10 minutes to 1. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 12 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

At 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper announced the Vice President and the Senate of the United States.

The Senate entered the Hall, preceded by their Sergeant at Arms and headed by the Vice President and the Secretary of the Senate, the Members and officers of the House rising to receive them.

The Vice President took his seat as the presiding officer of the joint convention of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House

The VICE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, this joint session of the two Houses of Congress is held in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, the laws enacted thereunder, and the concurrent resolution heretofore passed by the two Houses for the purpose of opening the certificates and ascertaining the electoral vote for President and Vice President of the United States. The tellers heretofore appointed by resolution of the two Houses—Mr. Kern and Mr. Clapp, on the part of the Senate, and Mr. Rucker of Missouri and Mr. Mapes, on the part of the House—will be seated at the Clerk's desk.

It has been the immemorial custom upon occasions such as this to refrain entirely from any manifestation of approval or disapproval. This custom has arisen from the fact that the result may not be entirely satisfactory to everybody, so the Chair requests that all in the gallery and the Members of both Houses refrain from any manifestation of approval.

In accordance with the law the Chair now opens the returns from the State of Alabama. If there be no objection, the reading of that portion of the return which is formal will be omitted. If any Senator or Representative desires it read in full, it will be read. If there be no objection, the formal reading will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The tellers will now count and announce the electoral vote of the State of Alabama.

Mr. KERN (one of the tellers). The certificate of the electoral vote of the State of Alabama seems to be regular in form and properly authenticated, and it appears therefrom that Woodrow Wilson, of the State of New Jersey, has received 12 votes for President of the United States, and that Thomas R. Marshall, of the State of Indiana, has received 12 votes for Vice President of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to this certificate? None being offered, the tellers will proceed to read, count, and announce the vote of the State of Arizona.

The tellers then proceeded to read, count, and announce, as was done in the case of Alabama, the electoral votes of the several States in their alphabetical order, and in each case objections, if any, were called for by the presiding officer, and none were offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All of the certificates having been read, counted, and announced, the tellers will make a list of the same and report the result to the Presiding Officer.

Mr. KERN (one of the tellers). Mr. President, we, John W. KERN and Moses E. CLAPP, tellers on the part of the Senate, and WILLIAM W. RUCKER and CARL E. Mapes, tellers on the part of the House of Representatives, report the following as the result of the ascertainment and counting of the electoral vote for President and Vice President of the United States for the term beginning March 4, 1917:

JOHN W. KERN, MOSES E. CLAPP, Tellers on the part of the Senate. WILLIAM W. RUCKER, CARL E. MAPES, Tellers on the part of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. By the report of the tellers and the list made by them of the electoral vote of the several States, the state of the vote for President of the United States, as delivered to the President of the Senate, is as follows:

The whole number of the electors appointed to vote for President of the United States is 531, of which a majority is 266.

Woodrow Wilson, of the State of New Jersey, has received for President of the United States 277 votes.

Charles E. Hughes, of the State of New York, has received 254 votes.

The state of the vote for Vice President of the United States, as delivered to the President of the Senate, is as follows:

The whole number of the electors appointed to vote for Vice President of the United States is 531, of which a majority is Thomas R. Marshall, of the State of Indiana, has received for Vice President of the United States 277 votes.

Charles W. Fairbanks of the State of Indiana, has received 254 votes.

This announcement of the state of the vote by the President of the Senate shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons elected President and Vice President of the United States, each for the term beginning March 4, 1917, and shall be entered, together with a list of the votes, on the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The purpose for which the joint convention assembled having been accomplished, I now dissolve this joint convention, and the Senate will retire to their Chamber.

The Senate retired from the Hall, and (at 1 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Speaker resumed the chair and called the House to order.

TRANSFER OF RETIRED ARMY OFFICERS TO THE ACTIVE LIST.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk called the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs I call up the bill S. 6850, an act authorizing transfer of certain retired officers to the active list.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House will automatically resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LLOYD in the chair.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, within one year of the approval of this act, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer, upon application, to the active list of the Army any officer under 50 years of age who may have been transferred heretofore from the active to the retired list of the Army under the act to provide for recognizing the services of certain officers of the Army, Navy, and Public Health Service for their services in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1915: Provided, That such officer shall be transferred to the rank and place on the active list which he would have had if he had not been retired, shall be carried as an additional number in the grade to which he may be transferred or at any time thereafter promoted, and shall be promoted on the same date as the officer next above him in rank, and shall be commissioned in the arm or department of the Army from which he was retired: Provided further, That such officer shall stand a satisfactory medical examination, and when promoted shall stand the medical and professional examinations provided for by law: And provided further, That any officer transferred to the active list under this act shall not again be entitled to the benefits of the Panama Canal act described above, except when retired for age or for physical disability incurred in the line of duty.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I send to the desk a letter

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I send to the desk a letter that I would like to have the Clerk read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

DECEMBER 4, 1916.

Hon. S. H. Dent,

Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Dent: I wish to bring to your attention Senate bill 6850, which is the same as H. R. 17424, now on the Union Calendar.

The act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year 1916 contains a provision authorizing the transfer to the active list of officers of the Army previously transferred to the retired list for physical disability and provides that each officer so transferred be carried as an additional number and be given the place on the active list he would have had if he had not been retired. This act does not include officers who have been retired under the Panama Canal act, approved March 4, 1915, which deficiency in legislation the bill S. 6850 would remedy.

include officers who have been retired under the Panama Canal act, approved March 4, 1915, which deficiency in legislation the bill S. 6850 would remedy.

Officers transferred to the active list under the present law have been advanced one or two grades in rank, whereas officers transferred under bill S. 6850 would return to the rank each held at the time of his retirement, or, as it happens, one grade lower than that held by each on the retired list.

The officers retired under the Panama Canal act were physically and mentally sound, well trained, and had had unusual experience for their age, and I consider it a good business proposition for the Government to obtain the active services of those who desire to return to the active list under the conditions of bill S. 6850.

One of the officers served 21 years in the Ordnance Department, and his return to the active list would help to meet a pressing shortage of experienced officers brought about by the increased burden placed upon that department through recent appropriation acts and by the loss of a number of such officers taken from the department by the inducements of private employment, which shortage could be relieved in no other prompt manner. There are now several demands for such an officer which there is no way of meeting

I consider the enactment into law of bill S. 6850, as passed by the Senate on September 8, 1916, to be for the best interests of the Government.

Sincerely, yours,

Newton D. Baker.

Sincerely, yours, NEWTON D. BAKER, Secretary of War.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. When it was being considered by the House at that time certain objections were raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] on the theory that the bill brought into the service certain men that made it objectionable.

The proposition here is that we are not trying to do a favor to any Army officer, nor are we trying to promote any Army officer, but what we are trying to do is to favor the United States and to save money to the Government of the United States for the simple reason that these men are now on the retired list at a grade above that at which they will come back into the service. As long as they live and stay on the retired list they will continue to draw the retired pay, and if some other man is put into these positions he will draw more pay and we will be paying two men, one of whom is working and one of whom is not working. If, on the other hand, you let these men go back into the service at a grade at which they are now receiving you will save the retired pay and get a good and efficient, well-tried, and true Army officer to do the work that this Government now needs to have done.

Gen. Crozier was before our committee and this question was brought up, and he was asked why he was interested in this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL, Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are we considering Senate bill 6850 now?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not that a general bill that would admit any retired Army officer who might have gone out of the service temporarily?

Mr. CALDWELL. No; this bill will only cover four Army officers, retired under the Panama Canal act, mentioned in the

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The report I have mentions no Army officer. I have a report brought in by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] from the Committee on Military Affairs to accompany S. 6850. It mentions no names, and does not indicate that it is in the interest of any special officer.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will yield, there is an earlier report on the House bill which I assume the gentleman from

New York refers to.

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will bear with me, I will expain. The bill seeks to enable four Army officers who were retired at the time Gen. Goethals retired to be placed on the active list. At that time it was found in the House that if these men who had been doing the work on the Panama Canal were sent back into active duty the fact that they went back into active duty would be practically a reduction in standing, and so for that reason the men were given an opportunity to retire, and four of them took advantage of the act, and this bill covers those four and no more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Were they employed on the Panama Canal when they were retired?

Mr. CALDWELL. They were in the United States service; three retired as majors and one as a colonel.

Mr. BROWNING. Who are the four men referred to?

Mr. CALDWELL. One was Col. Dickson, who received $3,750 a year, and the three others were majors, receiving $2,925 per year.

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. KAHN.

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.
Mr. KAHN. These gentlemen, when retired, retired one grade higher under they had been serving. they had been serving. ALDWELL. I have so stated. grade higher under the Panama Canal act than that in which

Mr. CALDWELL. I have so stated. Mr. BROWNING. Is Maj. Barbour one of the retired officers?

Mr. CALDWELL. I think not.

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. STAFFORD.

Mr. CALDWELL. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. If I understand this bill, it is intended merely to permit one of the four officers who retired under the Panama Canal retirement act to regain service in the Army.

We want to permit all four to return to Mr. CALDWELL. the active list, but I understand that there is but one that will

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee whether the gentleman seeking to gain promotion in the service is employed in civilian life?

Mr. CALDWELL. No; he is now doing duty voluntarily in the Army, having gone back to the service as a retired officer. He is now at Watervliet doing duty on which he volunteered to work until March 4, 1917, after which, if this bill should not become a law. he will go back into civil life.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has he accepted the retirement provided for in the Panama Canal act?

Mr. CALDWELL. He did. At the time that Col. Dickson accepted that retirement his wife was in a very delicate condition. She was so badly off that it was impossible for him to stay in the service and properly care for her. He took advantage of this retirement clause and nursed his wife until she died. After she died and he was on the retired list, he was given a contract of employment in civil life, and just as he was beginning in the work the contract fell down and he had been in a very high executive position.

quit. Since that time he has been offered numerous places of employment at high salary, but because of his past experience and his association in the Army and his desire to spend that kind of a life, he is holding off from going into private employment in munition factories, hoping he can get into the United States Army and there perform the duty that we need just such men to perform.

Mr. STAFFORD. Have any of the other three who have accepted retirement under the Panama Canal act accepted service with munition factories or other private employment?

Mr. CALDWELL. I understand two of them have. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MILLER], who can tell the gentleman in respect to that.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, I understand there are two of them, and one of the five I will call to his attention is a chaplain, and so the question of going into employment in a munition factory could not lie against him. Mr. STAFFORD. How many of these retired officers are at the present time performing service for private munition factories and at the same time accepting pay as retired officers?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I understand that there are two of them. These men are not known to me personally. I have found out, however, that none of the five men expected or wanted to take advantage of this act except Col. Dixon.

Mr. STAFFORD. These other two find it more profitable to work for private concerns with their retired pay than to go back into the United States Army and perform work so pressingly needed by the Government?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will not deny that, but they retired under the law passed here in the last Congress.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman tell me who those three majors are?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will tell the gentleman from New Jersey. I just came into the Hall, and I have the list here.

Mr. BROWNING. I have been trying to find out.
Mr. MILLER of Delaware. There are three captains, Robert E. Wood of the Cavalry, Courtland Nixon of the Infantry, Frank O. Whitlock of the Cavalry; one major, Henry A. Brown, a chaplain; and one lieutenant colonel, Col. Dickson, in the Ordnance Arm.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CALDWELL. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.
Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. What distinguished service in connection with digging the Panama Canal did these men illustriously perform?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Under the act of March 4, 1915, these gentlemen and other gentlemen who wanted to take advantage of it had the right to retire.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I understand all of that, but those names were added after the bill left the House, and some of us have been wondering ever since they were added just what they had done to merit this distinction.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I differ with the gentleman. The Panama Canal act does not name any particular officer. It simply provides that officers who have served a certain length of time on the Panama Canal have the right to apply for retirement.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The bill as it passed the House limited the emolument to a very small number of people.

Mr. KAHN. Named in the bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes; and these others were added, and if I may be permitted to say so, to the lasting disgrace of the whole proposition, and if I could pass a law that could bring them back and subject them to some punishment for going out, I would do it.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. What did Congress pass an act for if it did not expect people to take advantage of its provi-

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. To be plain and frank with the gentleman, I have understood that it was at the earnest solicitation of these men that this act was going to benefit. I do not mean these particular men, but the group of individuals included in the provisions as it became a law-that those individuals were instrumental in at least asking for it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the proposition, it was this: At the time that the statute was passed permitting some of the Army officers to retire, to take advanage of the fact that they had done work at Panama, it was pointed out that every man who was down there, from the lieutenant on up,

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman permit an amendment—I would say that every man from a shoveler, or who worked a steam shovel, up.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman does not get my train of thought. All of the men who had been in executive positions had a position that was far above that which their relative rank in the ordinary branches of the Army would give them. In other words, their responsibilities were greater, and if they came back and went into the Regular Army service, it would be what was in the minds of the Army officers a "comedown." In other words, they have been for some years in very high positions and in coming back they would go down instead of up, as the service warranted. I was not a Member of Congress at that time, but Congress passed a bill that permitted these men who wanted to retire to do so. Now, in the particular case of Col. Dickson, who is the man we are trying to get back at this time and whom Gen. Crozier wants back because he has a place for him in some work that is necessary to be done and he does not know anybody else who can do it-

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why does not the gentleman bring in a bill to restore Col. Dickson and let us fight it out on its merits? Why does the gentleman want to get Col. Dickson back, and under cover of Col. Dickson open up the whole business, so that any man who has gone out of the service for his own benefit and perhaps for his own profit can come back under this blanket provision and be reappointed by the President on application?

Mr. CALDWELL. The War Department has asked that the bill be made broad enough to cover all these officers referred to in the report, which the gentleman now has a copy of before him, so they can be all gotten back, because they want all of those men if they can get them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The bill goes beyond these five officers mentioned in the report, a copy of which I have at last succeeded in getting. I understand some of them have been employed outside of the Government service at higher salaries than they would get in the service, and now they are very anxious to come back; and if they can come back under the provisions of this bill they will rank the men who have been faithful to the service while they have been gone looking after their own affairs. Now, will the gentleman—

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania—

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am asking why they bring in a blanket resolution instead of covering each individual case?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman will permit, these same men covered in this bill might still stay on the retired list at higher rank and pay than they would expect if they came in under the provisions of the act; so it is no direct monetary advantage to them or advantage in rank, but it is a sacrifice.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They are still attached to the service, still under pay?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. At present.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And therefore the gentleman thinks it is a good proposition to put them back in the service, so they will be doing something for what they are now paid, and no longer be on the retired list?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let me ask the gentleman whether it is a good proposition, a good business proposition, for the Government in time of stress, when the country needs trained men, just such men as these men are, to give over to the service of private corporations or to outside concerns their talent and ability? The gentleman does not answer.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I will answer the gentleman and then I will yield some time. I will say in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I shall oppose this bill unless the gentleman indicates the men who want to come back. are certain officers of the Army who have gone out of the service, and there may be good reasons why they should not come back.

Mr. CALDWELL. No; I will say to the gentleman from 'ennsylvania that as I understand the situation it is this: These Army officers were trained for the United States Army in the United States Military Academy-

Mr. SLAYDEN. The chaplain was not.
Mr. CALDWELL. Except the chaplain; they have had a training that was at least beneficial to them. Now, those men who went into a private munitions factory had a further training which are the men who in the mind of the War Department are extremely valuable to us now that we have embarked on getting now.

a scheme of making our own munitions. We need men who have had charge of commercial enterprises. We need men who have had just the kind of schooling and training these men have

Now, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California-

[Mr. KAHN]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, answering the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore], I desire to call his attention to one or two matters. In the first place when these gentlemen retired, their places were immediately filled and there were no vacancies then to which they could have been appointed if they had applied for reappointment. The nationaldefense act, which created a great number of additional offices in the Army, did not pass until June 3, 1916. It was thereafter that men began to apply for the positions which were created by that act. It was only after the passage of that act that these people could see their way clear to get appointments in the United States Army. Now, if they go back into active serv-ice and the Government gets the benefit of their talent and ability, they will only get as pay practically what they are drawing as retired officers because

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. No; they will go down a grade. Mr. KAHN. They get practically the pay and allowances of the grade lower than the one at which they retired; and thereif they are reappointed, they get about the same pay which they are getting now.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. KAHN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, if I read his mind aright, what is puzzling the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] is that you take gentlemen who have rendered distinguished service, if you please, and permit them, when it is to their advantage to do it, to go out of the Army and then reinstate them by creating additional commissioned officers. You did not mention in your statement the fact that it is not proposed to make additional commissioned officers.

Mr. KAHN. I meant to say that.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And continue employment in the commercial world as long as it suits them, and, when it is more agreeable and profitable to come back, and you permit them to do it, it may be-I will not say demoralizing to the military service, but something that squints in that direction.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. You are discriminating against everybody who has been faithful to the service and who is in line of promotion.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I know Col. Dickson very well. He is an excellent officer and gentleman and I think his services are valuable; but I do not think we are warranted in creating more offices to accommodate a chaplain, for example, who has gone out to his own advantage and who is getting paid as a retired officer.

Mr. KAHN. I am not pleading the cause of the other officers particularly, but I say that what the gentleman states may be correct and this bill may create some dissatisfaction. Still, at the present time the War Department is exceedingly anxious to get officers who know their business to fill the vacancies that even in the commissioned forces of the Army have been created by the passage of the national-defense act.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Are there any vacancies to which these gentlemen can go?

Mr. KAHN. There are, I think.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Why do you propose to create five additional vacancies, then?

Mr. KAHN. Probably in these higher grades there are no There are vacancies in the lower grades, I know.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does the gentleman from California agree with the gentleman in charge of the bill that the principal object of this bill is to get Col. Dickson back into the service?

Mr. KAHN. Yes

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Also the claim is made that if he is going into the service he is going back one rank lower than he held when he went out.

Mr. KAHN. One rank lower than he was retired at. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Permit me to read:

Provided, That such officer shall be transferred to the rank and place on the active list which he would have had if he had not been retired, shall be carried as an additional number in the grade to which he may be transferred or at any time thereafter promoted, and shall be promoted on the same date as the officer next above him in rank, and shall be commissioned in the arm or department of the Army from which he was retired.

Now, that puts him over the head of other officers.

Mr. KAHN. He would then get about the very pay he is

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The point is, as I understand it, the War Department, referring to the statement of the gentleman from California [Mr. Kahn], is anxious to get Col. Dickson back into the service. The minute he is commissioned lieutenant colonel the War Department can next commission him a colonel or a brigadier general or a major general.

Mr. KAHN. I do not think so. Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Has it not been done?

Mr. KAHN. If there happened to be vacancies in the higher grades.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That can be provided for. So that the proposition of the sacrifice on the part of the colonel is somewhat problematical, is it not, in coming back into the service? Is it not a fact?

Mr. CALDWELL. It is not so, for this reason: That if he goes back as lieutenant colonel, he would not be a brigadier general or anything else.

Mr. KAHN. They can advance him as vacancies in the higher grades occur. That is the only way they can advance anybody. The Chief of Ordnance, Gen. Crozier, appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs and stated it was exceedingly desirable to get Col. Dickson back into the service, inasmuch as he was a valuable man.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. In a moment. And Gen, Crozier stated he went out of the service under extraordinary circumstances; that his wife at the time he resigned was very ill and that he could not give her that care and attention he desired to give her so long as he continued in the service; that subsequently his wife died; that the obligation to look after her was removed, and from that time on he tried to get back again into the service. That is the statement, as I remember it, that Gen. Crozier made to our committee.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore]. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have an understanding that Gen. Crozier desired the return of Col. Dickson, but I am at a loss to know why, when the committee is endeavoring to oblige the Ordnance Bureau by restoring Col. Dickson, it brings in four others, who may or may not be of special service to the department at this time and the introduction of whom means the presentation here of a general law that will admit anybody to restoration to duty.

Mr. KAHN. I think that only five retired as the result of the passage of the Panama Canal law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would the gentleman be satisfied with an amendment to this bill providing for the restoration of Col. Dickson?

Mr. KAHN. So far as I am concerned, I would be satisfied. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And cutting out the blanket clause of this measure?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I suggest this to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CALDWELL. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I wanted to follow the continuity of this.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not want all of that. The terms of the act permit the application of its provisions to such officers as come under the language-

To transfer to such active list of the Army any officer under 50 years of age who may have been transferred heretofore from the active list to the retired list of the Army under the act to provide for recognizing the services of certain officers of the Army, Navy, and Public Health Service for their services in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal—

And so forth.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Certainly.
Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman proceeding in my time or not?
The CHAIRMAN. No. The gentleman from New York yielded to him. Now he yields to you.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will not take any more time

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, this is the bill which I discussed at some length when it was on the Unanimous Consent Calendar on the 15th of January of this year.

in this matter; suffice to say I am interested in it purely from the standpoint of merited legislation. I would like to have the attention of gentlemen on the floor who seem to be opposed to this bill, and if my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] will bear with me for a moment I hope to be able to clear up several points that I see he has in his mind.

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] just read to the gentleman from Pennsylvania an extract from the Panama Canal act. That act was passed on the 4th of March, 1915, by Congress and became a law, and under that act certain officers in the Army had a right to apply for retirement. If the principle was wrong, the act was wrong at the time it was passed; but under that act five men applied for retirement and were retired. Only five men, as I understand it, have been affected and have retired under the Panama Canal act.

Mr. MANN. For what reason were they retired?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, without reading the whole act, that-

Mr. MANN. The Panama Canal act does not authorize retirement.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. These men were retired under the Panama Canal act.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; not at all. They were retired under the law relating to retirements. The Panama Canal act only provided that when retired they should be retired at one grade higher. That is all.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. The bill says in substance, For recognizing the services of certain officers of the Army and Navy," and so forth, "for their services in connection with the Panama Canal." That was the act under which these men were retired two years ago.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about that. Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will admit what the gentleman says, so that I can go ahead, but I do not want to be made to appear that I am making any misstatements here in order to mislead anybody.

Mr. MANN. There is no misstatement. There is simply a misunderstanding. The Panama Canal act only provided that when retired, officers should be retired one grade higher. I have the act before me.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I thank the gentleman for bringing out that point. These officers took advantage of that act, and they were retired. There were five of them. Their names are given in the report. One of these men was a very valuable man in the Ordnance Department, Col. Dickson. When I asked him specifically why he had retired from the service he stated to me that on account of the illness of his wife, on the Panama Canal Zone, it was necessary for him, if he did his duty by his wife, to leave the Army at that time, which he did, under the act of March 4, 1915. Subsequently his helpmeet failed to recover from her illness and died. About that time certain factories in this country were in need of trained help. The man was out of the Army. A contract was made with him, but later on it was found—although not due to any inability on his part—that the contract was such that he did not care to continue with it. That is the case of Col. Dickson; and for the last few months he has been utilized by the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance at various arsenals throughout the country

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will be glad to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know whether Col. Dickson appeared before the committee?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I can not say, because I am not a member of that committee; but I see the gentleman from California [Mr. Kahn] shakes his head.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know whether Col. Dickson's story has been told officially before any committee of this House?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I can not answer that; but I understand from the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] that he did not appear.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will permit me, Gen. Crozier did appear before the Committee on Military Affairs and made a statement concerning the services of Col. Dickson.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask if these five officers appeared before the committee, or if Gen. Crozier spoke for

Mr. KAHN. Gen. Crozier spoke for them all.
Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Yes; I yield.
Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that most of the Members are concerned with the reasons why these men got out, but we are concerned with this basic question as to why I will not enter into the details as to why I am interested | they are permitted to come in on the same terms as if they had stayed in, because that, to my mind, is a gross injustice to those who are in the service and puts a premium upon the action of men going out of the service and then coming back.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I find that only one of them will take advantage of the act. That is Col. Dickson. The Bureau of Ordnance is asking for him in no uncertain terms.

Mr. SHERLEY. I know the Bureau of Ordnance needs men, I have tried to give them additional men as much, perhaps, as any other man in the House; but, for the sake of a particular bureau, we can not afford to disregard a fundamental rule of equity. Here are men who go out of the service voluntarily. Now, they are permitted to come back with the same rank as Here are men who go out of the service voluntarily. if they had continuously stayed in the service. I submit gentlemen that that is not fair to the other men who do stay. I submit to

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I really think that the members of the Committee on Military Affairs, who reported the bill out, are better versed as to that point than I am, and they can answer the gentleman. I want to proceed to other points. One of these men will draw down $3,750 as retired pay from the Government every year of his life.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Delaware has expired.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Coming back to the active list, he will draw as lieutenant colonel, as I understand it, $4,500, and he has 16 years yet to serve. Looking at it from a purely business standpoint, is it not good business for us to let this man come back when the bureau wants him, when he will draw down $3,750 for the next 16 years and not be rendering the Government his service; and if we will take him back he will, of course, draw $4,500 as a lieutenant colonel and $5,000 as colonel, should he reach that rank?

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Yes.
Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman feel that these men, as suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley], if they are put on the active list, should be allowed to take the place of the men who have remained in the service, or should they take their place at the bottom of the list?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will say to the gentleman that this bill is reported from his own committee, the Committee on Military Affairs, and I am willing to follow the bill that they have reported out.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to say to the gentleman from Delaware that I am not in favor of that proposition.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. What salary is this gentleman drawing now, and is he employed outside of the service of the Government?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. He gets his retired pay. Mr. SNYDER. I thought the gentleman said he was employed by another concern outside.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. He is working at the Watertown

Arsenal now.

Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore], without giving names, that under no circumstances, even under the widest interpretation of the proposed act, could a certain gentleman more or less connected in the past with Philadelphia affairs ever come back to the Army.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit me to say, it is not a personal matter with me. You are offering legislation so broad that you encourage men to leave the service, with the expectation that they can come back and rank the others who have remained faithful to the service.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. It only applies to men retired under the act of March 4, 1915. A question has been raised here about these other four men.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. As I understood the gentleman from Illinois, he states that these men were not retired under that act, but under the act under which every officer retires

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. No; the gentleman from Illinois was calling attention to a misunderstanding that I may have created by referring to the act in my opening remarks. I would like to yield further, but I have not much time left.

One of these men was a chaplain, so he could not be considered as a man going out to work for certain factories and then coming back again. One of these men was Frank O. Whitlock, to whom I happened to be introduced at one time, and I remembered his name when I saw it in the report. I wrote him a letter and asked him what he intended to do about this legislation, and I have a letter from him saying that as far as Goethals, Dr. Gorgas, Col. Hodges, Col. Seibert, and Commander he is concerned, he does not want to take advantage of the Rousseau, all of whom were on the Isthmian Canal Commission act, that he does not want to come back. I merely state that so as to dispose of one other man.

Mr. SLAYDEN. He is barred by age anyway.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. No. I submit to you that if this act does bring back only one man, Col. Dickson, he is coming back perhaps even more valuable than he went out, because what experience he has will certainly accrue to the benefit of the Government, and to-day he is being used by the Government at the Watertown Arsenal, and formerly at the Watervliet Arsenal in New York. I sincerely hope that the suspicion aroused by this bill will not be such as to defeat it, because I think a good many of the points raised by our colleagues on the floor to-day have been disposed of by the debate that has ensued. Mr. Chairman, as I went into other details of this bill during the debate on January 15, 1917, I will yield at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CALDWELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I am quite willing to say that I agree with the general proposition that no special legislation should be designed or calculated to permit officers of the United States Army to go in and out of the Government service at pleasure, try experiments in commercial and industrial life outside, and then, possibly being disappointed in their expectations, to come back to the service without loss of rank. However, I favor the general proposition that the Secretary of War should be authorized by some legislation to return to active service certain men who are acknowledged experts in the Ordnance Department, and whose services at this time would be of particular value to the Government, more especially if desire is expressed by those men to relinquish any possibilities of outside emoluments in addition to the pay they would be receiving all the time on the retired list without making any effort to earn it, and to come back into the service and earn pay, and only to receive the pay that they do earn.

Mr. SNYDER. Why can not these gentlemen go back into

Mr. SNIDER. Why can not these gentlemen go back into the service through the Officers' Reserve Corps?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They would not go back to the status that they have as officers of the regular service.

Mr. SNYDER. They would go back with some status, and would go into the service.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They would lose their status for retirement.

Mr. SNYDER. I only asked for information,

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They also lose their right to promotion, do they not?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is always implied. It seems to me the objections that have been presented here by some gentlemen on the floor in this discussion might be met if the bill were amended, on page 2, line 3, by striking out the words "would have" and the further words "if he had not been," and the words "when he was" inserted in the proper place, so that the line as amended would read:

He had when he was retired-

And the entire proviso would read:

Provided, That such officer shall be transferred to the rank and place on the active list which he had when he was retired—

And so forth.

Mr. CALDWELL. If the gentleman will yield, we are going to offer an amendment in almost those words when we get to that point in the bill.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is another happy illustration of the fact that great minds often run in the same channel.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized in opposition to the bill for one hour.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] so much time as he desires.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I served for a good many years on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which had legislative jurisdiction over the Panama Canal. I served with the very distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], now the chairman of that committee. I made the first proposition which was made to give to Col. Goethals advancement in rank because of his services on the Panama Canal, my idea being to give a distinction to the head of that service for doing a great work in time of peace, such as has usually been accorded by nations to officers at the head of the service for great distinction in time of war. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Adamson] finally introduced a bill—he may have introduced one before, but he introduced a bill in the Sixty-second Congress—providing that the thanks of Congress be extended to Col. Goethals, Dr. Gorgas, Col. Hodges, Col. Seibert, and Commander and at the head of various divisions of work on the Panama Canal, except Col. Goethals, who was at the head of the whole service. That bill provided for the promotion by the President of Gen. Goethals and Gen. Gorgas, and provided further that upon retirement the officers named should be advanced one grade in rank. That is the way the bill passed the House. It went to the Senate, and, without any consideration having been given it by the House, some hogs in the Army said that they would oppose, and did oppose, the passage of that bill in the Senate unless they were given preference and an increase in grade and the right to immediate retirement. The Senate put this section in the bill:

That such officers of the Army and Navy as were detailed for duty with the Isthmian Canal Commission on the Isthmus of Panama for more than three years, and who shall not have been advanced in rank by any other provision of this bill, shall be advanced one grade in rank upon

And then a provision for the advancement of any officer then on the retired list with similar service; and they added this section:

That at any time after the passage of this act any officer of the Army or Navy to be benefited by the provisions of this act may, on his own application, be retired by the President at 75 per centum of the pay of the rank upon which he is retired.

That bill came back to the House with this amendment in it. There was no one in the House who believed that these were proper provisions. There was no one in the House who liked to be held up, but the Army is a great institution, and it has a great many direct and indirect methods of influencing legislation. In discussing the matter among various Members of Congress who were interested in it, among others, I decided to yield to the hold-up in order to give the recognition which Col. Goethals had earned in behalf of the whole Army and Navy; to yield and give some of the little fellows what they were holding us up The House agreed to the Senate amendment. These men immediately made application for retirement, including a chaplain, who probably did not find it any harder to pray on the Isthmus of Panama than he would have to pray in the United

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman state what is the date of the approval of the act he has mentioned?

Mr. MANN. March 4, 1915. It was enacted, I think, or the House agreed to the Senate amendments on the last night of the session. There was no chance for anything except to yield to the holdup, or else refuse the earned recognition in behalf of the whole Army and the whole United States by Gen. Goethals and his colleagues on the Canal Commission.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman assert it as a fact that all the men covered by this bill were retired at their own request under the provisions of the law he has just read?

Mr. MANN. I do not; but I am very sure of one thing-that they either were retired at their own request, or else they were retired because of physical or mental incapacity. If they were retired for physical or mental incapacity I take it that there is no disposition to reinstate them; if they were not, they were retired at their own request under the provisions of the law which were put in as a holdup.

Mr. McKENZIE. I simply wanted to bring out the point that if they were retired at their own request the bill ought to be

Mr. MANN. Now, Col. Dickson went into the employ of somebody connected with the manufacture of arms, ammunition, or powder, and he is a very capable officer. It was a loss to the Government when he retired. He was, I believe, a lieutenant colonel and retired on the three-quarters pay of a colonel, which he is now receiving and is entitled to receive as long as he lives. He has been recently engaged by the Government, under Gen. Crozier, who needs his services. It would be well if the Government had his services, and yet I do not think the Government is dependent upon any one man in the world for its continuation or for its necessary use. Col. Dickson is an able man.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I do not know whether the gen-tleman was on the floor a few minutes ago when I made the statement-Mr. MANN. I was on the floor when the gentleman was speaking.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. When I made the statement that the health of Col. Dickson's wife was largely instrumental in his leaving Panama.

Mr. MANN. I have heard so many stories and always take them with many grains of allowance. A man comes to Washington, like the gentleman from Delaware or myself, and once in a while he says, "I never have good health in Washington"- after a while; we all have ailments as we go along, and people who charge a particular locality with their ailments usually commence with a nervous complaint, and they charge it to the climate.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. The gentleman will admit that the greatest mortality in Washington is among the political deaths rather than physical deaths. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Yes; I will say, though, that the mortality on the Isthmus of Panama among the people who are sent there is smaller than it is in any large community in the United States. I do not think, however, that that is a fair criterion. I am not trying to tell the House whether they ought to pass or defeat this bill. I wanted to make a statement of the history of the matter. The question is whether we shall, after we let a man get a provision in a bill for his own benefit, of which he has taken advantage, take him back just because he wants to come back or because we can make a profitable use of his services.

Mr. ADAMSON. I hope it will not divert the gentleman from his line of argument. He is probably entirely familiar with what I am going to call to his attention, and that is that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has reported and has on the calendar a bill to repeal all of the mischief done by that Senate amendment to which the gentleman so fittingly alluded a few minutes ago, and if recognition is ever obtained, the committee desires to try and pass that bill not only on account of the inherent mischief which the amendment itself does but on account of the resulting mischief. The civil employees upon the Isthmus have put up the plea that because this special benefit was conferred on a few of these medical and Army officers therefore all of the thousands of employees who have been on the Isthmus ought also to have a large bonus, and their only argument is this ungodly amendment which was put on here in the hour of our extremity when Congress was about to adjourn without a quorum.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to discuss the bill that the gentleman refers to. I think I understand the measure, but I do not understand how these people would be affected if we should repeal the provision of law under which they retired. An act is an act when it is passed, and you may repeal all of the laws of the world, but you can not change what was done yesterday.

Mr. ADAMSON. Their argument is that because Congress made one mistake it ought to make another one.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman's provision repeals the provision under which these people were retired. There will be no authority of law for their retirement, but they are retired. I do not know whether that would reinstate them, but I apprehend it would not. It is up to the House.

Mr. ADAMSON. If they have already been retired, of course

it could not affect them in their rights already vested

it could not affect them in their rights already vested.

Mr. MANN. We could affect them, certainly. This bill is for that very purpose. Here is the proposition, after all: Whenever an Army or a Navy runs along for any time it becomes inclined to be top-heavy. Because there are fewer deaths, fewer resignations, men at the top remain there, and men below get no chance for promotion. We do not pay high salaries to lieutenants or captains in the Army. We do endeavor to provide so that when they reach the age of retirement. to provide so that when they reach the age of retirement, they will have enough to live on economically and comfortably during the balance of their lives, and the incentive, the great incentive, to men to remain in the Army is the possibility of reaching a higher grade upon which they may eventually be retired. Of course, every officer in the Army hopes that he is going to be retired as a brigadier general. They all know that if they remain in the Army, and there are enough vacancies above them, they will be retired as colonels, but there must be enough vacancies above them. They would like to get rid of some of the officers in the higher grades from time to time, and for that reason it is always a little dangerous to put back in the Army men who are already upon the retired list and put them in the higher rank which will prevent some man who has remained in the service from reaching that rank at all.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman realizes that the national-defense act passed at the last session provided that any officer who retired for disability on having the disability removed can get back into the service?

Mr. MANN. I do.

Mr. CALDWELL. These men retired not for disability, but as a favor. Why should not they come back into the service if the other men should come back?

Mr. MANN. For years we had refused to pass any such legislation; for years we had refused to permit men who were retired charges his ill health to the climate. Bless our souls, we all die | for any purpose to come back into the Army. When the national-defense act was before the House with a large increase in the enlisted force of the Army and the number of regiments, and with a very large number of applications for men upon the retired list to get back by personal favoritism, private bills, I said to the gentleman from Virginia in charge of the nationaldefense act, publicly, privately, and other gentlemen did the same thing, that if he would give to the Army the general authority to reinstate these men we would not be opposed, because at that time there was such an increase in the number of regiments that they might absorb these men without doing great injustice to the other men who had remained in the service. But these people were retired involuntarily. It is barely possible, it is quite possible, they might absorb these men in view of the increase in the service; but this is distinctly entering upon a policy of reinstating a man who has voluntarily retired at his own solicitation, through his own work in obtaining the law under which he could be retired, and putting him back into the service where he may and probably will prevent some man from being promoted who has remained in the service all of the time. I say this is distinctly entering upon that policy, and you can not say to-day that you will do one thing for one man and to-morrow, under the same circumstances, say that you will not do it for another.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does the gentleman know that the amendment permitting these retired officers to be returned at the approval of the Secretary of War was very much widened by the amendment in the conference committee? As it passed the House, it fixed an age limit of 50 years, with considerable restrictions around it. As the bill is now a law, it has opened the door to the restoration of retired officers of any age.

Mr. MANN. Of what bill is the gentleman talking?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The particular amendment to which the gentleman just referred.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the national-defense act.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes. The conference committee removed the restriction of the limit of 50 years, and some have been put on the active list who were beyond the age of retirement.

Mr. MANN. Well, it is unescapable. You always have to pay some attention to the chance of promotion of men who go into Government service. You have got to do that. The mere amount of money that is paid to one man on the retired list is not very much compared with the advisability of giving men to understand they have a chance of promotion.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will. Mr. LONGWORTH. This bill now provides that he shall be returned to the same rank, and also that he shall be promoted on the same date as the officer next above him. Is not that an unusual practice?

Mr. MANN. No; that is usual.

Mr. CALDWELL. There is an amendment pending to change

That is the usual provision.

Mr. CALDWELL. We propose to amend this bill by providing that if they go back they go into the same grade as when they went out.

Mr. MANN. This bill does more than that. Having given a man one bite of a cherry, and having bitten the cherry and swallowed it, the proposition now is to give him a new cherry, give him another cherry, and let him retire at a rank in advance of the one he then holds.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I do not want to take all the time.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am quite in accord with the principle of equity to be followed which the gentleman has stated as to other officers; but does not the gentleman think the mistake was made in drawing this act in its general terms when it is really meant only to apply to Col. Dickson? The five other names mentioned were suggested in the report as names of men who could take advantage of it.

Mr. MANN. I will not say it is a mistake in view of the uniform practice of "the gentleman from Illinois" to object to these private bills to retire men in the Army and Navy

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Referring to what the gentleman from Illinois has said, I think it should be said in fairness that there is a specific provision which says they can not take advantage again of the Panama retirement act.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I thought from what the gentleman said a moment ago it is more or less understood that these gentlemen might again, if they were taken back, come in under the Panama Canal act.

Mr. MANN. They will be if they live long enough. Mr. MILLER of Delaware. The bill says specifically—

Mr. MANN. I know what the bill says. Mr. MILLER of Delaware. May I read it?

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. It is in the Senate amendment. Mr. MANN. It is all very well, but the bill expressly provides "any officer transferred to the active list under this act shall not again be entitled to the benefits of the Panama Canal act described above except—except "—the gentleman did not read that.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Mr. MANN. "Except when retired for age or physical disability incurred in the line of duty," and when they are retired again they are retired at the rank above the rank which they have. That is what I said.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. If they have a physical disability, they would not stay in the Army, but they would be retired automatically.

Mr. MANN. Certainly they could not be retired a second time on their own application. In this law it requires that when they are retired they will get the benefit of the Panama Canal they are retired they will get the benefit of the Panama Canal act, giving retirement at a higher grade than they held in the service.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.
Mr. McKENZIE. Under this bill, take the case of Col. Dickson. He is retired as a colonel; he was a lieutenant colonel and retired as a colonel. Now, if we pass this bill, we take him back in the service with the rank of lieutenant colonel. Suppose he serves five years and has the rank of colonel? Can he then, after receiving rank of colonel, voluntarily again retire with the rank of the next above rank?

Mr. MANN. He can not retire upon his own application at all.

Mr. McKENZIE. A second time?

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. McKENZIE. He did the first time.

Mr. MANN. He did the first time.

Mr. McKENZIE. But he can not the second time?

Mr. MANN. And if he is retired for physical disability, he is retired under existing law, not the Panama Canal act; if he reached the rank of colonel, he would be retired as a brigadier

Mr. McKENZIE. I asked the question in order to bring that

Mr. PLATT. If he is carried as an additional number in the grade to which he may be transferred; but that does not interfere with the promotion of other officers, does it?

Mr. MANN. No; and, as far as Col. Dickson is concerned.

I do not think his reinstatement would affect that situation at He is now getting the retired pay of a colonel. He could not be advanced beyond the rank of colonel if he went back into the service unless he was put at the head, which is not likely he would be. I yield back to the gentleman from Pennsylvania the remainder of the time, so he will not lose the time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Just how are we proceeding? Does the gentleman-

Mr. CALDWELL. I have used 45 minutes of my time. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are we proceeding alter-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has used

50 minutes Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman want to conclude now Mr. CALDWELL. No; I want to give the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slayden] five minutes and then reserve five minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I shall try not to use all of the time granted to me. It gratified me as a citizen of the same State that Col. Dickson comes from to hear this tribute—and well-deserved tribute-to his capabilities as an officer of distinction formerly, at least, in one of the scientific branches of the military service. Col. Dickson is an extremely valuable man to the Government, and I think the wise thing to do would be to authorize his restoration to the Army without incorporating it, without hiding it, in this bill, which is a bad bill in some respects.

Now, the chaplain is barred, I take it, by age. He can not be restored; but other gentlemen can be. I do not know them.

They may be men of unusual ability; but, so far as I have been able to gather from this debate, there are no special requests from the Ordnance Bureau or any other branch of the Government that they shall be restored to the active list.

There are two or three things in the bill that I do not like. In fact, the only part I do like is the possibility of getting Col. Dickson's services for the Government again, not because he is a Texan, permit me to say, but because I think he is an unusually capable man for the military service. But some of this language has not been explained satisfactorily; we have no definite information as to what rank these gentlemen would have if they went back. It proposes to transfer them to the rank and place on the active list which they would have had had they not been retired. Now, it is possible that since their retirement there may have been such rapid promotion in the military service that these gentlemen would occupy a very much higher rank. The Army has been increased. Promotions have been provided for, and many vacancies created by law. And it is entirely possible that they might go back into a rank even as high as the rank of colonel. That ought not to be so. There ought to be a specific, definite statement about that, and I do not see why so small a matter can not be ascertained by a five-minute telephonic conversation with The Adjutant General. This information that office has accessible at all times, and, of course, each one of these gentlemen himself knows. He has a memorandum in his hand, his head, or his pocket by which he can tell you precisely the rank which he would receive if restored to the Army under the terms of this act.

And then it also provides in the last lines, the ones in italics, in the bill H. R. 17424, that he shall not again be entitled to the benefits of the Panama Canal act described above—that is, shall not again have the privilege of retiring at an advanced rank except when retired for age or for physical disability incurred in the line of duty. Now, if they live to be 64 years of age, it is certain they will all retire, and it is possible they will be retired for physical disabilities before that. I think the bill ought to be amended in two or three particulars, and I think it should be radically amended and provide for the reinstatement of Col.

Dickson and stop there.

Mr. PLATT. What is the significance of the words in line 2 on page 2? Does that mean that he would go back to the same line and number

Mr. SLAYDEN. That he would have had if he had continued in the service.

Mr. PLATT. It seems to me it is wrong to put in the same number of the service. That ought to be stricken out. It is all right as to the same rank.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from New York want to go on?

Mr. CALDWELL. You take your time now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, when this bill came up on the unanimous-consent call I objected to it. It seemed to me it was a bill that ought to have more careful consideration than it could receive in a call of that kind. It was not such a bill as ought to have been passed without consideration. My judgment then has been confirmed by what has taken place this afternoon. The members of the committee themselves are not very well informed on this bill. Apparently they have not dug into the facts at all.

The gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MILLER], who has considerable information about one or two of the persons to be benefited by this act, has given some details with respect to those persons, but not one of them has appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs, which reported this bill, and the Committee on Military Affairs apparently has little or no information except as it has had a suggestion from Gen. Crozier, the efficient Chief of Ordnance.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. On December 4, 1916, the Secretary of War wrote a long letter to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs advocating the passage of the bill, and I inserted it in my remarks on the bill in the RECORD of

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Secretary of War wrote a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, which is incorporated in the report on H. R. 17424, which is not a very long letter—

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. This is a subsequent letter, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania (continuing). And which goes into no details whatever with respect to these men.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will be very glad to show the letter to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am going to give the gentleman a chance to answer some questions.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. All right.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And if he can throw any light on this subject, I would be very glad to have him do it. In the first place, it is questionable whether Congress should so legislate that after caring for the education and the military training of certain of its young men, affording them excellent positions and relieving them from service on three-fourths pay, we should take them back into the service again without respect to the prior claims of men similarly educated who have been faithful to the tasks assigned to them and who have been looking forward to a promotion which might be denied them if this bill giving preference to those who have gone outside is passed.

There is one thing that a young officer of the Navy looks forward to, and that is the day when he may be called a rear admiral; and as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has indicated, there is one thing that the young officer of the Army looks forward to, and that is that he may some day be retired as a brigadier general. This bill prevents, or would tend to prevent, the very laudable ambition of many meritorious and efficient officers of the Army from ever having the distinction to which their faithful service to the Government would entitle them.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, is it not a fact that the retirement of these men automatically accelerated the promotion of the men beneath them to the amount of the number of men, and that these men being allowed to go back into the service would not change the original position of the men whose promotions were accelerated one whit by their retirement?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Those men who have gone out of the service, if this bill be passed, are to come back to the rank and place on the active list which they would have had

if they had not been retired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Not "would have had."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That they "would have had"

if they had not been retired.

Mr. CALDWELL. If the gentleman will permit, I stated twice to the gentleman that the committee has intended to offer an amendment which would change that. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But I am stating what the committee has actually done, coming before this House with this bill, which as it stands will give these officers a place of advantage over those who remained in the service.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Certainly. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this is a Senate bill that we are discussing, not a bill prepared by the House committee or a member of it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman if the Committee on Military Affairs, which reported this Senate bill and which calls it up to-day, has taken the trouble to bring before it any of the particular individuals that are to be affected by this bill?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not understand that any private individuals except Col. Dickson are affected by it at their own request. The report shows the men to whom it might automatically apply.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Here is a report of the Committee on Military Affairs, brought in by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL], dated August 18, 1916, which states that "this bill will apply to the following officers," and five officers are named.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Were these five officers called before the committee?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They were not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is a fair answer to my question, and it shows that the committee has not called these men before the committee.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Let me suggest to the gentleman the fact that if they had been called before the committee, certain gentleman here might be saying that they were pushing their own selfish ends. But the fact that they did not come before the committee shows that it is the department which is pressing a well-merited bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It may be that it would have been selfish if they had come forward and asked to be restored to the rank from which they voluntarily retired on three-fourths pay, but I would ask the gentleman this question: If the expressed preference on this floor now in behalf of Col. Dickson's request for restoration would not suggest that Col. Dickson, or these four men who would be equally affected with Col. Dickson, ought not to have suggested the propriety of their being called before the committee so that the facts of the matter could have been ascertained? It has been stated that this bill ought to pass in the interest of Col. Dickson, but not in the interest of the four other men. If that is the fact, where does the committee stand if it was not duly informed as to the merits of the

Mr. CALDWELL. I will answer the gentleman's question. This bill was reported out because the War Department wanted Gen. Crozier was asked about this at the hearings had before the committee, and he specifically took the position that he was backing this, not at the request of Col. Dickson, but for the benefit of the War Department, which was in need of the services of these men. He said he had seen Col. Dickson and he was sure Col. Dickson would take advantage of this legislation if it were enacted, and he not only needs Col. Dickson but needs these other officers who have had this kind of

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, I will ask the gentleman a few questions that I expected to ask the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MILLER]. If Gen. Crozier has laid all necessary information before the committee, why does it not appear in the report of the committee? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] stated that this provision for the retirement of these officers who happened to have a sort of preferred service on the Panama Canal-but a service which was highly honorable and for which I commend them-this act giving them this special privilege of retirement was rushed through at the instance of another body in a crisis just ahead of the adjournment of Congress, and that perhaps it would not have passed if there had been a fair discussion of the subject on the floor, because the House is not inclined to rush men into retirement when they are in rattling good health and in splendid condition to render service to the Government. It has been questioned whether the House would put these men on the retired list in order to enable them to take other jobs and make good money while still paid by the Government for doing nothing.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.
Mr. McKENZIE. It has been intimated in this discussion that Col. Dickson has been in the employ of certain munition manufacturers of this country. Can the gentleman tell us by whom he was employed?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is what I am going to try

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is what I am going to try to find out. I will ask the gentleman from Delaware or the gentleman from New York that question.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If the gentleman will permit, I will say he has been employed by the Remington Arms Co.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from Delaware confirm that statement?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I do; and if the gentleman will give me a moment, I want to say—

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Delaware, substantiating the statement of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], has stated that the officer here concerned, Col. Dickson, who was retired on three-fourths pay after serving on the Panama Canal, accepted employment with the Remington Arms Co., which is manufacturing munitions of war.

Will the gentleman state what salary Col. Dickson received while he was in this special employment?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman let me answer that?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Surely. Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I want to say that in my remarks on the bill a little while ago I made it plain that Col. Dickson took advantage of this retirement act at the time his wife's health was in such a state that he had to choose between his duty to his wife and his service to the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I heard the gentleman say that about Col. Dickson's wife, and I sympathize with him, and, of course, raise no question as to Col. Dickson's personal bereavement; but the gentleman does not say whether Col. Dickson received $1,000 per annum or $15,000 per annum for the service he rendered to the Remington Arms Co. while he was on the retired list of the Government.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. He took advantage of this retirement act before a job was offered him by the Remington Arms

Co., and he did it on account of his wife.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will not press the gentleman as to that, because I do not want to pry into Col. Dickson's personal affairs

Mr. CALDWELL. As an evidence of what Col. Dickson's services were worth in private life, I will say that he was offered a contract to go to Russia to establish a munitions plant against the United States in other foreign lands. It is a grave such as we are about to establish, and they offered him $25,000 a year, and he declined it, on the theory that he wanted to go back into the United States Army; and as far as his contract with the Remington Arms Co. is concerned, as I understand it, he has done practically no work there. The contract fell down, and they offered to give him other private employment, and he declined

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was Col. Dickson graduated at West Point?

Mr. CALDWELL. He was.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The United States Government educated him?

Mr. CALDWELL. It did.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And trained him to be the specialist that he is in this particular line of manufacture?

Mr. CALDWELL, Yes.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So that the Government had some claim on Col. Dickson?

Mr. CALDWELL. And he desires to recognize that claim. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Col. Dickson, I assume, is a patriot, and would stand by his country.

Mr. CALDWELL. And he wants now to go back and do service for his country at a smaller salary than he could obtain in private employement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well. that I have no objection to the return of Col. Dickson, but I am calling attention to a system which the case of Col. Dickson illustrates, and I think this is the time to call attention to it. Our country is in a crisis. Our country has been agitated upon the question of war for the past two and a half years, and during that agitation certain officers of the Government of the United States have left the service for which they were educated by the United States to take positions with the manufacturers of munitions who are making munitions of war to be shipped to some countries that may be our enemies. munitions of war have been going to countries with which we may have a conflict. At one time they went to a country with which we were supposed to have a conflict. They were shipped into Mexico, and yet they were being manufactured under the men trained by the United States Government.

Mr. CALDWELL. As I understand, this bill does not cover any such men.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well. This bill provides, and that is my objection to it, "that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer to the active list of the Army any officer under 50 years of age who may have been transferred," and so forth; so that you are giving to the President of the the United States authority to restore to the active list any officer who has seen fit to leave it.

Mr. CALDWELL. No; who has seen fit to leave it under the Panama Canal act.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Who has seen fit to leave it under the Panama Canal act. I grant you that.
Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. McKENZIE. It has been stated by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Shallenberger] that Col. Dickson was in the employ of the Remington Arms Co.

Mr. CALDWELL. He was.

Mr. McKENZIE. Can the gentleman from Pennsylvania tell me the name of the man who is at the head of the Remington Arms Co.?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not tell the gentleman the name of the man who is at the head of the Remington Arms Co.

Mr. McKENZIE. Perhaps the gentleman from Delaware

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I have no means of knowing. Possibly the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Tilson] might be able to answer it.

Mr. TILSON. It is not in my district.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desire the House, and particularly the Military Affairs Committee, to be advised that there are certain munitions plants-I will not name any-that are doing a thriving business just now, that are being operated under foreign contracts on a profit-percentage basis, and that the munitions thus being manufactured are not being used for the purposes of the United States, and that the officers of the United States who have left the service of the United States, to which we would expect them to be loyal, have gone in with gentlemen whose interests are foreign to the United States to manufacture munitions of war that might be used against the United States, as in the case of Mexico, or that might be used question in my mind whether we ought to encourage the boys who have not wanted to play with the other boys in the Army of the United States, but who have desired to go out and play with some other institutions, to come back and expect to be received as with the fatted calf. I am not speaking of Col. Dickson, who is so highly commended here; I am speaking

Mr. PLATT. It is precisely because Col. Dickson was employed by the Remington Arms Co. that his services are more valuable to Gen. Crozier now, is it not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has his theory

That is the truth.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I question whether ethically it is wise for a trained officer of the United States to leave the service and go into the employ of a concern that is manufacturing munitions for foreign purposes, which may be used against the United States. He may not be just as safe in his old job as if he had gone right along with the United States.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.
Mr. GORDON. Why does not the gentleman offer an amendment to the general retirement law? That has been the law for years, and the gentleman has been in the House for years. It is under that law that they are retired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvnia. I would rather leave that question to a constitutional lawyer, a man who follows the decisions of the Supreme Court and embellishes the RECORD with them so often, as does the gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter.]

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes

Mr. PLATT. Is it not true that the building up of munition plants, to which the gentleman refers, has done more for the preparedness of this country than all acts that we have passed?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That may be; it has put a great deal of money into the United States, this building of munition plants with foreign capital, but I have a theory that we have been buying a great many foreign bonds and are working over and over again the capital of the people of the United States, and when this war is over the prosperity that these munition plants are bringing to us now will put the workingman of the United States in the ditch. If the gentleman thinks the prosperity of the munition factories, temporarily erected for the purpose of perpetuating the foreign war, is good or lasting, that is his affair; but I do not believe in that kind of prosperity for general welfare. It costs too much.

The question is this, Should we permit a bill like this to pass without comment or should we say to our friends in the Army and in the Navy that this matter of slipping little riders into a bill on the other side of the Capitol shall be duly and properly observed when it reaches this side of the House?

The Panama Canal act provided for the retirement of certain officers who were assigned to work on the Panama Canal, and, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has very clearly elucidated, it was intended as a reward to officers doing a great civic service, just as we had been generous to officers in the military service. Advantage was taken of the generosity on this side of the House when this Senate provision slipped in; but to further illustrate, let us take the committee report:

Tracy C. Dickson, Ordnance Department, lieutenant colonel, retired after service on the Panama Canal with the rank of colonel.

That gives him the pay that the gentleman from Delaware referred to a little while ago, $3,750. That is as good as gold in the pocket of Col. Dickson, so long as the Government lasts and Col. Dickson lives. At what age was Col. Dickson retired? He was not an invalid, he was not enfeebled; we have heard that his wife was not well, with which we sympathize, but at what age was Col. Dickson retired in good health under the Panama Canal act? Forty-seven years. Retired after living out 47 years, after an education at West Point, after a fairly profitable service under the Government, and after honors had come to him by virtue of his service in constructing the canal. Was he incapacitated at 47? No; the statement of gentlemen on the floor is that after his Panama service closed he was able to give up his services, plus $3,750 which the Government paid him per annum, to the Remington Arms Co., by which he was employed at a salary not stated, although it is admitted on the floor that he was offered $25,000 per annum to engage his valuable services to the Russian Government,
Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes,

Mr. DENISON. Has the gentleman been able to learn what salary he received from the Remington Arms Co.?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; no one has stated. assume that his services were valuable. The Remington Arms l

Co. was grabbing up men right and left and making such inducements to the officers of the Army as would almost make their eyes bulge, but they were temporary inducements. Such inducements were offered to neighboring manufacturing establishments; every man worth anything was induced to leave his old employer and go into the manufacture of arms or ammuni-Why? Because they had the money. I do not know whether it was foreign money or American money, but I know that all over New England and all over the East many manufacturing establishments, particularly independent iron and steel plants, were almost disabled at times because of their inability to hold expert workmen and foremen, and under those conditions, of course, the Government of the United States with the best-trained Army officers, I hope, on earth, with the besttrained Navy officers, I hope, on earth, was a fruitful field for the munition makers. They needed these well-trained men and were obliged to pay high to get them.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman has no objection to a man already on the retired list accepting civil employment? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In certain instances, yes. I will illustrate in the case of Robert E. Wood, whom I do not know and against whom I have no particular criticism. He is one of the men named in this list to be given advantages of this act. Robert E. Wood, cavalry captain, retired with the rank of major, present age—not his age of retirement in 1915 but his present age at the time this bill was reported—37 years.

Will somebody kindly tell me what the compensation of this major of Cavalry was when he was retired at the age of 37 He had done service on the Panama Canal. It has been indicated that one of these captains had no desire to take advantage of this particular act to come back into the Government service; that he was satisfied to go along with the three-quarters pay vouchsafed to him. We educate these men at Annapolis and West Point, and we go to considerable trouble to get them there, and we are at great expense to maintain them there. Certainly the country is entitled to some return for the splendid service and ability they are capable of performing

Mr. CALDWELL. And yet the gentleman does not want them to come back into the service now when they want to come back

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to do something in line with the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] to prevent this sneaking in of riders to various bills in this House that give special privileges to some.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Permit me to suggest to the gentleman that that water has already run under the mill and the mill is torn down. That was in the last Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am using my time in this way so that it will be known that somebody is watching this situation. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Adamson] has already indicated that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has a bill which proposes to do away with some of this iniquity, I think he called it, that was slipped into it when the Panama act was passed. It may be that these five gentlemen will go through; it may be that they will get the benefits of this act. I do not object to them personally. We have given them the retirement privilege, and they are within their rights, but it may be that the system will become understood, and that eventually there may be something in the nature of an abridgment of existing conditions.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Then, the gentleman is talking for posterity

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman wants me to go into details, I will say that I was advised yesterday of a gentleman who was retired, not in this particular bill, but who gets, I think, three-quarters pay from the Government of the United States, which is in the nature of a pension far greater than that paid to any soldier who fought in the ranks, as the gentleman from Vermont well knows, and this particular gentleman occupies another position in the Government service of a political character, from which he draws about $2,500 or of a political character, from which he draws about $2,500 or $3,000 a year. He is a liberal spender and enjoys life. It may be all right, but I think we might say to the young men who enlist in the service of the United States at West Point or Annapolis that since Congress gives them assured compensation for life and guarantees them retirement compensation, they should be steadfast in the positions they are appointed to erve. This is fair to those who are looking for promotion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] seemed to be very much wrought up over the question which he could not get answered, as to how much Col. Dickson received as a salary from the Remington Arms peo-Perhaps Col. Dickson's own letter, written to Mr. MILLER of Delaware, will best answer the question. This letter is dated December 20, and in it he says:

As I told you, I spent my savings and got badly into debt in the effort to restore my wife's health-

By the way, it might be well to add that his wife, shortly after he was retired, died-

I refused two offers from munition companies, but later on, when desperate, I accepted an offer to design and erect a plant for the Remington Co. The plant was to have been erected for Great Britain. While negotiations were under way, I helped design and erect and start a plant at Bridgeport. About the date the Bridgeport plant was completed, Great Britain decided it would not erect the plant and refused to sign the contract. The Remington Co. was willing to assign me to other work, but I did not care for it, and decided to return to active duty if I could. I felt the company had acted in good faith, but had falled to get the contract on which it employed me to work, through no fault on its part. I most heartlly desired to return to the work I really love, so the company and I mutually agreed to annul my contract, and last September it was annulled. I therefore have had no contract or other connection with the Remington since last September. So far as I know, the Remington does not know that I am trying to return.

Apparently it seems his employment with the Remington Co. did not amount to anything at all. Respecting all of this muddle about bills that have been passed heretofore, and about which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] now seems to be very much exercised, I suggest that if the bill he now talks so much about was bad he ought to have fought it when it passed. He has not been addressing himself to this bill. This is a plain proposition. We may have been culpable or foolish or criminal in passing the law under which Col.

Dickson and some others resigned.

The proposition up to us now is this: Here is an able, valuable officer, capable of serving the United States in the present emergency-if it is an emergency-and the officers in charge of the military affairs and our preparations for defense want him for service and have asked for the passage of this bill. He is a man in splendid physical and mental health and splendidly equipped for serving our country now. His service is needed by the Government, and every man who wants this Government prepared to meet possible emergencies would be glad to have him back. He says: "Gentlemen tell you that I have all sorts of private contracts I could get at immense salaries-it was even intimated as high as $25,000 a year from Russia, to be supplemented with the retired pay-but I want to renounce anything of that kind, and I want to come back into actual service and help my country now, and its official people are asking me to come back. I do not ask anything more. My wife no longer lives, and I am able to serve my country and anxious to serve it." He wants to come back, and we want men who can serve; and for an hour and a half we have been fooling away here with arguments about other men and other things when the only question is, Is the House willing to take back a valuable servant who tenders his service to us at less pay than he could get elsewhere? If he comes back, he has got to go back somewhere where he can serve; and where will you put him? The proposition of the committee is to put him in where Well, it is intimated that a whole lot of officers under him might jealously object to his coming back into the service because it might lessen their chance of promotion. There is but one of him, and it might interfere in an infinitesimal degree with promotions. I apprehend the officers of the United States Army will not be found backing that objection, Not only that, but, as stated by Mr. Callaway, the truth is when he went out he increased their opportunity to rise and fill When he comes back they are relatively in the same position they would have been in had he stayed in. It is too much of a little thing to raise that objection if we need the man. Gen. Crozier says we need him, and I believe we do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Fields]

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I send an amendment to the Clerk's desk and ask unanimous consent that it may be read and considered as pending.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. It will be read for information.

Mr. MANN. It can not be; there is no time left; the time is all exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. No; there are five minutes.
Mr. CALDWELL. I have three minutes remaining.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I thought he

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's parton, I thought used all his time.

Mr. CALDWELL. No; I have three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FIELDS: Page 2, line 2, after the word "list," strike out "which he would have had if he had not been retired" and insert "next below the rank at which he was retired."

Mr. CALDWELL. I have two minutes remaining, and I yield those to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, so far as I know, the only case presented to the Committee on Military Affairs was the case of Col. Dickson, and I desire the Clerk to read, in my time, what Gen. Crozier said about the case of Col. Dickson.

The Clerk read as follows:

what Gen. Crozier sald about the case of Col. Dickson.

The Clerk read as follows:

With further reference to the case of Col. Dickson, which is before the committee, and concerning which there is a bill pending before Congress now, my understanding of that case is as follows, and I think it is correct; Col. Dickson, together with several other officers of the Army, served for a number of years in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal in the Panama Canal Zone. In recognition of their services Congress passed the act commonly known as the Panama Canal beneficiary act, which authorized the officers affected to retire from active service whenever they should wish to do so at an advance of one grade over that held by them in the Army at the date of their retirement. Col. Dickson took advantage of the special privilege accorded by the act.

My understanding of his reasons for doing so is that they were largely because of the health of his wife, which was not good and which was such that she needed more and better attention than he could give her while on the active list of the Army, either because of the limitations as to his pay or because of the limitations as to his pay or because of the limitations as to his pay or because of the makers of war material which had received large orders from Europe, and in connection with that I understand that he made a very advantageous contract for services, which still holds or which held until a short time ago—perhaps it may still hold. It was intended, I understand, to erect a factory, which he should be in charge of, but, either because of the nonreceipt of expected orders or for other reasons—I do not know what—the factory was not received. In the meantime Col. Dickson's wife died. Col. Dickson then became anxious to return to active duty in the Ordnance Department. In doing so I understand that he would make a considerable pecuniary sacrifice, but, having fewer demands upon his resources, he is willing to make the sacrifice because of his liking for active s

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, within one year of the approval of this act, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer, upon application, to the active list of the Army any officer under 50 years of age who may have been transferred heretofore from the active to the retired list of the Army under the act to provide for recognizing the services of certain officers of the Army, Navy, and Public Health Service for their services in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1915: Provided, That such officer shal be transferred to the rank and place on the active list which he would have had if he had not been retired, shall be carried as an additional number in the grade to which he may be transferred or at any time thereafter promoted, and shall be promoted on the same date as the officer next above him in rank, and shall be commissioned in the arm or department of the Army from which he was retired: Provided further, That such officer shall stand a satisfactory medical examination, and when promoted shall stand a satisfactory medical examination, and when promoted shall stand the medical and professional examinations provided for by law: And provided further, That any officer transferred to the active list under this act shall not again be entitled to the benefits of the Panama Canal act described above, except when retired for age or for physical disability incurred in the line of duty.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amend-

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. Page 2, line 3, after the first word "he," strike out the words "would have," and after the word "had" strike out the words "if he had not been," and in place of the last words stricken out insert the word "when," so that the line will read "when he had retired."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "he," where it occurs the first time, strike out the words "would have," and after the word "had" strike out the words "if he had not been" and insert in lieu thereof the word "when," so that the proviso, as amended, will read:

"Provided, That such officer shall be transferred to the rank and place on the active list which he had when retired, shall be carried as an additional number," etc

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know from some member of the Committee on Military Affairs who is thoroughly posted as to the rank and grade as to just what this means. The man when he was retired before as an officer had a certain rank. He had a certain place in that rank, sometimes referred to as the number.

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes; they call it a file.

Mr. MANN. A file number?

Mr. CALDWELL. A file number.

Mr. MANN. Sometimes referred to as the lineal rank?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Suppose it was No. 10 or No. 48 that he had. Now he goes back to that same number.

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes; as an extra number.

Mr. MANN. What becomes of the man who has got the number now?

Mr. CALDWELL. He keeps it; but he has it as an extra number, according to the place he had at the time he retired.

Mr. MANN. You say he goes back to the same place. Now, does he go back to the same number? If the two are contra-dictory, that is another thing. Do not let us have them contradictory. The amendment offered by the gentleman is that he goes back to the place on the active list that he had when retired. When I ask what that means, he says that means the number he had when retired. Does he take that number? The gentleman says no.

Mr. CALDWELL. I said that he takes the number, an extra number, at the same place, Mr. MANN. You can not You can not have the two numbers the same.

Mr. CALDWELL. Two objects can not occupy the same place, as has been suggested here; but the proposition is this—

Mr. MANN. That it shall be carried as an additional number? Mr. CALDWELL. In other words, if he has number ten, there shall be two number tens, because the rest of the bill goes on to say so. I am not particularly wedded to the wording of this bill. If the gentleman has in mind what we want and will suggest something that will do it, I will agree.

Mr. MANN. I understand that perfectly well; but I have not. But I can see that the gentleman's amendment, if I understand the purpose of it, apparently would first say that he goes back to No. 10, say, if that is the number, or maybe No. I do not know what it is. That is not the number he goes back to?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes; an extra number of the same grade. Mr. MANN. When we put them back as additional numbers, do they take the same number?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes; as I understand it. Mr. TILSON. The words "additional number" refer to the number of that grade. Suppose the law allows 20 lieutenant colonels, and we put in another lieutenant colonel. The law allows but 20, so we say that he shall be carried as an additional number.

Mr. MANN. In the grade of lieutenant colonel. During the time he is lieutenant colonel he has the extra number on the list of lieutenant colonels, when there are actually 21.

Mr. CALDWELL. Can the gentleman from Connecticut suggest words that will accomplish what we want to do?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will not the gentleman accomplish the purpose by striking out the word "place" and insert the word "grade"?

Mr. MANN. Where is the word "grade"? That is the controversy here. That is the important thing. That is what determines as to promotion. If there are 148 lieutenant colonels, the man who is 148 has not near as good a chance as the man who is No. 1.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. As I understand the amendment of the gentleman from New York, if there were 20 lieutenant colonels ahead of this man on the list when he retired, if this amendment is adopted and the bill becomes a law there will be 20 ahead of him, according to this amendment. In other words, he will lose his place as the list has pushed forward. The lieutenant colonels who were right with him on the list will move forward, and if this amendment is adopted he will I understand that that change has taken place.

have as many lieutenant colonels ahead of him on the active list as he had when he retired.

Mr. MANN. Why not take the number of lieutenant colonels behind him instead of ahead of him? Why does the gentleman select the number ahead and not the number behind?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I take it for granted that there are the same number of lieutenant colonels.

Mr. MANN. There are a good many more lieutenant colonels now than there were. The gentleman, of course, all the time is talking about Col. Dickson. This bill applies to various other people besides Col. Dickson.

Mr. FIELDS. Would this language add to my amendment:

Mr. FIELDS. Would this language and to my amendment.

"With the same grade last held by him in such rank"?

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman has his words transposed.

Mr. MANN. The word "grade" does not mean "place." The words "grade" and "rank" come pretty near meaning the same thing.

Mr. TILSON. No; grade refers to whether he is colonel or lieutenant colonel. Rank may determine his position or place in that grade.

Mr. MANN. Place determines his position.
Mr. TILSON. So does rank.
Mr. MANN. Not as used here, it does not. With "rank" and "place" here, one means the grade and one place.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move a further amendment, on page 2, line 2, by striking out the words "and place," so that the proviso will read "that such officer shall be transferred to the rank on the active list which he had when retired, shall be carried as an additional number," and so forth,

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; there is no "and shall be." Mr. CALDWELL. "Shall be carried as an additional number in the grade to which he shall be transferred."

That does not indicate where he will be placed. Mr. CALDWELL. I think it does. If the gentleman will point out where it does not, or point out some words that will indicate it, I would be glad.

Mr. MANN. I will undertake to say it will not. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment by Mr. Caldwell: Strike out in line 2, page 2, the words "and place," so that as amended the provise will read: "Provided, That such officer shall be transferred to the rank on the active list which he had when retired."

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman—
Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield just a moment, to permit me to make a suggestion?
Mr. MANN. Yes.

Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. The usual language heretofore has been to take rank next after some particular officer named, as an extra number. That defines exactly where he would come, and he comes as an extra number, to take rank next after John Smith, Bill Brown, or whoever it is, as shown in the Army Register, as an extra number.

Mr. MANN. I may be in error, but I assume that this bill was drafted by the War Department?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. While I do not think they always use good judgment in drafting bills, they evidently made a distinction here between rank and place, calling rank "grade," although right after that they use the word "grade." Now, if "rank" means grade, then the gentleman probably accomplishes what he wanted to.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does it?

Mr. MANN. I am not sure, but the War Department evidently thought it did.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will yield to anybody who is familiar with military affairs.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I do not want to get the floor under those conditions, but I would like to suggest, if the word lineal" is inserted before the word "rank" in line 2, would not that obviate the objection?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me-

Mr. MANN. I do-

Mr. LONGWORTH. Though without pretense to military knowledge.

Mr. MANN.

LONGWORTH. It seems to me the gentleman has pointed out the weak spot in this proposition, as to whether the men ahead of this particular individual are to be counted or the men below. If there has been a large increase in the number of lieutenant colonels, it would be of great importance.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it has taken place in the Ordnance Department, where Col. Dixon would serve, but it has in other

Mr. KAHN. I understand it has taken place in other departments.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] would not obviate

Mr. MANN. Perhaps some gentleman who is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs can tell us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I doubt very much whether the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Caldwell] ought to be adopted, or whether it is necessary. am inclined to think that this bill is properly drawn. It is only a question of whether or not we want to give to these men the benefits that are proposed under this bill. It simply means this, that these particular officers, after taking advantage of the act that was passed for the benefit of the officers who served on the Panama Canal and voluntarily retired, shall now be reinstated in the active service of the Army of the United States; and if we feel disposed to authorize it to be done, then this bill simply provides that they shall be carried as additional numbers to the number of officers fixed by law, and that they shall take their place in the lineal rank of officers just the same as if they had not been out of the service at all. It will not interfere with the promotion of any other officers in the service, but when the time comes for the promotion of the officer holding the number that will correspond with the number, for instance, that Col. Dixon held when he went out of the service, that officer will be moved up, and Col. Dixon will move up alongside of him and simply make two promotions for the particular office. It will not interfere with the other officers of the line.

In my judgment we have killed a good deal of time here this afternoon and perhaps prevented a number of other bills from coming up, and I think we have come to the place now where it is perhaps just as well to forget all these amendments and vote them down and pass the bill if the members of the committee believe that this ought to be done. [Applause.]

Mr. CALDWELL. I am willing to withdraw my amendment, Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I should like to ask the gentleman why not reinstate him where he first began as lieutenant colonel before, at the bottom of the list? Let him go back to this grade where he entered before instead of having a special berth provided for him

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman that personally I am opposed to legislation of this sort. I think it is a mistake for this House or the Congress to promote men in the Army or in the Navy or to reinstate men who go out voluntarily to engage in business or speculate, or for any other purpose. I think it is a great mistake, and if it is going to be the policy of this House or Congress to do that thing, then there is no great harm in this bill.

Mr. SLOAN. Would it not be more definite to put him at the bottom of the list?

Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard. Mr. KAHN.

Mr. CALDWELL. I have withdrawn my amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California-Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The amendment having been withdrawn, I demand the regular order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York demands the regular order. Mr. CALDWELL. I withdraw it if the gentleman from California wishes to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California— Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, in matters of this kind it is usual to bring in a bill stating just where the officer shall be on the lineal list, by saying that his name shall come after or the linear rist, by saying that all or before a certain other officer, naming that officer. That is the usual way of doing this thing. Of course, placing a man who has been out for some time back into the place he held on the lineal list at the time he retired creates dissatisfaction in the Army. The officers who are given a setback by reason of the legislation all feel aggrieved, and properly so. When a man continues in the service right straight along it is only natural for him to feel that he should not be displaced by some man who has been out for a period of years and then wants to come back; and when this subject was up on the national defense bill the Committee on Military Affairs recognized that principle in section 24 of that bill, where they provided that the Secretary of War might reinstate certain officers who had resigned. The law states specifically that those officers would have to go back at the bottom of the grade in which they were before their resignation. That seems to be fair to every officer To place men back where they were is not fair. in the Army. However, I have no objection to the provision in the bill so far as Col. Dickson is concerned. I believe that if the other officers were to come back, there should be some provision made that they come back at the bottom of the list of their grades. far as the committee is concerned, their cases were not presented fully to the committee. As far as I know, nobody made a statement on their behalf to show the reason why they should come back. There was a strong case made out for Col. Dickson, and he is in a branch of the service that is really in need of skilled officers. I hope that the bill can be amended in such a way that it can apply only to Col. Dickson.

Mr. CALDWELL. Let us have a vote.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to know whether the gentleman will accept an amendment which will read something like this: That the President is hereby authorized, within one year of the approval of this act, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer, upon application, to the active list of the Army, Tracy C. Dickson, United States Army, with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Mr. CALDWELL. I can answer no, that to accept such an amendment as that would be perfectly futile, because in the closing hours of Congress we could not get it passed in the Senate, and if we are going to need these men at all we are going to need them very quickly. Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is fully aware that we are passing any number of private bills of similar import, that are being passed daily in the other body.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The ranking member of the minority of the Military Affairs Committee has just stated that the Military Affairs Committee did not go into the matter of these four other officers named in the report-Henry A. Brown, Robert E. Wood, Courtland Nixon, and Frank O. Whitlock, Mr. KAHN. I said so far as I knew, because I was not present when the original bill was reported.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is here, and so are many members of that committee, and in view of the fact that we are asked to pass a bill for the relief of five men, including Col. Dickson, who seems to have been represented before the committee, I desire to ask whether the committee itself had any direct information as to Henry A. Brown, chaplain; Robert E. Wood, captain of Cavalry; Courtland Nixon, captain of Cavalry; and Frank O. Whitlock, captain of Cavalry? I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Dent], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] that the present chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs was not chairman of the committee when this bill was considered and reported. It was reported at the last session of Congress, and I confess that the present chairman of the committee is not familiar with the facts other than those relating to Col. Dickinson, because this bill was considered when I was not chairman of the committee.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I bring to the attention of the gentleman the fact, which has several times been referred to, that the names of those four or five officers in the report are mentioned only to indicate such men as might be affected by this general legislation if they sought to take advantage of it? There was no application on their part to have the legislation passed; consequently their cases have not been examined.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will answer

this question-

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If he can.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think he will be able to answer it yes or no. It has been stated here that the committee did have before it the matter of Col. Dickson's desire to come back into the service.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is right.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know, as a member of the Military Affairs Committee, whether anything has been said before the committee with respect to these other four officers whose names I have read?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Not to my recollection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, as a matter of fact, the committee has reported a bill naming specifically five men—
Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It names nobody.

MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has presented a report specifically naming five men who are to be the beneficiaries of a blanket act.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Oh, no.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And four of those men have not been before the committee at all, and the committee has no knowledge as to whether they will reenter the service?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It has not reported a bill the effect of which is, as the gentleman has stated, to make certain men the beneficiaries of anything. It has reported a bill in such general terms that certain men, upon application and upon passing certain tests and being accepted, reenter the service of the United States, because the United States might want them back.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If they reenter the service they will get more pay on the active list than they get now on the retired list, will they not?

Mr. TILSON. The Government will have their services, which it would not otherwise have.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then they will certainly be beneficiaries of the act. This is an intensely commercial age, and if they are going to get more pay for coming back on the active list, they will certainly be beneficiaries of it. But they have not asked for it, and the committee is reporting for them without having any knowledge of their intent.

Mr. PLATT. I take it from the gentleman's previous remarks that these gentlemen could make more money in civil life than they could in the Army on the active list with full pay.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; in the manufacturing of munitions. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if he knows who is the president of the Remington Arms Co.?

Mr. PLATT. I do not.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can any gentleman tell us who is the president of the Remington Arms Co.? Is Cleveland H. Dodge associated with that company?

Mr. SNYDER. No; he is not. Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I believe my amendment has been withdrawn.

Mr. DYER. It has not. Mr. CALDWELL. I asked unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there ob-

Mr. DYER. I object. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I think the Chairman is in error. I asked to withdraw my amendment and the Chair stated my request, and the Chair stated that the amendment had been withdrawn. Following that the gentle-man from Pennsylvania got the floor and got recognition by reason of moving to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this is what took place: The gentleman from New York said he would withdraw the amendment. The Chair said "the gentleman from New York withdraws his amendment," but about that time the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] arose and asked for recognition. The gentleman from New York said he would withdraw his demand for the regular order if the gentleman from California desired to speak.

Mr. CALDWELL. I followed that by making a point of order and renewed the point of order in order that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] might speak, because I had called for the regular order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York asked unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment, but the Chair never submitted that request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not submit the request until a moment ago when he submitted it, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dyer] objected. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

Let the amendment be reported. A MEMBER.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

Mr. HARDY. I object.
Mr. MANN. Can we not know what we are going to vote on?

Mr. HARDY. It has been discussed for an hour or more. Mr. MANN. Then I shall make a point of order of no quorum if we can not have the amendment reported. Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I do not want any point of order made at this time, and I withdraw the objection.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Mann) there were 34 ayes and 53 noes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dyer] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL]

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 29 ayes and 48 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that no quorum is present. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]
Mr. DYER. I will withdraw it temporarily.
Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "Provided," strike out the remainder of line 1, all of line 2 and line 3 down to and including the word "retired," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That such officers shall take rank at the foot of the respective grade which they held at the time of their retirement, and."

So that the provision will read as follows:

"Provided, That such officers shall take rank at the foot of the respective grade which they held at the time of their retirement and shall be carried as an additional number in the grade to which he may be transferred," etc.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I submit this amendment because it seems to me, after listening to debate for two hours, that it is a just procedure. It is in line with the policy in existence heretofore in control of the Army. I call your attention to the act of June 3, 1916:

Provided further, That the President may recommission persons who have heretofore held commissions in the Regular Army and have left the service honorably, after ascertaining that they are qualified for service physically, morally, and as to age and military fitness; such recommissioned officers shall rank at the foot of the respective grades which they held at the time of their separation from the Army.

Now, my amendment is to follow out that line of procedure, which we have sanctioned by legislation here within the last

It seems to me that, where an officer has obtained an honorable and high rank in the Army, such as lieutenant colonel or colonel, and has lived long enough so that he has the right to be retired, and voluntarily does retire, and with no compulsion in the matter separates himself from the service, becomes a part of the industrial system of the country, those who come in after him have a right to be secure in their order of precedence, succession, and promotion. It is not fair that he should come into that rank and be elevated to a precedence above those who had voluntarily stayed in the service. It may be that a number of those who would have numbers behind him under the bill as it now is are older in the service than he and were subject to retirement had they seen fit to retire. But they saw fit to stay with the Government which educated them rather than seeking fields of greater remuneration, and then later when prospects of promotion appear to have improved seek reinstatement in the Army. Let us slaughter the calf for the prodigal, give him the veal, but leave the herd and the mansion to the faithful.

As a matter of choice they did separate themselves from the service, and now having exercised that choice, having gone out into civil life, I think it is absolutely unfair that they should be reinstated at the door where they passed out. I think they should be placed at the foot of the list. I submit that as a matter of fairness to the men whom these men might precede unfairly they should be so placed. I am inclined to think that there should not be any special encouragement given to those men who have become subject to retirement to retire at the first opportunity, but they should stay in until they are sure they want to get out, and stay out.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question? Yes. Mr. SLOAN.

Mr. CALDWELL. This would put him at the foot of the list of colonels?

Mr. SLOAN. I understand that would place the individual you have in mind at the foot of the list of lieutenant colonels, or whatever the rank is. I have no particular person in mind. I am thinking how these officers should be permitted as a class to reattach themselves to the service. If rewards are to be given, grant them to those who long remained devoted and faithful to the Army service,

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, let the amendment be again reported. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to

Mr. CALDWELL and Mr. ANTHONY rose.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendment with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. CALDWELL. I insist upon my motion.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman can not insist upon his

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I had the floor and was recognized, and I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill as amended with a favorable recommendation. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that the committee do now rise-

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order The precedents are many that a motion to rise and report a bill is not in order whenever a Member is claiming recognition upon the floor for the purpose of offering an amendment. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] demanded recognition for the purpose of offering an amendment. In fact, his amendment is now in the Reading Clerk's hands at the desk. Chair must take notice of the demand of the gentleman from Kansas asking for recognition, which he stated was for the purpose of offering an amendment. If the Chair desires precedents, they are easy to cite and are numerous.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposed that the gentleman from New York would withdraw his motion, the gentleman from Kansas being a member of the committee.

Mr. MANN. This is a preferential motion. Both gentlemen were on their feet at the same time asking for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The only reason the Chair recognized the gentleman from New York was because he is in charge of the

Mr. MANN. That is correct; but the gentleman from Kansas states that he has a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas rise for the purpose of offering an amendment to the bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; I have risen several times to do that. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, before that is done, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Let us hear what the amendment is, and perhaps there will be no trouble about it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Anthony: Page 2, line 14, after the word "above" strike out the rest of the paragraph.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, the effect of the amendment which the Clerk has just read will, if adopted, prevent what I believe to be the intention of this bill, and which most of the gentlemen who have spoken upon it have not dilated upon. der the language of the bill unquestionably Col. Dickson, if reinstated to the rank on the active list which the bill will give him, will, when he retires in the regular course under the law, be retired at the advanced grade of a brigadier general. In other words, the proper caption for this bill would be to confer the rank of brigadier general upon Col. Dickson. That is the milk in the coconut, that is the crux of this whole thing, and probably one of the reasons why the officer desires to return to the active list. Now, Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentlemen who have spoken in regard to the abilities of Col. Dickson and the desirability of placing him again upon the active list of the Army, but I do not believe in passing legislation the effect of which will be when an officer is finally retired to give him an advanced grade, and that the grade of brigadier general.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Of course, the gentleman has taken into consideration the fact that Col. Dickson, if restored to the Army now, would have 15 years to serve before being retired automatically, and might be made brigadier general and

Mr. ANTHONY. That is true, but I will say to the gentleman if restored now to the grade on the active list which he formerly had, by reason of the additional increments in the Ordnance Corps and increases in the Army which come after the 1st of July next, and which our committee, as the gentleman knows, have already authorized to be made at once, with the increase in the Ordnance Corps the rank of this officer will be considerably advanced within the next year or two, when the time comes for him to retire for age he will have the full status of a colonel, and with this language of the Panama Canal act, which this bill especially retains in force, will unquestionably give Col. Dickson, when retired, the rank of a brigadier general. My amendment proposes to withdraw the promotion to the grade of brigadier general which would ultimately accrue if this language remains in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question, or will some member of the Committee on Military Affairs inform me if Col. Dickson-and this whole bill seems to revolve about Col. Dickson as the other four men do not count for anything at all-goes back in the Ordnance Department, does he?

Mr. ANTHONY. He does.

Mr. MANN. What is the highest grade an officer can reach in the Ordnance Department?

Mr. ANTHONY. The highest grade an officer can reach is that of colonel unless especially designated by the President to be a general-

Mr. MANN. Brigadier general, what is known as Chief of Ordnance?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. But if he retires while he is Chief of Ordnance, does he retire with the rank of a brigadier general or with the rank of a colonel?

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand he would retire at the grade which he holds upon the regular lineal list. Mr. MANN. That would be colonel?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes,

Mr. MANN. There is only one colonel in the Ordnance Department?

Mr. ANTHONY. Three, some gentleman says-Mr. Hull of Mr. MANN. Full colonels?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Three colonels and I think one brigadier

Mr. ANTHONY. There must be at least the number the gentleman says.

Mr. MANN. Of course if Col. Dickson reached the grade of colonel under the Panama Canal act and was retired after that, he would be retired as a brigadier general?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.
Mr. MANN. Which no other officer in the Ordnance Department can reach?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that is true, and I contend that in the ordinary courses of promotion he reaches the grade of colonel, and by virtue of the Panama Canal act, which this bill expressly retains in effect, that will give him the grade of brigadier general when he retires. That is what I wish to strike out. I am willing to have him restored to active duty, but I do not want him to have two shots under this one act of Congress

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I quite heartily agree with the gentleman from Kansas in the proposition that if once men take advantage of the Panama Canal act giving preference to promotion on retirement, they ought not to have a subsequent opportunity, and if that is the limiting effect of the gentlemen's amendment and no other I will be inclined to favor it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say that is my contention.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I have a right to answer the gentleman. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment does not carry, because if it does it defeats the bill and defeats the purpose of the bill, which is to get an ordnance officer who is able to take care of the necessities of this Government at this time.

Mr. GORDON. But what rank and grade and pay does it give him?

Mr. CALDWELL. It gives him when he comes in exactly the same grade, rank, and pay as when he went out of the service. We do not want to promote him to any place. We want him to come back to exactly where he went out. The amendment that has just passed here by this committee puts him even below where he went out, and that is all we ask for. If this bill is passed, that is all we ask for.

Mr. BLACK. I would ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if the bill is passed without the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas what will be the rank of Col. Dickson in the

Mr. CALDWELL. A lieutenant colonel, at the bottom of the lieutenant-colonel list. And I will say this, that when he went out of the service he was not at the bottom of the lieutenantcolonel list at all, and by going back into the service he will go below the file that he had when he left the service. Therefore I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendment to the House,

Ward Wason

Wood, Ind. Woods, Iowa with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LLOYD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 6850) authorizing transfer of certain retired Army officers to the active list, and had directed him to report the same to the House with a certain amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the

The bill was read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and one gentlemen are present, not a quorum.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House. The SPEAKER. It is an automatic call. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of passing this bill will, as their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 295, nays 15, answered "present" 4, not voting 120, as follows:

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 8092. An act confirming patents heretofore issued to certain Indians in the State of Washington.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. Rucker of Missouri, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION BILL

Mr. HUGHES, by direction of the Committee on Education, presented for printing, under the rule, the conference report on the bill (S. 703) to provide for the promotion of vocational education; to provide for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such education in agriculture and the trades and industries; to provide for cooperation with the States in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the speech made by yourself on March 16 last on "The making of Representatives," together with a few observations of my own.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BOARD OF MANAGERS, NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, to call up House joint resolution 335, reported by that committee.

The SPEAKER. What calendar is it on?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. On the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution. The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 335) for the appointment of four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 335) for the appointment of four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Resolved, etc., That John W. West, of Maine; James W. Wadsworth, of New York; H. H. Markham, of California; and Guy T. Helvering, of Kansas, be, and they are hereby, appointed members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the United States to succeed Frederick J. Close, of Kansas; James W. Wadsworth, of New York; H. H. Markham, of California; and Thomas S. Bridgham, of Maine, whose terms of office expired April 21, 1916.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony] if we can agree upon time?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think so. Some gentlemen on this side would like to be heard on the resolution. What the gentleman suggested to me privately, 40 minutes to a side, is sufficient.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is satisfactory to me. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate upon the resolution be limited to 40 minutes to a side, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony] to have control of the time upon his side and I to have control upon this side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Shal-LENBERGER] asks unanimous consent that the debate on this resolution be confined to 40 minutes to a side, half of the time to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the reading of the Journal to-morrow I be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes in reply to the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] of yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the clearing up of business on the Speaker's table, he be permitted to speak not exceeding 20 minutes, answering the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] on yesterday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as I do not know what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] intends to say to-morrow in answer to me, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 20 minutes to reply. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Will not the gentleman make it 10 minutes? The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, being in doubt as to what the gentleman from Massachusetts is going to say about him [laughter], asks 20 minutes in which to reply.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Or so much thereof as I may need.

The SPEAKER. Of course. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I do not intend to criticize him in any

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman can yield back the 20 minutes. [Laughter.]

BOARD OF MANAGERS NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution which we have before the House now for consideration is for the appointment of a Board of four Managers for the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers. Two of the present members are reappointed under this resolution. There are two new members offered for these positions-one from Maine, Mr. John W. West, a veteran of the Civil War, and one new member from the State of Kansas, the Hon. GUY T. HELVERING, a Member of this House and a veteran of the Spanish-American War. The Military Committee believed it necessary that the member from Kansas, who now holds that position should be retired from it. Therefore we offer the name of Mr. Helvering, of Kansas. I will say to the Members of the House that I understand there is no opposition to the appointment of the new man from Maine. The present member retires voluntarily, because of old age and consequent disabilities. Therefore the only question is as to the appointment of the new member from Kansas, and the majority of the committee, after consideration, have recommended the appointment of Mr. Helvering for the position of the member from Kansas, now occupied by Mr. Close. So far as I am concerned, I have nothing further to offer to the House at present, and reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.] I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony].

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, the minority members of the Committee on Military Affairs unanimously dissented from the report of the majority on this resolution. In the first place, there is already upon the calendar of the House another resolution, H. J. Res. 244, reported out of the Committee on Military Affairs last July, I think, covering the appointment of members of this very board. For some reason the majority of the Committee on Military Affairs have never called up that resolution, although it has been upon the calendar all this time. But a few days ago they brought before the Committee on Military Affairs the present resolution, substituting in place of the name of one gentleman reported in the resolution of last July a new name for consideration by the House. No adequate reason was advanced by any member of the committee why such a questionable step should be taken by a responsible committee of this House. A virtual repudiation of a former report of this committee to The man whose name was reported out last July this House. for one of these places, George W. Findlay, of Kansas, is a man of the highest character and standing in our State, a veteran soldier of the Civil War, against whom not a word of any kind can be said in disparagement. In fact, when the majority members of our committee advanced the proposition to bring out a new resolution to fill these places on the board of managers, they frankly stated to the members of the minority on the committee that they did it for partisan reasons only. Their only objection to Mr. Findlay was that he was a "stand-pat" Republican, as one of my Democratic colleagues from Kansas frankly stated.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX. What has been the practice heretofore as to placing serving Members of Congress upon these boards?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that within my knowledge of that board, which probably covers 25 years, there has never been any partisan action taken in connection with it. It has been composed indiscriminately of Republicans and

I do not think the gentleman caught my question. Mr. COX. What has been the practice as to appointing serving Members of Congress upon these boards?

Mr. ANTHONY. Serving Members have been appointed from time to time.

Mr. COX. How many times?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think twice. I remember Mr. Brownlow, of Mr. FIELDS. I understand there have been five.

Mr. ANTHONY. Perhaps there have been. I remember Mr. Brownlow, of Tennessee, and another gentleman from Tennessee, a few years ago. Now, let me say to the gentleman

Mr. COX. Just one question further, if the gentleman will yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. COX. Are all these other members proposed to be appointed to this board, except Mr. Helvering, soldiers of the Civil War?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Three of them are soldiers of the Civil War and one of the Spanish War.

Mr. ANTHONY. Now, let me say to the gentleman from Indiana that no member of our committee has the slightest personal objection to either of the gentlemen who are named in the resolution which has just been brought before the House. The thing that we are protesting against is the injection of

mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. How many Democrats were on this board. when the Democrats came into power in this House?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know, exactly.
Mr. GORDON. There was just one, and he was overlooked.
Mr. ANTHONY. I had that question asked me to-day, why were so few Democrats at that time, and the gentleman from California [Mr. Kahn] tells me it was because no Democratic Member of this House placed in nomination the name of any Democratic Member.

Mr. GORDON. Because it was of no use. Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, no; the gentleman is in error. Now, let me say that the membership of this board at present consists of seven men. As now constituted two are Republicans and five are Democrats. We are contending that a fair and equitable division would be three Republicans and four Democrats. There is not the slightest idea of interfering with the Democratic control of that board.

We believe it just and proper that they have a majority, but when the resolution was brought before the Committee on Military Affairs last summer at the time Mr. Findlay, a Republican of Kansas, was named for membership, it was agreed by Mr. Hay, the then chairman of the committee, and by all the members of the committee who were present that day, that it was just and proper to have another Republican member on the board.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.
Mr. GORDON. How many members of the committee were present?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not remember. Mr. GORDON. Was a quorum present? Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know.

Mr. SLOAN. If the members of the committee were not there, they should have been there.

Mr. ANTHONY. They should have, and if the gentleman from Ohio was not there he should have been there.

Mr. SLOAN. Now, the minority does not question the character or propriety or the ability of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Helverino] to serve on the board, does it?
Mr. ANTHONY. Not the slightest.
Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. You do not question the propriety of having Members of Congress on the board?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not, although some members of the committee do.

Mr. WINGO. I see no reason why a Member of Congress should not serve on the board and I can see some good reasons why he should serve. Now, if you do not object to the character of the gentleman from Kansas and do not object to a Member of Congress serving on the board, the result is that you put yourself into the very position that you complain of as a partisan question.

Mr. ANTHONY. My objection is to the questionable methods of the committee, reporting a resolution naming an hon-orable gentleman and then repudiating the action without just cause and only for avowed partisan purposes.

Mr. WINGO. Did not that occur once under Republican control?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; and I want to tell the House what has been the result of exactly this same state of affairs existing two years ago that exists to-day. A gentleman of high character was named by the Military Committee for one of these vacancies. He happened to be a Republican. At that time some Democratic influences in the State of Kansas made up their minds that they wanted a Democratic member. who came before the majority of the Committee on Military Affairs influenced them to change their former action and to report out the name of a Democrat from Kansas who was faterwards placed on the board. The majority of the committee named this man over my protest and over the protest of other members of that committee as to his fitness. The man was a broken-down politician, known to be without responsibility in my State, and I so stated to the members of the committee. In spite of that protest he was placed on the board. followed it is proper to acquaint the House with, and the result of this attempted partisan control of what should be one of the most sacred institutions we have, that of caring for the veteran soldier, is not one that the Democratic members of the Military Committee or of this House can be very proud of. This man, placed by the majority of our committee on the board of managers, afterwards elected as president of that board by his party associates, was placed in charge of the funds of the home, the sacred funds which are accumulated there for the use of the veteran soldiers. The records of the Appropriation Committee, beginning on page 513, in the hearings on the sundry civil bill of 1917, contain a shameful record of mishandled moneys and peculations of this fund. The records show that this man, placed on the board for partisan purposes only, made investments that have resulted in swindling the Government out of $46,000 of one of the funds intrusted to his The records show in that transaction that in the purchase of about $46,000 worth of wildcat granite mining bonds located in Colorado, somebody was paid a cash commission of $6,000. The records show that there was $25,000 stock of that company also issued in the name of a member of the Soldiers' Home Board.

Following this disreputable financial transaction that was fully disclosed by the patient work of the Committee on Appropriations last year, there came a run of resignations among some of the officials of the different branches of the homes over the country. In the places of many of these old Republican employees there were appointed men known to be political henchmen and personal associates of this man Close, the broken-down Democratic Kansas politician, who was made president of the board in the manner which I have outlined to the House. instance, there was appointed governor of the Milwaukee home a man by the name Ijams, who was put in that responsible position, a man who before had been associated with Close in business in Kansas City. This man Ijams, made governor by his old crony, Close, had at one time been the agent of this wildcat Colorado mine for the sale of these bogus securities which were afterwards unloaded on the Government. That is the way the chain of fraud had been carried out under the administration of the gentleman I have named.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Has there been a prosecution of Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that the board of managers has taken very proper action. They have ordered that a full transcript of the evidence be placed in the hands of the Attorney General of the United States, and I understand it is now there, awaiting action by that official.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How long since these disclosures were first made?

Mr. ANTHONY. These disclosures were made in the hearings upon the sundry civil appropriation bill for 1917.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Over a year ago?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Has anything been done by the Attorney General's Office to prosecute these people?

Mr. ANTHONY. Not that I am aware of. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. About how long does it take after facts like that, which show plain embezzlement, for this official to take action?

Mr. ANTHONY. That evidently depends upon the degree of political influence.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It does not depend on anything else, does it?

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman claim that there has been embezzlement there?

Mr. ANTHONY. I believe there has been practical embezzlement.

Mr. GORDON. Practical!
Mr. ANTHONY. That the money of the Government has been invested in fraudulent securities without commercial value.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman's statement was that he unwisely invested the money.

Mr. ANTHONY. I refer the gentleman to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald], who can give perhaps better testimony than I. Mr. Fitzgerald disclosed this fraud in a very able examination of Close before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Did I understand the gentleman to say that one party upon this board received a commission?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is part of the evidence, I will say, What we are protesting against is the continuation of this partisan control. For many years, for a period of over 18 years, in successive Republican Congresses, Gen. Franklin, a gentleman from Connecticut, a Democrat, was continued president of that board. Until the last two years there have never been any partisan politics on that board, and I believe that for the honor of this House and the country this resolution should be defeated. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, there is an attempt being made to deceive this House in reference to conditions here. Our Republican friends can not let go, and they are seeking to invoke partisan spirit and misrepresentation for the purpose of misleading the House. In reference to the resolution that is said to have been reported out by this committee last July, I went home on the 1st of July and remained there for several weeks, and was not present, but I have not succeeded up to date in finding anybody that was present at the time this action was taken. But how is that important or material? At a fully attended meeting of the committee and after careful consideration, after these charges of improper management had been made by Mr. Anthony, the majority members of the Committee on Military Affairs decided they wanted a man on that board in Kansas of unquestioned integrity, a man concerning whom they knew something, because Congress is charged officially with the responsibility of the proper management and conduct of these homes, and, therefore, they selected a gentleman from Kansas, a Member of this House who has been two or three times elected to this body, for the very reason that they wanted a man against whose integrity nothing could be said. That was primarily the reason for selecting Mr. Helvering, not because of his politics, but the trouble with the gentleman from Kansas Anthony] is that because he is a member of the committee and one of the old ringers of this House, he thinks he ought to control. When the Republicans had a majority of the House and were charged officially with the responsibility they had, I am told, all of these members but one. When the Democrats came into power in 1910, every member of this board was Republican but one. I do not know why they did not take him.

Mr. HASTINGS. How many members did they have at that time on the board?

Mr. GORDON. Eleven.
Mr. HASTINGS. And 10 of them were Republicans?
Mr. GORDON. Yes. This idea that the Republicans have a vested right in all of these offices is an idea that obscesses the minds of some Republican Members here. I undertake to say that the selection of Mr. Helvering is not a partisan matter. The primary object in selecting him was to have a man in whom the Members of this House would have confidence, and the fact that he is a Democrat does not disqualify him, I hope.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. GORDON. I will.
Mr. ALMON. State whether or not Mr. Helvering is a Spanish-American War veteran.

Mr. GORDON. He is. It has already been stated on the floor of this House that he is a Spanish War veteran. I think this Congress, being especially charged by law-it is a bad law, the law ought to be repealed, in my judgment, and these homes ought to be placed under the War Department, because it is an executive function—but Congress has enacted a law providing that the men in charge of these homes should be selected by the House, and now, as the House is charged with the official responsibility of selecting these men, it ought to select men in whom it has confidence, and the fact that this gentleman of whom the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony] complains has unwisely invested funds, if he has—

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON (continuing). Is a matter that is now being investigated, he says, by the Attorney General. It is all the more reason why-

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GORDON. I will in a minute—is all the more reason why we ought to select a man in whom the House has confidence. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohlo if the gentleman against whom these allegations are made of poor investments is not about to retire, and is not Mr. Helvering suggested in his place?

Mr. GORDON. Certainly; this resolution retires him and puts Mr. Helvering in his place.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman just suggested on the matter of merit that this whole business should be administered by the War Department because it is an executive function. Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Then why does the gentleman deliberately select a man connected with the legislative branch to fill a position of this kind?

Mr. GORDON. A very pertinent question, which I will answer: Because the law charges this House with the official responsibility for the management of these homes, and we ought to use special care in the matter, and I do not know how the House can manage them any better than by selecting a reputable and able Member of it and charging him with that official responsibility. Does that answer the question?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman further yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Then the gentleman is selecting a man from among those who have been authorized as Members of this House to go and do a thing and then come back and pass upon his own act. Every judge is made his own executioner?

Mr. GORDON. Yes; but this House is charged with the faithful administration of these homes, and I believe it is proper for this House to select for the proper management of them a man in whom it has confidence and whom it can hold responsible. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask a question. Was not the original resolution, which I find Calendar No. 149 of the House Calendar, introduced by Mr. James Hay himself?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That was reported to the House. Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It was introduced in the House by Mr. Hay?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. And referred to the committee and then reported by Mr. ANTHONY?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield some of his time?

Mr. ANTHONY. Does the gentleman wish to use any now? I desire to yield to the gentleman from Illinois later. many more speeches is the gentleman to have?
Mr. SHALLENBERGER. About two, I think

Mr. ANTHONY. I have only one more and Mr. Cannon.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Quin]. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, touching this matter of making Mr. Helvering, our colleague, one of the managers of the soldiers' home in Kansas, I can not see why any of our Republican friends should object to him. I can not see why there should be any objection to any man who is well enough thought of by the people of his district to be repeatedly elected as a Member of the American Congress. Our good friend on the committee [Mr. Anthony], and he is our friend and a gentleman of the highest integrity

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. QUIN (continuing). Seems to be a little bit perturbed because Mr. Helvering is a Democrat.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. QUIN. I will.
Mr. TILSON. Would the gentleman be willing to follow that logic a little further and say that every member on that board should be a Member of this House? If we are going to give it personal supervision, would the gentleman be in favor of making the entire board out of the membership of this House?

Mr. GORDON. I would, if they would accept it.
Mr. QUIN. It becomes necessary at times for the Government to be aided by having a United States Senator or a Representa-tive on one of these boards.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for one

Mr. QUIN. Yes. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What does the gentleman think of the propriety of a man in a legislative body voting upon his own official acts?

Mr. QUIN. I think it is indeed a fortunate thing for a man sometimes to take stock of himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, in the old days, when the Republican Party had the supervision of these homes, we had a distinguished Senator by the name of Warren as a member. We had another distinguished Republican Senator by the name of Sewall as a member, and we had that good Republican Brownlow, of Tennessee, a Member of this House, a member of the board of the home in his own State. Now, forsooth, because this committee has presented the name of Guy Helvering, a distinguished and honorable citizen of the State of Kansas, and a distinguished Member of this House, as a member of that board for the soldiers' home in his State, we have objection from the Republican side.

When you were in power-and I do not blame you for ityou had all of them except one lonesome Democrat, and I do not think his politics hurt him very much or he would not have been allowed to be there.

The Democrats are now in control, and, as a matter of right, if you please, I think they ought to have a majority of that board. If you put it on partisan reasons, the Democrats should not vote for a Republican Member to be on there. We know the average Democrat would prefer a Democrat. No man need attempt to fool himself. Let us be honest. You know I would not put a Republican postmaster in my district under tary Affairs, said there never my recommendation. You know that I am not a partisan, and Democratic name mentioned-

I would not vote for a Republican to go on that board instead of a Democrat. Do not fool yourselves. You vote like I do, and you know it, and if you Democrats do not vote for Guy HELVERING I do not know what excuse you could offer to your own conscience and your party. Do you not know that these Republicans are not going to vote for GUY HELVERING? And what nonsense it is talking about partisanship cutting no figure in it. We know that you Republicans are going to vote against the Democrat, and we are going to vote for the Democrat. There is no teat to suck in this position. There is no salary. There is a little expense allowed in order to enable him to go to and fro, in order to attend to that office.

Mr. KING. I understand you to say that Mr. Helvering is a Democrat?

Mr. QUIN. And a good one.

Mr. KING. And there is no salary connected with it?

Mr. QUIN. Not a bit.

Mr. KING. Then, what on earth does a Democrat want with place like that?

Mr. QUIN. They want to work for glory. They have always gone out under the Democratic banner, under the red fires, and fought for honor. [Laughter.] They do not have to have gold dollars hung up in front of them for them to have that incentive to do service for their country. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I was very much interested in the gentleman's rather lucid explanation of the Democratic platform. They fight for nothing. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Quin] has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, how much time remains on this side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Twenty-seven minutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I do not think I shall require 15 minutes. I tried to pass by unanimous consent a resolution in July, I think, or August, that is now on the calendar, filling this place with the man referred to, the Union soldier who served during the Civil War. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Shallenberger] asked for the unanimous consent, and I think the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Helvering], who is now reported to go upon the board, objected. Well, I am not going to tear passion to tatters about this matter. There is a branch soldiers' home in Danville, which I think is one of the best, perhaps, of any of them, and I am not speaking disrespectfully of any of them. I am fairly familiar with the work of the home. I helped to make appropriations for it, and I saw the home while it was building.

Now, let me clear up the fog. Benjamin F. Butler was the first president of the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home, away back in the seventles. He was discontinued, and Maj. Gen. Franklin of the State of Connecticut, succeeded him, and remained, not, as the gentleman says, 17 years, but continuously, as my recollection runs, from the time he became president of the board of managers to the time of his death. Then, I think, there was a short period when somebody, whose name now escapes me, from New Jersey, a Republican, I believe, served. Then he was succeeded by Gen. McMahon, of New York City, a gallant soldier on the Union side during the war, and he remained until his death. He was also a Democrat.

He was succeeded by James W. Wadsworth, who as a young man was in the Union Army and participated in the Battle of the Wilderness when his father, the elder Wadsworth, who was at one time governor of the State of New York, was killed. These men were all good, honest business men, and in all these years I have never heard the question of partisanship come up in the House in connection with them until now.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. CANNON. Yes. Mr. GORDON. I think the gentleman from Illinois has given very close attention to this matter.

Mr. CANNON. I know about it.
Mr. GORDON. And is it just a coincidence that this board was almost solidly Republican before the Democrats came in?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, Gen. John C. Black, now dead and gone, at one time Commissioner of Pensions, appointed by Mr. Cleveland, was a member of that board, and many other Democrats served on that board. Gentleman, let us be fair. What is the use in trying to cover up anything? The gentleman from California [Mr. Kahn], now a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, said there never had been a soldier's name or any

Mr. GORDON. Prior to the time you came into power. There never is a Democrat when the Republicans are in power unless you can handle him.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, the gentleman's party was in power in the House of Representatives from 1874 to 1880, and the gentle-man's party was in power from 1893 to 1897, for four years. Oh, that child does not respond to the gentleman's suggestion. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes. Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was under the impression that Gen-

Franklin was a Democrat. Am I correct?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; an absolute Democrat all his life, before the Civil War and after the Civil War, and there was no more gallant Union soldier serving under a major general's commission than he. He had a brother who was an admiral in They were of fighting stock. Gen. Martin McMahon, an Irishman, as I judge, succeeded a Democrat, and continued until he died, and the question of Democracy or Republicanism never came up, until in the last Congress, touching this board.

Now, I understand about how it came up there. ceeded in 1913 by Mr. O'Hair, who was a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. I think he voted for the change. I will not mention names, but suffice it to say a man with one arm who, I think, had served in the Union Army, but I am informed did not lose his arm there—and I will not speak about his character, you know, or of his faults-went on the board from Kansas, I guess right across from Kansas City, Mo. Well, there is a home up at Leavenworth, and a home at Milwaukee, and a home at Dayton.

I never cared personally who went on the board, provided they were good men and honest men, and I think substantially they have been honest men. I think the board now in service is composed of honest men, with the exception of one. Mr. Close-they call him Maj. Close-called the Democrats of the board together, and they signed a call for a meeting to be held in New York in March, or possibly in February, to consider the general business of the board.

Now, James W. Wadsworth had been for many years a member of that board, and he was president of the Board of Managers. I think he was as good a one as we ever had. We all know him. It was just about six weeks before his term would expire and a new president of the board chosen; but Mr. Close, with other Democratic members of the board, called a meeting of the board at New York, and when they got there the first thing that board did, when partisanship came in, was to elect Mr. Close president of the Board of Managers. The president of the board has charge of the post fund. That is a fund that is raised, not by a direct appropriation, but by contributions from the men, reinforced by funds of the soldiers who die and have no relatives. It comes in various ways, and it is used legitimately for the entertainment of the members of the home, for the hiring of people, for shows, music, and moving pictures, and all that kind of thing. That is the post Now, the president of the board has charge of the post fund.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.
Mr. GORDON. Is the governor required to give bond for the faithful discharge of his duty?

Mr. CANNON. The president of the board of managers, in this instance Mr. Close, was required to give bond of $150,000.
Mr. GORDON. Who approved it?
Mr. CANNON. I do not recollect. But that was the order of the board.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption right there?

Mr. CANNON.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.
Mr. ANTHONY. I will state that the board did demand a bond of Maj. Close when he was elected president in June, 1915. He failed to give that bond, as I understand, until about three months after, and in the meantime, before he gave the bond, this questionable transaction took place.

Mr. GORDON.

Who is to blame for it?
I will tell you who is to blame for it, and Mr. CANNON. the chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. Fitzgerald] or some other member, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] or some other member of that committee is here and can tell you about the inquiry made by that committee. Mr. Close was required to give a bond. He did not give a bond. He proceeded to invest $46,000 of the post fund, not in a rainbow but in the equivalent of it, as the evidence showed-an undeveloped alleged granite quarry in Colorado. Strange to say, the minutes more.

money was paid upon his order before the bond was given, Strange again to say, the evidence shows that stock equal to the amount of bonds was issued to him. He denied it on the examination. Strange to say, a son of Mr. Close was appointed the agent of the company to promote it. But if you will read that evidence it stamps Mr. Close as a swindler of the first class, and I believe is subject to prosecution under the law. Morally, in the sight of God, he is worse than a thief. [Applause.] Let us not mince matters.

Mr. GORDON. How did Maj. Close get possession of these funds without giving bond is what we should like to know?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, Maj. Wadsworth was relieved, and under the by-laws Maj. Close was entitled to the possession of the funds, and he took them by that authority. Well, they were a very sick set of people when they found out. Let me do justice to the members of the board.

Mr. GORDON. Is Wadsworth still on the board?
Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; he is still on the board. Let me do justice to the other members of the board. One is a citizen of my county, an honest man. Why, Maj. Close tried to sell some of this same stock to him, and he tried here and there. He was in that business. Why, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is here. He can state about it if he will take a little time. I do not want to take much time. It is not in glee, it is in sorrow, I tell of the loss of this money.

Mr. GORDON. Do you not think you have furnished a most excellent reason for putting on this board a man who knows something and is a man of the highest integrity, who has the confidence of this House, as we are seeking to do by this resolution? [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Jimmie Wadsworth is on this board. president of the board of managers now, I am informed, is an honest man, Mr. Wood. I believe his home is at Dayton. He lives there. He was a Spanish War soldier; he is, I believe, a man of high character. Oh, this man, Mr. Close, knew enough. Good God, he knew enough, you know, to get possession of the money

Mr. GORDON. A very poor business man.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, a very poor business man! Who is responsible for it?

Mr. GORDON. Why, the directors of the home are, the men we appointed.

Mr. CANNON. When did you appoint them? You appointed them two years ago.

Mr. GORDON. How many did we appoint then?
Mr. CANNON. Well, I do not know. There was Close, the man from my county, the one from Maine, and one from-There was Close, and Mr. GORDON. Most of them were reappointments, too.

Mr. CANNON.

Oh, no.
D. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. On, no.
Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GORDON. That is my understanding about it.
Mr. CANNON. Why, the gentleman is so zealous in his partisanship that he rushes in where angels fear to tread, without [Laughter.] I yield to the gentleman from Wisknowledge. consin.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have the names right here. I can give them.

Mr. STAFFORD. There were Mr. Wood, Mr. Nelson, Mr. Close, and Mr. Bridgham, as successors of Maj. Warner, of Missouri; Franklin Murphy, of New Jersey; Mr. Gottschall; and Mr. Barry.

Mr. GORDON. How many are there on this board altogether?

Mr. CANNON. Seven. Now, if the Kansas man goes on, there will then be two Republicans and five Democrats.

Mr. TILSON. And there would be four Democrats and three

Mr. TILSON. And there would be four Democrats and three Republicans if Mr. Anthony's resolution should go through.
Mr. CANNON. Precisely. Now, if our friend, Mr. Helvering does not go on, the Union soldier from Kansas, a man of high character, goes on

Mr. GORDON. How old is he? Mr. CANNON. God knows. I do not know. He was old enough and young enough to serve for four years during the Civil War. [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. I was not reflecting especially on his age: but does not the gentleman think we have had too many old men on this board?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; we had one old man, a wicked old man, that you put on two years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois five

Mr. CANNON. If it is to be a partisan board, I think four Democrats to three Republicans is fair. You would have four Democrats and we would have three Republicans.

Mr. GORDON. What is the gentleman's objection to Mr.

HELVERING?

Mr. CANNON, I am not making any objection to Mr. Helvering. I could take out any Democratic Member, even you, and make it solid.

Mr. GORDON. The business would be attended to if I was there.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely; the gentleman confesses it. Mr. SHALLENBERGER. What does the gentleman know about Mr. Finlay?

Mr. CANNON. My information is that he is a man of the ghest character. What does the gentleman know about him? Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I do not know anything. highest character.

Mr. CANNON. What does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HELVERING] know about his character? I am willing to leave it to him.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. We ought to be better informed about these men.

Mr. CANNON. You do not show it. Ask Mr. Helvering about this man. I will leave it to him.

Now, gentlemen, I want to say in conclusion that, so far as I know, and I measure my words when I say it, with one of these branch homes in my town that has been there since 1896 or 1898, one of the best of the lot—so far as I know and believe, there never has been partisanship or politics played out in one of these homes and carrielly that is true as to the home at of these homes, and certainly that is true as to the home at Danville, Ill.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CANNON. Certainly.
Mr. CALDWELL. The other day I heard the gentleman from Illinois make a speech on the postmaster provision in the bill we were then considering. I understood the gentleman to say that he thought that the party in power had the responsibility and ought to have the places.

Mr. CANNON. Ought to have the administrative places, so as to be in harmony with the administration.

Mr. CALDWELL. Is not this an administrative place?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, not in that sense at all. These are guardians of the men that are waiting for death, who served their country, who from age or service are entitled to be cared for, and it is wonderful how few of them require this care— 2,300,000 in the conflict and less than 30,000 in the homes.

Now, they put out the best governor in the branch home out there that I knew of. He was a Union soldier and a good business man. He went along about his business, for he did not have to have the place. There was no grumbling, but there are some little bits of 6-by-9 people—and I trust that they have not got any in Cleveland—who said, "Oh, well, now the Repub-licans will lose that vote out there," and so on and so on. I laughed. I did not visit the home from the time the new governor was appointed or had communication with it except to answer letters that were written now and then, and I did not answer them as much I ought to. I never went inside that home until the Friday night before the last election, when I went, as my habit had been, to address the members. The governor, a Democrat, a man of good character, let me tell you, who succeeded Mr. Barker, presided under the regulations. I told them that I thought a good deal of this home, although I had received complaints. I had answered them where I thought they ought to be answered, but I had been careful to stay away, not because I did not like them but because I did want things to go harmoniously; but I kept away for the reason that somebody might say, as there was a Democratic governor of the home and Democratic officials in the main, that I was there to make mischief. The truth is a large majority of the vote of members of the home are Republicans, and I got the usual Republican vote.

Mr. GORDON: Is not that proof that the home is honestly and fairly managed?

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection touching the home at Danville. I do think, in fairness, considering the way homes have been administered from the commencement, that it is fair that the Union soldiers should have a representation, the Spanish War soldiers having the president of the board of managers. They have something more of sympathy with their comrades with whom they fought. Oh, yes; sympathy. I do not know that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Gordon] understands what it means. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the resolution proposes to appoint elect him to this board, so that the gentl Representative Guy T. Helvering, of Kansas, as a member of sure of the organization of the next House?

the board of managers. Mr. Helvering is also a Member elect of the next House. The Constitution of the United States provides in reference to the qualifications of Members of Congress:

And no person holding any office under the United States shall be a Member of either House during his continuance in office.

The Manual states in reference to this provision of the Constitution:

The Judiciary Committee has concluded that members of commissions created by law to investigate and report, but have no legislative, executive, or judicial powers, etc., are not officers within the meaning of the Constitution.

This office, however, has executive powers. The Manual states:

Where a Member has accepted an incompatible office, the House has assumed or declared the seat vacant. In the cases of Baker and Yell the Elections Committee concluded that the acceptance of a commission as an officer of volunteers in the national Army vacated the seat of a Member, and in another similar case the Member was held to have forfeited his right to a seat.

It further states:

But when he retains the incompatible office and does not qualify, a vacancy has been held to exist. A resolution excluding a Member who has accepted an incompatible office may be agreed to by a majority vote.

Mr. Speaker, the next House of Representatives has 215 Members elected as Republicans, 215 Members elected as Democrats, 3 Members elect with Republican affiliations in the past, and I Member elect with Democratic affiliations in the past, and I might say a Socialist Member elect also with Democratic affilia-tions. The organization of the next House will be extremely close. I hope and trust that it may be organized without special conflict, but it is inevitable that if Mr. Helvering accepts an office which, under the Constitution disqualifies him for membership in the House, that question will be raised against him when the next House meets. I hope that that condition will not be allowed to come about. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back one minute. If nobody desires to speak, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote. Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, have I any time remaining? The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes remaining. Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, the acts of Congress creating the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers have uniformly made it plain that it was the desire of Congress that preference in employment in the homes be given to the veterans who had seen service. In the selection of the board of managers from time to time this has been further emphasized.

This has not been fully carried out by the present board.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I can not yield. I have only three minutes.

Mr. GORDON. Does not the gentleman know that this man is a Spanish War veteran?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield. Mr. DYER. Not only does the law provide what I said, but the board of managers on November 10, 1914, adopted this resolution:

That in making appointments of officers at any branch of the home preference shall be given, first, to veterans of the Civil War; second, to the veterans of other wars of the United States, and civilians will not be appointed if a proper candidate with record of military service can be obtained.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the continuing in office, as provided in this resolution, of members of the Board of Managers who have not enforced the law and the wishes of Congress in the past. If we adopt the recommendation of the Committee on Military Affairs we will be retaining some of these gentlemen in service for another term of office. I do not believe it proper or right that men should accept public service, and especially where it has to do with the heroic veterans of our country, unless they are able, willing, and anxious to do their sworn and prescribed duty. My examination of the records of the homes show that over a half of the officers now employed in the various branches never saw any service whatever in the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps. They are purely civilian appointments, in most cases largely political.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes; but I have only a minute.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If it be true, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has argued, that the acceptance by the gentleman from Kansas that this appointment would probably disqualify him from serving in the next House, would it not be wise for the gentleman and all others upon his side to elect him to this board, so that the gentleman's side will be

Mr. DYER. Oh, well, I hope the gentleman will not take up my time in asking so irrelevant a question. I have not criticized Mr. Helvering's selection for one of the members of the Board of Managers. I have no objection to him whatever. It is my judgment that the men who serve their country, as Mr. HELVER-ING did during the Spanish War, should have the management and control of these homes in the interest of the veterans of our country. It is also necessary to properly discharge their duties that the members of the Board of Managers should visit the homes from time to time and take an active interest in them. Some of the present members of the Board of Managers are men who are unable to do this because of their advanced years. They have not the physical ability. Younger men, such as Mr. Helvering, should be selected. The only possible objection to Mr. Helvering is the fact that he is a Member of Congress, and whether or not he would have to neglect his duties as a member of the Board of Managers of the Homes by reason of that is a material and important consideration for the House. I am sure that Mr. Helvering would do everything possible for the best interest of the homes.

Mr. Speaker, the volunteer soldiers' homes should be conducted for their best interests. Positions connected with the homes, including the officers and other employees, should be given in every instance possible to men who have seen active service. This is the desire of Congress; and this is the desire of the country. Unless the Board of Managers bring about right changes in this respect in the near future it is my opinion that Congress will rightfully complain, and if nothing else can be done the management of the homes will be taken out of the board as at present and placed elsewhere. I sincerely hope that radical and important changes in respect to the selection of the officers and employees of the homes will be made soon. I want to see the homes taken out of politics and put under some manner of management that will cause them to be run solely in the interest of the soldiers and not of the politicians. [Applause.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a motion to amend the resolution by substituting this resolution in its place. Substitute the name of George W. Findlay for Guy T. Helvering, and I will ask the gentleman from Nebraska the initials of Mr. West.
Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Has the gentleman got the floor,

Mr. Speaker, for amendment?

Mr. ANTHONY. And substitute the name of John W. West in place of Thomas S. Brigham.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman has not got the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has got the floor. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for "Guy T. Helvering" the name of "George W. Findlay," and in line 10 strike out "Thomas S. Brigham" and substitute "John W. West."

Mr. ANTHONY. That is to make it in conformity with the others

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Has debate upon this resolution finished?

The SPEAKER. Here is the way it was originally: If any gentleman got the floor, he had the right to an hour, but the gentleman from Nebraska asked that general debate be confined to 40 minutes to a side.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. How did the gentleman from Kansas get the floor?

The SPEAKER. Why, the gentleman offered an amendment. Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kansas had the floor. He had 40 minutes of time.

Mr. GORDON. His time expired.

Mr. MANN. He got the floor and offered an amendment at the end of his time.
Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FIELDS. Has the time of the gentleman from Nebraska expired?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may use his time if he chooses to do so.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I have several gentlemen who wish to speak. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?
The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 25 minutes; the time on the other side is exhausted.

Mr. FIELDS. That is what I had in mind a while ago when made the point of order that the gentleman from Kansas did not have the floor, as his time was exhausted and the time of the gentleman from Nebraska was not exhausted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska had asked twice for a vote, and the Chair was justified in drawing the conclusion that he did not want to use any more of his time, although if he wants to debate it the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Nebraska; but the gentleman from Kansas is entirely within his rights to offer an amendment at the right

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, I understand, then, those gentlemen wishing to be heard—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize anybody to whom the gentleman from Nebraska yields.
Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Fields].
Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. WINGO. Is it in order to offer amendments during gen-

Mr. WINGO. Is it in order to offer amendments during general debate if a gentleman got the floor?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The Chair was justified in his conclusion that the gentleman from Nebraska did not want to use his time, and the other side has used up its time, and, putting those two facts together, the time has come when the gentleman could offer an amendment if he wanted to do so.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, my parliamentary inquiry is not discussion of the proprieties of what had occurred, but whether or not, under the rules, anyone who can catch the attention of the Speaker can offer an amendment during general debate.

The SPEAKER. Yes. It is a bill on the House Calendar. Mr. WINGO. That is the information I wanted to get. I was not sure of that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Fields] recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I was one of the members of the committee who was not present last summer when the original resolution referred to by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] was agreed to and reported out, and I am frank to say that I have been unable to find any Members who were present except, apparently, the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony]. At least, I have not heard any other gentleman say that he was present.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman permit a question? Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is not the name of Mr. Hay, as the author of the resolution reported out last summer, a sufficient guaranty to the gentleman that it was regularly reported out?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes. I want to say to the gentleman that I have the highest respect for the former chairman of the committee, but I always reserved the right to differ with his judgment when I saw fit to do so. I was one of the members of the committee who doubted the wisdom of appointing a Member of this House as a member of the board; and I defeated the submission of the report of the committee at one time because of that objection. But upon investigation I found that on five different occasions Members of the House had served upon this board, and I therefore could not further urge my objection. I had no objection to Mr. Helvering. Every Member in this House on either side recognizes his ability and his integrity. When I learned, as I say, that five other Members of the House at different times had been members of the board I withdrew my objection. I was anxious to have Col. George Black, of Kansas, a veteran soldier, substituted for Mr. Findlay. if there be any politics in it, it seems that my friend Mr. An-THONY, of Kansas, a gentleman whom we all admire, succeeded in getting Mr. Findlay, a man of his own party, designated as the man to succeed a Democrat. If it is going to be a political play on one side, we might as well be frank and say we will play politics on the other side. I am frank to say I think politics should not enter into it.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes. Mr. CANNON. Wh

Why do you not take all the places?

Mr. GORDON. Like you did.

Mr. FIELDS. I am frank to say I do not favor that. had hoped, Mr. Speaker, that the name of Col. Black might be substituted for the name of Congressman Helvering; and I had hoped that even when this proposition was brought up on the floor of the House the committee might decide upon that course. And, Mr. Speaker, in view of the complication, or threatened complication, suggested a few minutes ago, in view of the fact that Gen. Black is a Federal soldier, I, within my individual right as a member of the committee, move now, or shall move at the proper time, an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony] to substitute the name of Col. George Black in lieu of the name of And I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas if he will agree to a proposition of that kind?

Mr. ANTHONY. Does not the gentleman think that it would be a better plan to refer the matter back to the committee? Now, the reason I say that is because I asked Mr. Taggart the other day what he knew about Col. Black, who is one of his constituents, and he told me that he did not know him, and I thought, in view of the fact that the gentleman's Congress-man did not know him, the committee ought to be fully advised as to his qualifications.

Mr. FIELDS. I have read the recommendations of Col. Black, and I hope the gentleman will accept him.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman if there is any gentleman on that side of the House can assure me personally of the qualifications of Col. Black from his own knowledge, I will accept his statement and accept Col. Black. But at the same time I want to say to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Helvering] that personally I would prefer him as a member.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Speaker, I want to say, inasmuch as my name has been brought into this, that I have insisted from the first on the appointment of Col. Black. I can vouch for him as a man of the highest character, a man who fought in the Civil War, and the man whom I wanted to see on this board.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas by substituting the name of George W. Black for the name of Mr. Findlay.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] and the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does the gentleman from Kansas

[Mr. ANTHONY] accept the amendment?
Mr. ANTHONY. I hardly think it is the proper procedure to accept it. I would like to have the names suggested regularly to the committee whose duty it is to pass upon it.

Mr. FIELDS. These gentlemen have all been discussed by the committee. There is no question about the integrity of each one of the three gentlemen named, in my opinion.

Mr. ALMON. Did not the gentleman from Kansas say a few moments ago that if any Member here would vouch for Mr. Black he would accept him?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Rhode Island rise?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I ask to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Shallenberger] has control of the time.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield one minute to the gentleman.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony], if I correctly heard him, to say that he would be perfectly satisfied if any Member on the floor would assure him as to the standing and integrity of Col. Black, and that he would in that event accept the amendment proposed.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say in response to the statement of the gentleman that I may have said something like that, but it occurs to me that that is hardly the way to pass upon the qualifications of a member for this board.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It was the regular way, in the gentle-man's opinion, only a moment ago.

Mr. ANTHONY. It ought to be suggested in the regular way. Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a minute?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Fields].

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Fields: Strike out the name of "George K. Findlay" and insert in lieu thereof the name of "Col. George W. W. Findlay Black."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think there should be a further amendment. I believe Col. Black is from Missouri, whereas the report states "Kansas."

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No; he is from Kansas.

Mr. MANN. I would suggest this to the gentleman: That in no place in any of these resolutions have we put in the title except in this case, "Colonel."

Mr. FIELDS. I withdraw that part of it, Mr. Speaker.
Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Nebraska yield me just one minute?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, Yes. Mr. TILSON. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we on this side of the House, if we should accept Col. Black, are going to put ourselves in this attitude: That while we appear to object to Mr. Helvering, we do not object to Col. Black. That is not the case at all. We are equally opposed to the appointment of Col. Black. No one has presented any objection whatever to Mr. Helvering as to his being a competent man for this board. In my opinion there is valid reason against appointing a man who is to continue as a Member of Congress. The objection on the part of the committee was largely, however, on the ground that, having acted in good faith in nominating Mr. Findlay as a member of the board, we now have no good reason outside of a partisan one for striking out the name of Mr. Findlay and inserting Mr. Helvering. It is no reflection on Mr. Helvering. Nobody on the committee and nobody on this side, so far as I know, is opposed to the action of the majority of the committee on personal grounds. It is admitted by gentlemen on the other side that the change was made for partisan reasons alone. We feel that action on such grounds is unwise, unfair to Mr. Findlay, and unfortunate for the Soldiers' Homes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Fields]. The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 78, noes 61.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-nine gentlemen are present—not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. It is an automatic roll call. Those in favor of the amendment will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 92, answered "present" 5, not voting 212, as follows:

So a call of the House was ordered. The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

During the calling of the roll the following occurred:
Mr. Barkley (for) with Mr. Cramton (against).
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. I think the Speaker ordered the doors closed. The SPEAKER. The Speaker made a mistake in that.

Mr. MANN. This is not an automatic call. It does not require a quorum.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. KITCHIN. It was developed a while ago on the count that there was no quorum present. Does not that automatically

Mr. MANN. No; it does not.
Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NORTON. A roll call can not be interrupted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asked a question, if the roll call is out of order. The rule is—

Mr. MANN. I did not make the point of order that the roll call is out of order. I made the point that it is not in order to order the doors to be closed until a call of the House has been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The rule is that, "Whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question, and a quorum is not present and objec-tion is made for that cause, unless the House shall adjourn, there shall be a call of the House, and the Sergeant at Arms shall forthwith proceed to bring in absent Members, and the yeas and nays on the pending question shall at the same time be considered as ordered."

Mr. MANN. That rule does not apply here.
Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, if it was not an automatic call and the question of no quorum was made, then the previous question was carried. If that be true—

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the very fact that the Speaker announced himself that there was not a quorum present, 211 Members being present, and 218 being required to make a quorum, is a sufficient statement that there was not a quorum present, and under the rule there is an automatic call of the

The SPEAKER. The rule provides that "whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question, and a quorum is not present and objection is made for that cause," and so forth. But no objection was made or suggested.

Mr. KITCHIN. If that be true, Mr. Speaker, the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no. There was not a quorum present. Mr. KITCHIN. Nobody made objection to it. The SPEAKER, They did not have to make objection. The fact that there was no quorum present was sufficient.

Mr. KITCHIN. No quorum was needed. The SPEAKER. Not on the roll call. Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Illinois is through I would like to be heard.

Mr. MANN. The rule which the Speaker read is not applicable to the case. That is the new rule, that when objection is made that no quorum votes and no quorum is present there shall be a call of the House, and so forth. That is not the rule under which we are operating at present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that.

Mr. MANN. The gentlemen over there do not seem to understand it. When a roll call shows that there is no quorum present, the Speaker has to announce that there is no quorum. That roll call does not require a quorum present. That is the motion upon which the roll call is now being had, and upon That is the that there is demanded a roll call, but not on the point of no quorum. I simply called attention to the fact that the Speaker ordered the doors closed. I do not think it is in order to order the doors closed until a call of the House has been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is right about that.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the Chair has just read a rule in which the Speaker himself pointed out that there was no objection made. No objection was made that there was no quorum present. It is not necessary.

The SPEAKER. What does the rule say?
Mr. GARNER. The rule says there is an automatic call.

The SPEAKER. The rule says nothing of the sort, unless objection is made, Mr. GARNER. Objection to what?

The SPEAKER. To the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARNER. The Chair himself raised the objection that there was not a quorum present. The Chair himself has objected, and that comes within the rule and requires an automatic roll call.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I must agree that the gentleman from Illinois is correct in the position which he takes in this matter. When I addressed the Chair a moment ago it was for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that when the yeas and nays disclosed the absence of a quorum the Speaker must take cognizance of it, and nothing could be done. Now, it seems to me this matter is very plain. Under the rules of the House there are two provisions for a call of the House. Under the old rules there was only one provision for a call, and that was the provision that 15 Members in the absence of a quorum could send out and bring in a quorum. The House has since adopted a rule known as the automatic call, and, in my opinion, that means that when the House is dividing by a viva voce vote or by tellers or otherwise, except by yeas and nays, and the want of a quorum is disclosed, and the point is made, then the automatic call applies, and the Speaker should order the doors closed and the Sergeant at Arms to notify the absentees and the yeas and nays on the question.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. If I understand the gentleman's contention, when the want of a quorum is discovered by a viva voce or by tellers an automatic call ensues.

Mr. CRISP. When the point is made that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARNER. We have just discovered the absence of a quorum by a roll call. Can the gentleman distinguish between discovering it by tellers or a viva voce vote and discovering the absence of a quorum by a roll call?

Mr. CRISP. I think there is a difference. I think the yea and nay is the last method of taking a vote on any question that may come before the House, and it is the best way of ascertaining a quorum. I think the intent of the House when they adopted the rule was that if on viva voce, rising vote, or on tellers there was not a quorum, instead of having to order a call of the House, the automatic rule should apply and the yeas and nays be ordered on the pending question.

Mr. GARNER. But we have discovered now the absence of a quorum. Why does not the automatic call apply in discovering the absence of a quorum by a roll call the same as it does by a division of the House?

Mr. CRISP. That was not the intention of Congress in adopting the rule. I have never known it to apply. The practice of the House is the other way. I wish I could agree with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will continue the call.

The Clerk completed the roll call.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, the Doorkeeper will lock the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. KITCHIN. We are voting on the previous question. Mr. MANN. No; we are voting on the call of the House. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

At this point the following Members appeared and were recorded "present" on the call of the House: Mr. Thomas S. Williams, Mr. Lobeck, Mr. Helm, Mr. Bailey, Mr. Cooper of West Virginia, Mr. Denison, Mr. Wood of Indiana, Mr. Paige of Massachusetts, Mr. Stedman, Mr. Gard, Mr. Emerson, Mr. Meeker, Mr. Bach-ARACH, Mr. WHALEY, Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. OLDFIELD, Mr. DAVIS OF Minnesota, Mr. Capstick, Mr. Littlepage, Mr. Stephens of Mississippi, Mr. Konop, Mr. Small, Mr. Raker, Mr. Kettner, Mr. Benedict, Mr. Byens of Tennessee, Mr. Evans, Mr. Long-WORTH, Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. FOCHT, Mr. STEELE of Pennsylvania, Mr. DILL, Mr. MORRISON, and Mr. DICKINSON.

The SPEAKER. On this call 218 Members have answered to their names—a quorum.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Mann) there were-125 ayes and 71 noes.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, pending the taking of the vote by tellers, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for a few minutes, with the nature of which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is acquainted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, earlier in the evening, when the parliamentary question arose as to whether an automatic call of the House obtained, I took the position that the automatic call did not apply, and agreed with the position taken by the learned gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann]. I want to say now that, so far as I had ever seen any precedent in this House on the subject, or any practical application of the rule, the position we then took was correct. But upon investigation I find that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin] was correct and that I was wrong—that the automatic call did apply—and when I am wrong and convinced I have no hesitancy in saying so. [Applause.]

I desire to call the attention of the Speaker to two precedents on this question, and to call the attention of the membership of the House to these precedents in volume 4, Hinds' Precedents, section 3045, which I will read. And let me say that both of these decisions were rendered by the able and learned Speaker, the gentleman from Maine, Mr. Reed. The rule providing for an automatic call of the House was adopted in January, 1896. These two decisions that I shall read were rendered in 1896, shortly after this rule was adopted. I read section 3045:

shortly after this rule was adopted. I read section 3045:

On a call of the House under the new rule the Sergeant at Arms is required to detail those Members who are present and bring in absentees. On December 14, 1896, the question being taken on the engrossment and third reading of the bill (H. R. 1888) to amend an act relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, there were, on a yea-and-nay vote, 130 yeas and 31 nays.

Mr. Rowland B. Mahany, of New York, made the point of no quorum. Mr. Elijah A. Morse, of Massachusetts, moved a call of the House.

The Speaker said that the rule provided for such a contingency, and caused to be read section 4 of Rule XV. He then said:

"Under the rule there will now be a call of the House, the Sergeant at Arms will proceed to bring in absent Members, and the yeas and nays on the pending question will be considered as ordered. The Clerk will therefore call the roll and the responses will show whether the Member is present or not, and will also show his vote upon the pending question. The Doorkeeper will close the doors."

During the roll call, as there seemed to be a misunderstanding, the Speaker said:

"The Chair will state to the House that under this rule when Members are called they are required to vote 'yea' or 'nay' upon the engrossment and third reading of the pending bill, unless they desire not to vote, in which case they will respond 'present.' Thus the roll call will answer the double purpose of taking a vote on the bill and of showing what Members are present. The Chair desires to add also that we are now under a call of the House, so that it is the duty of Members who are present to remain until the call and the vote is completed, and the Sergeant at Arms is required to keep Members here who are present and also to bring in the absentees.

I have the Journal showing the decision just read, and the

I have the Journal showing the decision just read, and the Journal shows that a yea-and-nay vote was taken on the order for engrossment and third reading and on which vote a quorum fulled to appear. And then immediately followed a second roll call, with a yea-and-nay vote on the call of the House.

I read again from section 3052, volume 4, of Hinds' Precedents, and this also is a decision by Speaker Reed:

under the new rule for a call of the House the roll is called over twice, and those appearing after their names are called may vote.

On June 9, 1896, the House was voting by yeas and nays to lay on the table a motion to reconsider a vote on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. There appeared—yeas 99, nays 31, not voting 224.

No quorum being present, the Speaker announced that under the rule there would be a call of the House, and the Sergeant at Arms would proceed at once to bring in absent Members.

Mr. Joseph W. Bailey, of Texas, inquired whether or not those who had answered on the previous roll call could vote again.

The Speaker said:

"The Chair thinks that the only solution as the matter stands is for each Member to vote when his name is called, and then when the roll is finished the absentees may vote. The Sergeant at Arms will close the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll."

The Clerk proceeded with the roll call, and the same having been finished, the Speaker said:

"The Clerk will now call the names of Members failing to respond the first call. The Chair trusts that gentlemen who are present and do not vote will announce their presence to avoid confusion."

The second call having been concluded, the Speaker announced:

"On this question the yeas are 126 and the nays are 43. The following-named gentlemen are present. [Naming them.]

"The Chair desires to state to these gentlemen that under a misapprehension he stated a while ago they could not vote; but they are marked present, and their presence is necessary to constitute a quorum, under the rule they have a right to vote if they desire to do so."

Several of these gentlemen having voted, the Speaker announced the corrected vote—yeas 231, nays 45, answering "present" (certain gentlemen)—a quorum.

Mr. Speaker, to remove any question as to that decision, I

Mr. Speaker, to remove any question as to that decision, I desire to read from the Congressional Record, volume 28, part 7, of the Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, page 6330:

The SPEAKER. The question is on laying the motion to reconsider on the table.

On that question the yeas were 99, nays 31, not voting 224not a quorum.

The yeas and nays are set out in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 99, the nays 31.

Mr. McMillin. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that there are 16 present in addition to that. Under the rule of the House there will be a call of the House, and the Sergeant at Arms will proceed at once to bring in absent Members.

We all agree that when a record vote discloses there is no quorum the Chair must take cognizance of that fact. In this instance Mr. McMillin made the point of no quorum. To con-

Mr. Daniels. I move that there be a call of the House.

The Speaker. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll. Each Member as he answers to his name may vote upon the pending question, so that it requires another vote upon the pending question. The House will govern itself accordingly.

Mr. Balley. I desire to ask if it is not a fact that the rule only requires the absentees to answer, or are they brought to the bar to vote? It does not require that those who had previously responded should answer.

vote? It does not require that those who had previously responded should answer.

The Speaker. The Chair thinks it requires all Members to answer. The Clerk should call the roll and each Member as he answers to his name may vote on the pending question.

Mr. Bailey. I think that only provides for those who have not answered upon the previous call; otherwise a gentleman who had voted on the other call would be required to vote again.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the only solution as the matter stands is for each Member to vote when his name is called, and then when the roll call is finished the absentees may vote. The Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The SPEAKER (at the end of the first call). The Clerk will now call the names of Members failing to respond to the first call. The Chair trusts that gentlemen who are present and do not vote will announce that they are present, to avoid confusion.

The membership of the House will understand that Speaker Reed decided he had authority to count as present Members who were in the Hall who do not vote, and the Supreme Court, as we all know, afterwards affirmed that decision, and that is why he was asking those who did not vote to make their presence known.

Mr. MANN. Mr. CRISP. What is the date of that? The Fifty-fourth Congress That was the rule at that time? Mr. MANN.

Mr. CRISP. Yes, sir. [Reading:]

Mr. CRISP. 168, Sir. [Reading:]

Mr. Owen. In view of the request of the Chair to Members to announce their presence if they do not vote, I wanted to ask whether they might not possibly be confused with the 16 already counted, or whether those 16 are to be used again in making a quorum?

The Speaker. The Chair thinks there will not be any confusion if gentlemen answer that they are present. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. Johnson of California. Mr. Speaker, is it in order at this time to ask leave of absence?

There is no use in reading further, gentlemen; but the Speaker held that the automatic call applied. They immediately called the roll and the yeas and nays were again taken and they voted on the pending question.

Mr. GARNER. He was construing at that time paragraph 4 of Rule XV?

Mr. CRISP. He was construing the identical rule in question, the rule having been adopted in January, 1896. Under this decision, Mr. Speaker, it is clear I was in error in the position I took. Under these decisions, if they are followed, it is obvious when we take a vote by yeas and nays on a motion to order the previous question on the passage of a bill and amendments and a quorum failing to vote, then the automatic rule applies, and a call of the House follows, and Members brought in by the Sergeant at Arms or who come in voluntarily should be permitted to cast their vote on ordering the previous question on the bill and amendments to passage. I felt, Mr. Speaker, that it was due the Chair and due the House and due I felt, Mr. myself when I learned I was in error to frankly say so. I thank the House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The vote is on dispensing with further proceedings, and tellers have been ordered. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Shallenberger] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] will take their places as tellers. Those in favor of dispensing with further proceedings under the call will pass between the tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there ere-ayes 137, noes 72.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays. Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion is dilatory

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman has not read the Constitution recently.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. Evidently a sufficient number have arisen, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of dispensing with further proceedings under the call when their names are called will answer "aye" and those opposed will answer "no."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 142, nays 85, answered "present" 2, not voting 204, as follows:

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19410) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the pending question, as I understand, is an appeal from the ruling of the Chair, in which the Chair held that an amendment which I offered last evening to the Post Office appropriation bill was in order. The objection made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] was that the amendment presented general legislation as an amendment to an appropriation bill.

I desire to say just a word with regard to the validity of the ruling. In my opinion the amendment is not general legislation. If our rule was the same as that recognized in the House of Representatives the amendment would be subject to a point of order, but there is a vast difference between "new legislation" and "general legislation." The present law upon the subject was adopted in an appropriation bill. I think that creates at least the presumption that the amendment is not general legislation. The present statute is as follows:

Provided, That hereafter every railroad company carrying the mails shall carry on any train it operates, and without extra charge therefor, the persons in charge of the mails when on duty and traveling to and from duty, and all duly accredited agents and officers of the Post Office Department and the railway mail service and chief clerks and post-office inspectors while traveling on official business upon the exhibition of their organization. hibition of their credentials

The amendment which I have proposed seeks to incorporate in the present law these words: "Including all terminal clerks, transfer clerks, and clerks assigned to the offices of division superintendents." In my judgment the law as it was passed last year ought to have been construed to include these postoffice employees, for it provides that "persons in charge of the mails when on duty and traveling to and from duty, and all duly accredited agents and officers of the Post Office Department" shall be so carried; but I understand that the Post Office Department has ruled that the clerks in the terminal offices, most of whom have been transferred from the trains to those offices in order to expedite or to reduce the expense of the work that is ordinarily done upon railway mail trains, are not within the statute.

I do not desire at this time to again discuss the merits of the proposition; but it is obvious to me that an amendment which simply extends to certain of the Post Office Department employees the same privileges that are now accorded to other employees who do practically the same kind of work is not general legislation.

I do not believe that any regulatory legislation respecting a department for which we are making an appropriation is general legislation. This amendment is no more general legislation than it would be to change the salary of a post-office clerk. I assume that no one would contend that to reduce the salary from $1,000 to $800 of any particular employee or class of employees would be general legislation. I assume that no one would claim that to increase the salary of a clerk from $1,200 to $1,400 a year would be general legislation. It might be to $1,400 a year would be general legislation. It might be vulnerable to another rule that we have, which forbids increas-It might be ing appropriations without estimates, and so forth, but it would not be general legislation. This amendment is no more general legislation than would be an amendment to increase the number of clerks in the Post Office Department. It is no more general legislation than it would be to provide another building in which they should do their work; and I might multiply such instances. There is nothing general in it. It imposes upon the railways of the country the obligation to carry these employees. That is a mere regulation of the Post Office Department and, in my judgment, can not be properly classed as general legislation.

I hope, therefore, that the ruling of the Chair will be sustained, for, in my opinion, most respectfully but earnestly submitted, the amendment ought to be considered upon its merits, and concerning its merits I do not believe there is much difference of opinion in the Senate.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the point of order raised is that this amendment constitutes general legislation. I think perhaps I should have raised the additional point of order that it is not germane to the substantive provision of the bill. The portion of the bill to which this amendment is offered is for the pay of freight or expressage on postal cards. However, I did not raise that point. It occurred to me at the time that there was no doubt that it was general legislation. I still think there is no doubt of that proposition.

The amendment provides, in effect, that hereafter every railroad company carrying the mails shall extend passes to these employees of the Government-employees of the Government who are not in the Railway Mail Service, employees of the Government whose duties do not carry them upon the trains. The Interstate Commerce Commission prohibits the granting of passes except to certain persons included within its terms. granting free passes to a large number of employees, or to some employees; I do not know how many.

It does seem to me that to provide that every railroad company in this country carrying the mails shall give free passes to any class of citizens, whether on duty or not, is general legislation. These men are not getting the transportation when they are performing their duties. It is when they are traveling to and from home. Every other citizen has to pay for it, and this is excluding them from the burden that is placed upon everybody else except men in the Railway Mail Service.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida has misapprehended the amendment. The law now is that the railway mail clerks. or those who are named in it, can only be transported without charge while on duty or while passing to or from duty. My amendment does not change the statute in that regard. They must be either on duty or passing to or from duty.

Mr. BRYAN. Here is what the amendment means: If one of these men employed here in Washington in the terminal station, whose duties did not take him upon the trains at all, lived at Laurel, Md., the railroads would be required to allow him to travel free every morning and every night, in no way connected with his duties as an employee of the Government, but in order to enable him to go back and forth from home. Everybody else has to buy tickets. A man working in the post office right along by his side, in the same building, would have to pay his way; and yet because this man helps to make up in the terminal station the mail that goes upon the trains he is to have this unusual privilege.

I think the point of order is good. I do not care to take up any time in arguing it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Just before adjournment last night I asked for the yeas and nays. I do not remember whether they were ordered or not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They were ordered.

Mr. BRYAN. They were ordered, Mr. President. It was on a very slim showing. The fact is that the Senate started to vote upon this question by a division. Only five Senators rose and five ordered the roll call. However, I suppose the Chair is bound by the decision of the occupant of the chair at that time, Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think the effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa would be to permit all these employees at the terminal stations to secure homes in the country 20 or 30 or any other number of miles away, Bryan where it was convenient to go backward and forward upon the train, and to permit them to travel on these trains without any compensation at all to the railroad. Now, it seems to me that is an unusual proceeding. It seems to me that it is granting an unusual privilege to a particular class of men. It does not apply to any other class of men in the sense that it applies to these terminal employees.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Martine], who was in the chair at the time this ruling was made, made an unfor-tunate remark, a rather jocular remark. I do not think the Senator was really in earnest about it when he made that decision.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Why, I did not make it in the chair. I made it in the quiet solitude of the cloakroom-the one to which the Senator refers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What was it that the Senator said? Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, well, let the Senator repeat it if he knows.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, I am satisfied the Senator was perpetrating a joke on the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll. Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I note his absence and withhold my vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The ruling of the Chair is not sustained by the Senate, and the point of order against the amendment is sustained.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, in pursuance of the notice I gave a few days ago, I desire to move that the third clause of Rule XVI, prohibiting general legislation on an appropriation bill, be suspended in order that I may offer an amendment prohibiting the use of the mails to carry liquor advertisements into States where by their laws they have prohibited such advertisements. I simply wish to say, Mr. President, that the amendment I intend to propose is the Bankhead bill, and it is in exactly the terms it passed the Senate a few days ago after consideration. The matter was reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, considered in the Senate, amended, and put in shape, and passed without debate. The amendment was also reported by the committee here as a part of this bill, but went out on a point of order. It was clearly subject, I think, to a point of order. So I make this motion.

I can not see how there can be any serious opposition to it. It is simply intending to prevent the use of the mails in violation of the laws passed by the different States. It is not a matter of probabilities. ter of prohibition. It is a matter, in my judgment, even greater than prohibition. It is a matter involving the integrity of the laws passed by the different States and involves preventing the United States Government from allowing one of its agencies to be used as a means for the violation of the laws of those States. I can see no justification for anything of that kind, and I can not conceive why there should be any opposition to this proposition.

The Senate has expressed itself very decidedly upon it.

On account of the press of business, of course, and the important measures that are being considered, it is very doubtful if it would be enacted into law as a separate measure; but if it is put on this bill I have not any doubt but that it will be enacted into law. If it should go to conference, I have no doubt the conferees would be able to work out the matter in good

This is all I care to say at this time on the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington moves to suspend clause 3 of Rule XVI for the purpose of introducing an amendment in accordance with the notice which he has heretofore given. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I present the amendment as a new section to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add a new section to read as follows:

as follows:

Sec. 1. That no letter, postal card, circular, newspaper, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind, or containing a solicitation of an order or orders for said liquors, or any of them, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States, or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier, when addressed or directed to any person, firm, corporation, or association, or other addresses, at any place or point in any State or Territory of the United States at which it is by the law in force in the State or Territory at that time unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for such liquors, or any of them, respectively.

Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section, or shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything herein for bidden to be carried by mall, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both; and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not more than five years. Any person violating any provision of this section may be tried and punished, either in the district in which the unlawful matter or publication was mailed or to which it was carried by mall for delivery, according to direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mall to the person to whom it was addressed: *Provided*, That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to make public from time to time in suitable bulletins or public notices the names of States in which it is unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for such liquors.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the public monday of the provision of the public provision of the provision of the

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. REED. I should like to ask what the penalties are. I have just entered the Chamber, and I should like to have a moment to examine the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The penalty is not more than $1,000 fine and imprisonment not more than two years, or both.

Mr. REED. Just a moment. The amendment has not been printed, I think, yet.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerks at the desk are sending the Senator a printed copy of the amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suppose under the terms of the amendment, if a newspaper carried a liquor advertisement and the newspaper was printed in territory where the sale of liquor was permitted, the proprietor of the paper who sent a copy of it into a State where liquor sales were prohibited could be sent to the penitentiary for not more than five years. Is that the intention of the author of the amendment?

Mr. JONES. He could be sent to the penitentiary not more than a certain time. Of course, the judge would take into account all the conditions, knowing the situation. I wish to say to the Senator that the amendment is in exactly the terms of the bill that was considered in the Senate some time ago and which passed the Senate without debate. It has not been changed in any particular from the action of the Senate at that Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to make myself plainly understood in regard to this matter. I am in favor of all reasonable legislation that will enable States that have prohibited the sale of liquor

Mr. JONES. I think I misunderstood the Senator or the Senator did not understand the amendment fully. It does not prohibit the sending of an advertisement into a State where the sale of liquor is prohibited solely, but where such advertisements are prohibited; that is, there are certain States which have prohibition against the sale of liquor, but no prohibition against advertisements. In a case like that there will be no prohibition against the sending of liquor advertisements.

Mr. REED. Well, it gets to this: That if a State of the Union has prohibited the sale of liquor and has prohibited advertisements of liquor, and if a newspaper publisher located in another State, where the sale and advertisement of liquor is permitted, should send a copy of his paper into the dry territory referred to be might be sent to the pentitentiary for five tory referred to, he might be sent to the penitentiary for five years for sending a single copy of such a paper into that territory

Mr. President, I am prepared to vote for every reasonable measure that will enable the people of a State when they have prohibited the sale of liquor within the State to enforce their law and to protect their territory against interference from the outside.

Mr. JONES. Mr. JONES. I suggest to the Senator he may not have noticed, as I think he came in while the amendment was being presented, that for the first offense it is imprisonment for not more than two years, and for a subsequent offense not more than five years.

Mr. REED. For the first offense not more than two years in the penitentiary at hard labor. That is a very gentle penalty. That ought to have been written by one of the gentlemen who burned witches in Massachusetts.

I repeat I will vote for any reasonable measure that will enable dry territory to protect itself against the flooding of that territory with liquors, but it seems to me when you propose to send the editor of a newspaper to the penitentiary for two years if a single copy of his paper is mailed into dry territory and somewhere in that paper there is a liquor advertisement you are proposing a measure that is absolutely barbarous. I do not believe that the Senator who is the author of this amendment, and I entertain the very highest respect for him, would propose to inflict a penalty of this kind if he would give the matter serious consideration.

If a fine was to be imposed, I would make no objection. If the paper was to be denied the right of the mails for some period of time and a penalty of that sort was inflicted, I would make no objection. But to propose to hale a man before a court and no objection. But to propose to hale a man before a court and send him to the penitentiary for two years, a reputable and perhaps highly honorable editor of a paper, because a liquor advertisement which is perfectly legitimate for him to print in the State where his paper is published is printed and then a copy or a few copies of the paper sent into another State—to propose to send that man to the penitentiary for from two to five years is

This law might apply in those States, too, where the law itself permits the shipping into the State of liquor by the inhabitants of the State. It might apply to a State having a law like that of North Carolina, where, if I remember the terms of the law correctly, each inhabitant of the State is permitted under the laws of the State to import two quarts of liquor, I believe it is, every month and to drink it. Yet a State that permits that by its law might pass a law prohibiting liquor advertisements, and under that—I will not call names—the proprietor of any one of the great metropolitan papers of New York might be tried and sent to the penitentiary. Is the Senate prepared to do a thing of that kind?

I say, as I have said before, I hold no brief for the liquor inter-I am willing that every State in this Union shall pass a prohibitory law, if it so desires. I am willing that the United States shall do all that can in reason be done to protect that "dry" territory against "wet" territory. I would no more vote for a bill that proposes to send a man to the penitentiary for from two to five years because a single copy of a newspaper containing a liquor advertisement was mailed into "wet" territory than I would vote to send a man to the penitentiary for voting the Republican ticket. That suggestion came to me from the floor here, and it is a very good one.

There was a time in the world's history when if a man stole a loaf of bread the wise lawmakers of that day thought it was entirely appropriate to take him out and execute him, and they passed laws accordingly; there was a time when there were 200 crimes in England that were punishable by death; but humanity finally opened its eyes and concluded that brutal, cruel, and outrageous punishment did not make for the enforcement of law, and was not consistent with Christian civilization.

Two years in the penitentiary for a newspaper publisher whose paper, printed in a State where he has a right to print these advertisements, and a copy of that paper shall be sent into dry territory! Well, let us see how it will work. The District of Columbia has already been made very "dry far as the Senate's action is concerned. If the other House agrees to the bill which has passed this body, and it becomes a law, this would be "dry" territory; and it would be entirely proper, and we should at once expect the authors of this legislation to provide that we assess about the survival of the second seco lation to provide that no paper should be permitted within the District of Columbia containing liquor advertisements. If that should happen, and a man came to the Senate from a State like New York, where they permit liquor advertisements and the sale of liquor, and he had his home paper sent over here to Washington, the New York editor could be immediately indicted by a Federal grand jury, put on trial, and sent to the penitentiary.

The enactment of a law of that kind is a greater crime against civilization and against humanity than is the printing of a liquor advertisement and sending it into "dry" territory. I suppose I could not get a paper sent to me from my home State, for I apprehend most of them do print liquor advertisements. I have never examined their columns to find out, but I apprehend such advertisements are there. I suppose that nine-tenths of the Members of Congress could not get their home papers in the city of Washington.

Extreme and radical and cruel legislation never advances a great moral cause. It only produces reaction; it only arouses resentment in the end.

I wonder, while he was at it, why the Senator did not make the penalty death, and finally dispose of these wicked editors in the electric chair. You can undertake to aid a good cause by extreme and radical methods until you ruin the cause. The worst enemy any good cause ever has is the man who lays aside the guidance of reason, who allows prejudice to usurp the throne of judgment, and who thereupon proposes with fire and sword, with coercion, with the thumbscrew, the lash, the rack and coilar to enforce his opinion. In a little while there comes reaction; and the reaction is likely to be visited not alone against the unjust penalties but upon the cause they were intended to bolster and aid.

Two years in the penitentiary! Why, under that law, let us see what could be done and what would be done. A great paper is printed in New York and has its subscribers all over the United States. It prints a liquor advertisement, soliciting, as all advertisements do, the purchase of the goods. It is sent to the State of Washington. I suppose the crime would be consummate within the State of Washington. A single copy of the paper is mailed to the State of Washington from the office to some old subscriber or to some New Yorker who is traveling out in that country, who is sojourning there temporarily. The grand jury in the State of Washington indicts the New York editor or publisher, and he is haled across the country, 3,000 miles or more, and is put upon his trial. If they can prove that he knew that that advertisement was in the paper and that he knew that the paper was going to be sent out to this list of subscribers, which embraced that name, he can be sent to the penitentiary for from 3 to 5 years!

It would be a good deal more consistent with right and fairness if it were provided that any man who read an adevrtisement and then ordered liquor sent into "dry" territory should be punished. That requires an affirmative and positive act by a citizen of the State in violation of the laws of his own

State, if it has a real prohibitory law.

The Senate may adopt this remarkable amendment, if it wants to do so—and I say again that I will vote for an amendment to protect "dry" territory with a decent penalty attached—the Senate may enact it; but, if they do, I suggest that the Senate copy the old blue laws of Connecticut, in order to save time here, and just enact them all as statutes of the United States.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I merely want to say a word, not that I think Senators here would be impressed with the argument of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed], but because anyone reading the RECORD, without noticing the terms of the amendment particularly, might be impressed with the suggestion that this is a barbarous measure. However, it simply provides that whoever shall knowingly send or cause to be sent such advertisements through the mails shall be punished. It does not provide that he shall be punished by imprisonment for two years, but simply provides that he may be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000—and the fine may be made a dollar or one cent-or he may be imprisoned for the first offense not more than two years. He may be imprisoned for 30 days, he may not be imprisoned at all, the whole matter being left to the discretion of the court; and I think it is a very violent presumption that the court will impose the maximum penalty in all cases or in any of these cases, for that matter. Then, for the second offense the one found guilty may be imprisoned not exceeding five years. He may actually be imprisoned for only 30 days, or for one day, for that matter. So that I do not see anything especially harsh about the provisions of this amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to ask the Senator a question for information. I do not know anything about the handling of newspapers, setting them up, and so forth-I refer to the great metropolitan papers-but we will take a paper printed, say, in Minneapolis or in St. Paul, Minn., one of the great dailies of the Twin Cities, in which liquor advertisements are carried. Suppose there were a half dozen liquor advertisements scattered over different portions of the paper—that paper would be printed, of course, for Minnesota and for those States in which it is proper to carry such advertisements-and suppose that my State prohibited the printing and circulation of liquor advertisements, how will the paper in Minnesota conform to the laws of the State of North Dakota under the provisions of this amendment? Will it have to first print the number of papers requisite for its Minnesota subscribers, and then, after cutting out the liquor advertisements, strike off the number of other copies necessary for North Dakota and for other States similarly situated?

Mr. JONES. That is what many of the daily papers are doing now. They are respecting the laws of the different States by doing that very thing. It may work some little hardship on them from one standpoint to have to do it, but they will have to comply, of course, with the terms of this provision, and anyone who knowingly sends his paper into a State where liquor advertisements are prohibited is guilty of violating this provision, if it shall become a law. We have used extra precautions in the amendment to make sure that information will be furnished as to territory where such advertisements are prohibited by inserting a proviso reading as follows:

Provided, That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to make public from time to time in suitable bulletins or public notices the names of States in which it is unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for such liquors.

I do not know just what steps newspapers will have to take in order to keep themselves within the law. They may be put to some inconvenience, that may be true, but I am reliably informed that some of the great daily papers now, as I said a moment ago, prepare their editions for certain States where liquor advertisements are not prohibited, and then they cut them out and print another edition for circulation in States where such advertisements are prohibited.

I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that more than one-half of the daily newspapers in the United States to-day absolutely refuse liquor advertisements. They have that much respect for the laws of the various States that, with-out the compulsion of an act of Congress, over one-half of the daily newspapers refuse to print liquor advertisements.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to ask him another question. There are, as the Senator knows, a number of clipping bureaus, as they are called, that send out clippings to different Senators and Representatives, as well as to others, both from papers printed in their respective States and from papers printed in other States, covering matters which they may deem of interest to them. Suppose, in sending out a clipping from a New York paper which carries liquor advertisements, there happens to be on the reverse side of the clipping intended to be sent out a liquor advertisement, would not the person sending that clipping be subject to punishment in the penitentiary for a couple of years for sending out that matter?

Mr. JONES. The Senator can construe this language just as well as I can.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have not read it carefully.

Mr. JONES. I will read it to the Senator. It provides that:

Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section, or shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both—

Mr. McCUMBER. I will assume that the agent of the clipping bureau happened to notice what was on the back of the article he was sending to a customer. In that case he would have to refrain from sending it if the customer lived in territory where liquor advertisements were prohibited, would be not?

Mr. JONES. He could make a copy of the article and send it in that form.

Mr. McCUMBER. If he wanted to send that clipping, he would have to send a statement that he himself had copied from the paper on a typewriter?

Mr. JONES. I think so.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator another question. I believe pretty strongly in prohibition laws and have tried to support such measures on all occasions; but does not the Senator think that the punishments prescribed here are rather excessive? It strikes me in that way.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator that I do not think it is excessive. I have more confidence in the courts than to fear an oppressive administration of this provision, if it shall become a law, when the discretion is left with the court. There is not even a minimum penalty prescribed, but simply a maximum penalty. The court can make the fine $1 or the court can make the imprisonment one day, or the court need not impose any imprisonment at all. It is very usual for us to prescribe minimum penalty, but we have not done so in this case, Mr. McCUMBER. Does not the Senator feel—

Mr. JONES. Personally, I will say to the Senator, that I would not seriously oppose, so far as I am concerned, making the penalty for the first offense one year and the maximum penalty for the second offense two years; but I do not see any oppression about the provisions now contained in the amendment, which the Senate has already passed upon and adopted. But, as I have said, personally I would not make any serious opposition to a reasonable reduction of the penalties provided. I have, however, the utmost confidence in the courts exercising, in a fair and reasonable way, the discretion that we propose to

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I regret to say that I have not always confidence in the courts that they will exercise their judgment with a proper degree of mercy. I have seen too many excessive judgments not to feel that courts very often do great injustice where they are allowed wide discretion. I think it would be far better that we would place the maximum punishment down to the point where we think it would never be unjust, and could not be used in an unjust manner.

Mr. JONES. The Senator understands that the amendment is before the Senate and subject to amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the objection urged to the bill by the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] can very easily be met and overcome by reducing the maximum punishment. I am inclined to agree with the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] that it is never wise or expedient to provide excessive punishment. When the punishment is made extreme or unusual it renders it exceedingly difficult to enforce the law. It is the certainty of punishment that makes a law effective. I shall be very happy if the author of this amendment should accept an amendment making the punishment, say, 12 months.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an interruption, of course, the main thing is just what the Senator says, the certainty of the penalty; and if it would save time I should be perfectly willing to propose to strike out the two years and make it six months

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is quite satisfactory to me, and I think the Senator is wise in taking that course

Mr. JONES. And strike out the words "five years" and make that "one year."

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes.

Mr. President, this amendment is but the crystallization of public sentiment which has grown up in this country as a result of the knowledge of the pernicious effect upon society of the whisky traffic. I personally am in favor of such a law. do not believe that any traffic should be permitted the privilege of passing through the mails which we all know induces the people to acquire habits that we also know to be absolutely baleful. The excessive use of intoxicating liquors, which almost universally comes from conditions when it is easily obtainable, is hurtful to man physically and financially, mentally and morally. It is an evil without a mitigating incident. It is the one deadly drug into which the jewels of the heart's best the one deadly drug into which the jewels of the heart's best love are dissolved and poured into the mouths of men to madden the brain and destroy the soul. It has caused more crime, heartaches, sorrow, poverty, and ruin, blighted more lives, frustrated more ambitions, caused more scalding tears to fall from the eyes of woman than all other agencies for evil in modern society. It is an enemy, malignant, untiring, sleepless, and unscrupulous, and I submit that this great governmental agency, the Postal System, ought to be denied to the newspaper that would sell its columns prestitute its high purpose. that would sell its columns, prostitute its high purposes, and poison the otherwise good influences that flow from its dissemination to such a damnable and outrageous purpose.

A newspaper that holds money above morals, pelf above principle, and dividends of more value than a human soul is not entitled to any special consideration at the hands of the Congress of the United States. As has been said by the able and patriotic Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones], the better class of newspapers, those that are willing to give their best service for humanity and are content with moderate interests upon their investments, have already declined to take whisky advertisements at all. Yes, as I stated in the beginning, this amendment is but the crystallization of public sentiment—enlightened Christian public sentiment—which has grown out of the universal knowledge of the evils of the whisky traffic. am in favor of doing everything within constitutional limitations necessary to discourage, hinder, or destroy the traffic in liquor. I regard it as an outlaw, an enemy to mankind, and if I can not strike it in the face I will hit it in the back-hamstring it. I will do anything consistent with honor and duty as a United States Senator to get rid of it. If the newspapers insist upon a recognition of their rights at the hands of Congress, let them come to this body with clean hands. They can not make criminals of men, prostitutes of women, and orphans of children and then be heard to complain to the Senate of proscriptive laws.

As to the effect of such legislation in States that prohibit the circulation of newspapers containing liquor advertisements, I wish to say that I chanced to be in the city of Birmingham, Ala., some time ago, after the law in that State had gone into effect and before a similar law had been enacted by my own State. I saw the periodical Life, published in New York City, offered for sale at a news stand. I noticed the pages of this periodical very much blurred and marked up with a black pencil, and when I inquired what it meant I was told that the law prohibiting the sale of newspapers in Alabama containing whisky advertisements made it necessary to mark out the whisky advertisements. Mr. President, it made me very happy to see this. I think the highest end of government is the improvement of man, and if the man be improved the Government will share that improvement, and enlightened moral sentiment will right the laws of the land. Now, to meet the objection of the Senator from North Dakota, who spoke of clipping bureaus sending out matter, I will state to the Senator that it is a very easy thing for them to avoid violating the law if there happen to be whisky advertisements on the back of the clippings, to paste a piece of paper over the advertisement or mark it out with a black pencil.

Yes; this is a good law; it is right in principle, easy of execution, and its effect will be salutary. This amendment ought to be agreed to. Instead of being hurtful to mankind generally, as my good friend from Missouri has pictured in exceptional it will afford protection for the weak and mark the at and narrow path for erring humanity. "Lead us not straight and narrow path for erring humanity. "Lead us not into temptation" is the best part of the Lord's prayer. No man or woman has ever fallen unless they were tempted. And that law which removes the largest number of temptations is the wisest and the best.

I sincerely hope that the amendment may be agreed to, and I also hope that the Senator from Washington will see that the amendment reducing the maximum punishment shall be incorporated in his amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the amendment, on line 9, to strike out "two years" and insert "six months"; and in line 10, to strike out "five" and insert " one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed modification will be stated.

The Secretary. One page 2, line 9, it is proposed to strike out the words "two years" and insert "six months," and on line 10 to strike out the words "five years" and insert "one year."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator has seen a little light. The mystery was to me, when the Senator's amendment was presented to me, that he had not proposed to decapitate the sender of every letter that might be written with reference to alcohol or to liquor.

I received a day or two ago a letter from a gentleman, a very dear and good friend of mine, a man of stability and character and standing in his community in my State, who is an importer and dealer in liquors. With reference to these propositions about sending advertisements through the mails, he asks: "What would become of me with my letterheads? proposes that a man shall not send a letter or a postal card or He said: "I could not write a letter anything of that kind." on a subject utterly and absolutely foreign to the liquor traffic that had my letterhead printed across the top, with a type of a champagne bottle, if you choose, without being amenable and subject to this arbitrary law." Unquestionably that is true.

It seems to me that this is a proposition of prohibition run mad. I say, seriously and earnestly, I can not understand the make-up of a man who is so bereft of all fairness and justice to his fellow men that he will propose such an arbitrary, un-

American, and unjust proposition.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, it is not my fault that the Senator can not understand it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, I do not purpose to answer that. I may be stupid, but I do not think I am any more stupid than the Senator. I have more of humanity in my heart, I believe, than the Senator has, with all his boasts. Now, I say the Senator proposes to be the oracle for all humanity. He must have clean hands before attacking his fellow,

"Shake not thy gory locks at me. Mr. VARDAMAN.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. There are States that prohibit the use of cigarettes. Why should not the Senator incorporate cigarettes in this amendment and provide that any man sending an advertisement of a package of cigarettes to another man in such a community should be sent to jail for a year and be subject to a fine of $1,000? I abominate the habits that are indulged in by almost every Senator around me; and yet I would be the last man to arrogate to myself all of wisdom and judgment and knowledge and try to dictate to them their

I say this is prohibition, rank, run mad, and wild. No thought of personal liberty, no thought of human rights, seems to enter the mind of the average prohibitionist. When he once starts out on the realm and path of prohibition, everything else must stand aside in order that this propaganda of theirs may be advocated.

I ask, Mr. President, suppose a man's wife, if you choose, knowing that there was a liquor advertisement in a paper, should choose to send to her husband a paper containing it, not knowing the penalty. Of course, ignorance of the law is no excuse, so the lawyers say, but I think there ought to be something to cover a condition of that kind. Suppose she sends an advertisement to Must she, because this advertisement in the paper, or this letter upon the letterhead, advertises liquors, wines, and the like, be subject to imprisonment and a fine of a thousand

Why, I can not imagine men in human form, men blessed as you have been with liberal surroundings, exercising since your boyhood your desires and your wants and your inclinations and your privileges under a free Government-I can not understand you now, having arrived at a state of manhood, arrogating to yourselves so much of wisdom and depriving your fellow men and fellow citizens of their privileges and their rights.

As I have said before, the wonderful and marvelous progress that has been made in these United States has never been made. nor could it ever have been made, on the narrow, miserable, sumptuary, flimsy platform of your prohibitory ideas. Great accomplishments, beyond compare in the world, have been the result in America, owing to liberal laws and the right and privilege for every man to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. Now, here on this late day a handful of men in fanatical communities propose to regulate the appetites, the habits, and soon, I suppose, the clothing and dress of each man, woman, and child in America!

THOMAS. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with the general purpose of this measure, which is designed to enforce and compel the observance of State laws upon a very important subject. I voted for what was called the Bankhead bill when it passed the Senate some time ago, in obedience to what seemed to be my duty in the circumstances. Since then, however, I have received one or two letters from attorneys of standing and character, one of them a prohibitionist, calling my attention to the dangers involved in a sweeping measure of this sort.

This is a very sweeping measure, Mr. President. ceive of no bill or law more comprehensive in its terms than this, There is no exception whatever to it, and if it becomes a law in its present form its consequences may be more serious and more injurious in one direction than they may be beneficial in another. At the same time I realize that the making of exceptions in a proposed measure of this kind is an extremely dangerous thing

Mr. President, this amendment provides that no letter, postal card, circular, newspaper, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement, and so forth, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States. from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] gave an illustration just now, which is not an inapt one and which can be extended so as to cover a great many items of correspondence perfectly innocent in themselves, but which yet would subject the offender to indictment under the provisions of this law.

Suppose, for example, I should mail to my very good friend the Senator from Washington at his home in Washington, a pamphlet or a newspaper containing some item which, in my judgment, would interest him, or which interested me in sending it to him, but which should contain somewhere in its columns a liquor advertisement about which I knew nothing. deposit it in the mails and he receives it. The existence of this advertisement might come to the notice of a post-office inspector, who, in the discharge of his duties, his zeal to enforce the law, his desire for promotion provided he successfully enforces it, would call the matter to the attention of the district attorney of the United States in the district in which I mailed this newspaper, and I am proceeded against. It is true I have not done it knowingly. It is true, therefore, that upon my ability to establish the fact that I have not done it knowingly, no jury would convict me. But, Mr. President, there is the proceeding, the indictment, a trial, the stigma which the criminal proceeding throws upon the object of it whether he be guilty or innocent, followed by a verdict of "Not guilty," trouble, time, humiliation, and expense.

It is true that the burden of proof in all criminal prosecutions is upon the people. Therefore it would be necessary for the people to show that this communication was knowingly sent; but that involves a trial. There can be no escape from it. It does not do away with the indictment and the consequent expense and humiliation which this statute was never designed to impose upon anyone.

I can not read this proposed amendment without coming to the conclusion that such an illustration as I have given is entirely within the purview of the law; and there are, as we all know, many people in the world having grudges against their fellow citizens who would be swift to take advantage of an opportunity of that sort to apply the processes of the law to an enemy, regardless of the consequences to him or to his family.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the illustration which the Senator gives seems to me to have much force; but the difficulty arises in making an exception under which the law would be of practically any force or effect at all.

Mr. THOMAS. I expressed that same idea a few moments ago. I think. I realize that; but the Senator is familiar with what is called the Mann Act-an act the purpose of which no man can gainsay; an act whose object is to protect the public morals, and particularly the virtue of women, yet that law is the basis of more blackmail, more injustice, and more infamy because of its misapplication in practical matters, because of the opportunities that it offers for blackmail, than any law that I know of upon the statute books, and I sometimes wonder whether the object sought to be subserved, and therefore the beneficial operation of the act in subserving it, brings as much good to society as the injury and injustice flowing from its misapplication.

I have no amendment to propose at present; but I believe when the Senator who introduced it is brought face to face with the possibility of wrong and injustice which may be the outgrowth of this law, as he has given it far more consideration than I have, he will agree to so modify it as to do away with the danger which it seems to me is involved in the measure if it

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment to the amendment, and will briefly explain it.

Mr. JONES. Let me suggest to the Senator that I have offered an amendment to the amendment reducing the penalty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator simply modified, as he had a right, the amendment he offered.

Mr. JÖNES. Very well. Mr. NELSON. I offer the following amendment, and it is offered for the purpose of relieving newspapers. ment is to come at the end of the section:

Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to newspapers published in States where such advertisements as aforesaid are not prohibited.

The purpose of the amendment is to relieve papers from the trouble of publishing two or three different editions. paper published in a State, for instance, where liquor advertisements are not prohibited, and that paper circulates in other States outside the State of publication, it would have to publish different editions of the paper; in other words, if the paper circulates in dry States or States where such advertisements are prohibited, it has to publish a separate edition. The object of the amendment is to relieve newspapers that are published in a State where such advertisements are not prohibited from the operation of the law, to the end that they may not be burdened with publishing a number of editions.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I do not believe it is wise to adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota, and the reason I do not is because there ought to be a uniform law with relation to the circulation of papers containing liquor advertisements. This is not a radical measure. It is a measure that is intended to enforce the laws of the States. If a State has made a law of that kind over which it has entire jurisdiction, it seems to me there ought to be an enforcement of it aided by the United States Government so far as the mail

I have always thought that it was wrong for the United States Government to issue licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors in a State where the laws of that State prohibit the sale. I do not see why the United States should lend itself in a matter of that kind to the sale of liquor. It is true that some hardship might arise in a case under this law, but the very amendment which the Senator from Washington has offered now provides that the penalty shall not be excessive where there is a single violation. In addition to that, there is no minimum provided. In other words, the fine may be 1 cent or the imprisonment may be for one day or nothing at all. No judge would impose a large fine unless the facts showed a deliberate attempt to violate the law. There is no question but that the States which have adopted such laws have had great difficulty in enforcing the provisions of their own State enactments, and it seems to me we ought to aid them in their enforcement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] to the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones].

[Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. Mr. REED. I ask for a roll call.

announcement for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] has requested the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr.

NELSON] to the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones].

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone] who is not present. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). I have a general

In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BECKHAM, I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Du Pont] to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CHILTON. I have a pair with that Senator and can get no transfer. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the negative). I notice that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Warren], with whom I am paired, is absent. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] and let my vote stand.

Mr. CLAPP. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Simmons]. I am advised that he would vote if he were here as I would vote. Therefore I vote nav.

Mr. CURTIS. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], who is detained from the Senate on account of illness. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay." withhold my vote because of the pair.

Mr. HARDING. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood]. Because of his absence

I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean] and being unable to get a transfer I withdraw my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. REED (after having voted in the affirmative). I neglected to announce the transfer of my pair. I allow my vote to stand, but transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore]. will allow this transfer to stand on all votes to-day.

Mr. OLIVER (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Chamberlain] has not voted. I have a pair with that Senator and therefore with-

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, in the interval occupied by the consideration of the last amendment I have endeavored to frame an amendment which I thought might meet the objections which I have just urged to the bill; but the subject is too complicated and involved to admit of summary treatment. I shall not therefore attempt at this time to offer an amendment, but I earnestly hope that the Senator who introduced the amendment will consider the criticism which I have made of it, and meet that possible danger, if it is possible, in the ultimate framing of the proposed measure.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, of course that matter will be in the hands of the conference committee, of which I will not

Mr. THOMAS. I appeal to the Senator himself, because I suppose he has given the matter more consideration than has any other Member of this body, and I am sure he is therefore more competent to deal with the immediate subject, certainly, than I am, and I think, perhaps, than are the members of the

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to offer the following amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from

Washington [Mr. Jones]:

And be it further enacted, That it shall be unlawful for any person to deposit in the United States mails any advertisement of cigarettes in any form or character whatsoever under a penalty of a fine of not less than $25 for each such offense. This shall be understood to include newspapers, periodicals, magazines, and letters.

I do not suppose that this amendment will be adopted. think, however, if there is an enormity it is the cigarette habit, which has obtained so fast a hold on the people of this country. Miserable, puny, sickly specimens of boys are seen sucking on the ends of these miserable cheroots and spitting their lives away. I feel that a penalty should be imposed to prevent the encouragement of the habit. I trust that these splendld specimens of humanity who are advocating prohibition will stand up like men and vote to save the rising generation from the iniquity of tobacco smoking and from the horrors of the poison of nicotine. [Laughter.]

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, those of us who have been characterized so splendidly by the peripatetic statesman from New Jersey admit all the good things he has said about us, but we can not vote for his amendment.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Of course, you can not. It is a personal habit that has its fangs so deep in you as to be a part of you. [Laughter.] I am not pleading with or hoping to save you; you are joined to your idols and are past redemption; but I am looking to save the rising generation that will take your place in Mississippi and your place in Washington and mine in the reasonable near-by. [Laughter.]

I hear men say, "Why, I can not live without it." Tobacco has never polluted my lips either by smoking or chewing or snuffing, by cigarette or cigar, or in any other way. I have managed to live without it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. You fuss, though.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, perhaps I do; but I do not think so. However, I do say seriously, if you are going to reform the world, let us start right. We have started to reform Washington; a little while ago we reformed far-off Alaska; and a day or two ago we even undertook to reform the islands in the Pacific. Nothing has been safe. There is one thing thus far, however, that you have not touched.

Mr. REED. Tobacco.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Of course; tobacco. You have not touched tobacco, for that affects you all.

Mr. President, I saw in a newspaper the other day that there is an invention of some sort of an electrical appliance—I think it is an emanation from Edison's brain-by which you can tell a man's impulses, what he is going to do next. I have thought how I would like to apply it to these prohibitionists. I wonder what will come next. My thought is—and I hate to give the idea to you, for I verily believe you will go off on a tangent to it—there is one planet, thank God, that thus far the prohibitionists, these caretakers of humanity, have not sought, a realm some distance off-but distance does not seem to count-I commend you to the planet Mars. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, in reference to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey I simply wish to say that I should be glad, indeed, to join with him in the consideration of that measure as an independent proposition; but I hope that it will not be put onto this bill. Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, yes; let us put it on. I trust the Senate will put it on. The Senator knows his power. Now, write it in or write it out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. REED. I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes; let us have a roll call.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, no.

Mr. CATRON. Mr. President, before the roll is called I should like to have the amendment stated. The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. At the end of the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] it is proposed to insert:

This shall be understood to include newspapers, periodicals, magazines, and letters.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to say right here that ordinarily it would not be in my heart to vote for such a sumptuary proposition as this; but I am going to vote for it, because I want to test out these humanitarians.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, this amendment has been offered and the yeas and nays have been ordered upon it. I hope that after the amendment is disposed of we may have no more fili-bustering on this appropriation bill. It is necessary to get through with it; and I hope Senators will restrain themselves and let us devote ourselves to matters of real concern that have some application to this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted after the word "addressed," in line 16, page 2, of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 16, after the word "addressed," it is proposed to insert:

Whoever shall order, purchase, or cause intoxicating liquors to be transported in interstate commerce into any State or Territory the laws of which State or Territory prohibit the manufacture or sale therein of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, and whoever shall within any such State or Territory knowingly purchase, drink, consume, or use any such liquors so transported in interstate commerce, shall be punished as aforesaid.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am offering this amendment in absolute earnestness, and I hope it will receive the serious consideration of Members of the Senate, particularly of those Members who have so long endeavored to obtain national legislation in aid of the prohibitory legislation of various States.

Hitherto we have dealt with that question along the line only of reaching the manufacturer or the vendor of the liquor. We have sought to penalize them for the manufacture or for the sale. We are now, by the Jones amendment, asked to take an additional step. We are asked to provide that a newspaper editor who may print a liquor advertisement can be sent to the penitentiary if a single copy of his paper, with his knowledge, is sent by him or by his orders into any State or Territory where the sale of liquor is prohibited, and where advertisements of that character are prohibited. The amendment seeks to suppress the liquor business by penalizing a class of men not · interested in the liquor business, men who simply run news-papers or periodicals, and who print advertisements at a place where it is perfectly legitimate for them to print such advertisements. We are not dealing with either the culprit who sells or the culprit who consumes. We propose to punish a man who may, without any evil motive, and in the ordinary conduct of his business, print an advertisement.

Mr. President, there never was a drunkard made in this world unless there were two parties to the making. The man who sells the liquor is one party and the man who drinks the liquor is the other party. It is now proposed to protect dry territory against wet territory by prohibiting the shipment of liquor from the wet territory into the dry territory. It is proposed to supplement that by sending to the penitentiary a newspaper editor who may print an advertisement in wet territory and then allow that advertisement to be sent into the dry territory. Yet, Mr. President, there are plenty of so-called prohibition States that have by law provided the means and manner by which citizens of those States shall employ interstate commerce for the purpose of supplying themselves with an abundance of liquor.

The State of North Carolina is distinguished by such a law. Under the laws of that State they have solemnly provided that each inhabitant of the great Commonwealth can obtain in interstate commerce 2 quarts a month, which, of course, is a moderate allowance for a North Carolinian. [Laughter.] It embraces every member of the family; so that the proud parent of a Rooseveltian brood of 12 could easily have 24 quarts sent in every 30 days, and thus provide an average of about a quart a day for the head of the family. I am speaking now with all respect of North Carolina; I single it out not because it is worse than other States, but because it represents a type. So that the State of North Carolina, having prohibited the manufacture and the sale of liquor within the State, upon the ground that liquor destroys the souls and bodies of its people, has by law directly provided that interstate commerce may be employed to accomplish the very evil it has prohibited. Moreover, the money of the people of the State is employed to tempt men in other territory to engage in the nefarious business of manufacturing the deadly poison.

I propose in this amendment to protect the good people of the State of North Carolina and of all other prohibitory States from all liquor shipments from other States. I propose that when a State shall have passed a law prohibiting the manufacture and sale within its borders of liquors or intoxicating drinks of any kind, the Government of the United States shall throw its protection around that State, and shall say that it shall not be deluged with liquor shipped in interstate commerce. I propose that we shall reach the man who makes the liquor and ships in the liquor. Then I propose that we shall reach the man who causes it to be sent in by purchasing it and using it.

I maintain that if we are to proceed with this legislation in good faith we ought by law to stop the shipment of intoxicating liquor into dry territory; and in order to do it effectively we ought to reach not only the man who sells but the man who buys; not only the man who produces but the man who consumes. ought to reach both parties to the transaction. When we do that we will have real prohibition within States that desire real prohibition. In no other way will you ever get it. then, should we not adopt the amendment? What man who is against the evil of drink, what man who really believes that liquor is an unmixed evil, what man who desires to protect the youths as well as the adults of a State can say that this law will not make for temperance, for sobriety, for actual and absolute prohibition?

Mr. President, nearly all of the so-called prohibitory States forbid the manufacture and sale of liquor within the State, and then to a large degree nullify the effect of the State law by permitting the citizens of the State to import liquor in either limited or unlimited quantities from other States. If there is no limitation, then, of course, the State can be literally filled with liquor from outside its borders. If there be a limitation, it is generally placed at 2 quarts per month, and always enough individuals can be found who are willing to order liquor, so that an abundant supply is constantly on hand. The result is that many of the evils of intemperance are perpetuated, and in some cases aggravated. What man is there so ignorant that he does not know that in those States where citizens are permitted to import 2 quarts every month, or where they are permitted to import unlimited quantities, that the liquor is to a large extent acquired by bootleggers, by keepers of blind tigers and dives, and that it is generally brought within the reach of all who desire it? Besides, the individual acquiring liquor from abroad and drinking it injures himself quite as much as if he were to purchase the liquor openly within his own State. I recently visited the State of North Carolina, where I was most pleasantly entertained by a splendid people. I was told the 2-quart law worked in this wise: That when the train arrived anywhere from a half dozen to 50 negroes would be at the express office to get their consignment 2 quarts, and that all any man had to do in order to get an unlimited supply of liquor was simply to employ a few colored boys around town who would regularly every month order 2 quarts each in their names, and then turn it over to the individual who furnished the money in advance or to some other thirsty inhabitant, who repurchased at an advanced price, the transaction usually taking place in an alley or behind a barn.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BORAH. The first part of this amendment seems to me to be within the power of Congress to enact; but does the Senator think that we can go into a State and punish a man for buying liquor and drinking it, an act wholly within the State and not related to interstate commerce?

Mr. REED. If the Senator will read the amendment, he will see that it is based upon the idea that the liquor must have been procured in interstate commerce, and it is made a crime to transport it in interstate commerce. Now it is proposed to make it a crime to use in a State that which came into the State in violation of a law of Congress.

Mr. BORAH. I am sure that the first part of the amendment is not vulnerable to attack from the constitutional standpoint, but it seemed to me worthy of discussion and consideration, at least as to whether or not, after liquor had been transported into a State and had become mixed and identified with the property of the State, as it could be under this amendment, we could prohibit any individual within the State from buying it or drinking it.

Mr. REED. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the language of the amendment first prohibits the shipment into the State, and makes it unlawful so to ship it. Therefore the thing gets into the State unlawfully. It gets there in violation of a statute. The second clause of the amendment is to the effect that whoever shall knowingly purchase or consume that liquor which came into the State in violation of a Federal statute shall be guilty of a violation of law. I have not the slightest doubt that the Congress can reach that far.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator will strike out the latter part of the amendment, I would be disposed to favor it.

Mr. REED. The latter part of the amendment is the soul of the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Well, I am afraid we can not reach the soul that would be consuming liquor. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. I have not a doubt of it. I have not the slightest doubt that you can provide that whoever shall steal property and transport it into another State shall be guilty of a violation of a Federal statute, and that whoever within that State, knowing the property to be stolen and transported in violation of law, shall purchase it or conceal it, shall be guilty of an offense against the Federal Government.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho let me ask a question for my own information? Suppose the United States has a statute making it a crime to smuggle goods into this country. Is there any doubt that Congress would have power to say that any person within any State who knowingly purchased those smuggled goods should be guilty of a crime?

Mr. REED. I think the illustration offered by the Senator from Connecticut is very pertinent.

Mr. BORAH. Let me ask the Senator from Connecticut this question: Suppose we prohibit the shipment of liquor from one State to another. That we undoubtedly have the power to do. But suppose, notwithstanding the prohibition, the liquor is actually transported into the State, and the Senator or some friend goes into a drug store and calls for a pint of liquor; does the Senator claim that the Congress of the United States can reach the man who thus gets that liquor?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, it would seem to me that they could if the man knowingly purchased the liquor after Congress had said it was a crime to knowingly purchase liquor that was brought from one State into another in violation of the Federal law; but I am not certain about it. I merely suggested the analogy

Mr. BORAH. Of course, if that can be done, Mr. President, you can reach every possible crime that could be committed with reference to property through the National Government, because practically all property in this day and age passes from one State to another. The property is manufactured in one State and sent to another—different kinds of property, and so forth. I have no doubt at all but that you could join these men in a conspiracy to violate the law and in that way hold one man for the act of another, but this provision does not undertake to do that at all. It simply prohibits the shipment of the goods into the State and then says that, nevertheless, if they are shipped in, the party who uses them shall be guilty of a crime. I think that is a very doubtful proposition.

Mr. REED. The first clause of the amendment goes further than the mere prohibition of the shipment of the goods into the State. It makes it a crime to ship the goods into the State.

The language is:

Whoever shall order, purchase, or cause intoxicating liquors to be transported in interstate commerce into any State or Territory the laws of which State or Territory prohibit the manufacture or sale therein of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, and whoever shall within such State or Territory knowingly purchase, drink, consume, or use any such liquors so transported in interstate commerce shall be punished as aforesaid.

So it is made a crime for any person to cause these liquors to be shipped into the State. Then it is proposed to make it a crime for any person within the State to use these liquors or purchase these liquors knowing that they were sent into the State in violation of the laws of the United States. The illustration offered by the Senator from Connecticut points in the clearest way to the existence of this right. It can not be doubted that the United States, having made it a crime to smuggle goods into the United States, can also provide that any person who shall knowingly receive, conceal, or purchase goods so smuggled shall be punished.

It is admitted ever since the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the West Virginia case that Congress has the absolute power to prohibit the shipment of liquor from one State to another State.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator from Missouri let me ask him this question? I do not know what the fact is, but is it not true that the laws of the United States prohibit the sending of obscene literature through the mails? Does it not also make it an offense against the laws of the United States for any person to have in his possession obscene literature so transmitted through the mails? I am not sure about it. Mr. REED. The Senator has asked me a question that I can not answer; I have not examined that statute; but I would say beyond any doubt the right exists. It may be a far-reaching right the very able lawyer, the Senator from Idaho, has suggested, but we are finding every day that the interstatecommerce power of the Federal Government is a most far-reaching one.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. P. Mr. REED. I yield. Mr. President-

Mr. LODGE. Under the law prohibiting obscene publications from the mails, to which the Senator from Connecticut just referred, certainly the Government can follow that publication through the mails and it can cause the arrest of the receiver as well as the sender. If they find there is traffic between two given points, they can go into the State and interfere with the person who is in the habit of receiving those publications.

Mr. BORAH. That is because the Government proves a conspiracy, but I should like to see the authority-I do not say it does not exist, but it would be interesting to see the authority—that would hold that if A sends obscene literature to B—B being no part and parcel of the conspiracy, but simply receiving it as it was sent to him-the National Government could reach within the State and arrest the individual and punish him. I think it is a very doubtful proposition. I think the act must relate to interstate commerce.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that is not the case here. Let me state this matter again. Ever since the decision of the Supreme Court in the West Virginia cases all doubt has been represent the right of the Edgral Government to absorbed removed as to the right of the Federal Government to absolutely prohibit the shipment of liquor in interstate commerce. That decision declared that liquor is in a class by itself, subject to rules peculiar to that particular class. In the broadest possible way it declared that Congress has the absolute right to prohibit the shipment and to affix penalties for a violation. If we have a right to prohibit the shipment, then we have the right to everything which is incident or necessary to the enforcement of that right. Our rights are not limited, therefore, to a punishment of the man who puts goods that belong to himself on the cars at a place where he has a right to put them upon the cars and consigns them to some place where the liquor, under the law of Congress, can not be delivered, but we have a right to prohibit the express companies from delivering the goods, because that act of delivery if permitted tends to defeat the purpose of the law. In like manner, we have the right to prohibit a man from buying the goods to be sent in violation of law just as we have the right to prohibit a man from selling the goods which go in violation of the law.

If you have the right to go that far, then in order to make the law effective you surely have the right to say that no man shall knowingly connive at or assist in the breaking down of the law by purchasing a thing which has reached the place where he is by violating a Federal statute.

So I say I entertain no doubt of this power, and I say now to Senators if we are going to proceed with this class of legislation, if we are to undertake now to protect dry territory from wet territory, if we are to undertake to protect the morals of the family against the evil which comes from intoxicating liquor, and to do that by stopping interstate shipment by preventing advertisements being sent through the mails, let us be fair and bold and honest about it; let us prohibit the sending of the liquor itself. Let us also reach both parties to the transaction—the buyer who imports the liquor as well as the vender and shipper of the liquor. Let us say to a State which prohibits the manufacture and sale within its own borders of intoxicating liquor, "You can not employ interstate commerce in the degrading business you have forbidden within your own borders."

Let us say to the dry States, "You can not use a power reserved to the Federal Government for the purpose of defeating the object of your own laws." Let us also say to the man who resides in a dry State, "You can not employ interstate commerce to accomplish the very evil your own State has sought to abolish."

I can not conceive how any good prohibitionist can vote against this proposed amendment. I can not conceive how those who advocate and support the amendment of the Senator from Washington, which proposes to send a newspaper editor to the penitentiary if he mails into dry territory a single copy of his paper which happens to contain a liquor advertisement, can refuse to penalize a citizen of the dry State who deliberately causes a shipment of the liquor itself into the dry territory. The worst you can say of the editor is that he has furnished to the individual of a State information where liquor can be purchased, but that information can do no harm unless the citizen of the State proceeds to purchase the liquor. Of the two, the man who buys the liquor is more guilty than the man who by a newspaper advertisement furnishes information where liquor may be purchased. Besides, the editor prints his paper in a State where the advertisement is a legitimate business, whereas the citizen of the dry territory orders liquor sent into his State, where the manufacture and sale of liquor is declared to be illegitimate. If we pass my amendment, the law will then reach not only the advertiser of the liquor and the vender of the liquor but it will reach the purchaser, and it will prevent the shipment of liquor. Thus we shall reach the evil itself.

The law will be strong enough so that the shipment of liquor into dry territory will cease and the people of States that have enacted prohibitory legislation will have real prohibition. If the Government of the United States will prohibit the citizens of States that have adopted prohibitory legislation from importing liquor into the State, prohibition will become an achieved fact, unless the States themselves fail to enforce their own laws. It is very easy for a State to stop the manufacture of liquor within its borders, but it is almost impossible for a State to stop the sale of liquor within its borders if its citizens are permitted to employ the instrumentalities of commerce to flood the State with liquor made elsewhere. The greatest difficulty with which dry States labor is to guard their borders against the shipment of liquor from outside points.

Now, why not meet this question fairly by saying to the man who sends liquor into dry territory, "You shall be punished for sending it," and by also saying to the man who connives at having it sent there and who helped to have it sent there, who proposes to consume it there, "You shall not employ interstate commerce to negative and defeat the purpose of the laws of your own State."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am quite interested in the point suggested by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah]. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he might find some precedent possibly for the legislation in the pure food and drug act, which I will read, and that law has been sustained by the Supreme Court. The second section of the original act provides:

That the introduction into any State or Territory or the District of Columbia from any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia from any foreign country, or shipment to any foreign country of any article of food or drugs which is adulterated or misbranded, within the meaning of this act, is hereby prohibited; and any person who shall ship or deliver for shipment from any State or Territory or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or to a foreign country, or who shall receive in any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or foreign country, and having so received, shall deliver, in original unbroken packages, for pay or otherwise, or offer to deliver to any other person any such article so adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of this act, or any person who shall sell or offer for sale in the District of Columbia or the Territories of the United States any such adulterated or misbranded foods or drugs, or export or offer to export the same to any foreign country, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

I thought possibly the Senator would find some parallel in that legislation.

Mr. BORAH. I have no doubt about that law at all, although I think it was only sustained by a divided court.

Mr. CUMMINS. That may be.

Mr. BORAH. But the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Missouri will observe that this proposed law omits the proposition which that law very carefully retains. I have no doubt that we can pass a law, and I am in favor of the law: I think it is a wise law to prohibit the shipment of liquor from a State into dry territory, and I have no doubt that you can punish any combination of men who organize a conspiracy to break the law, and if one of the individuals or more of them happen to be in dry territory he could be punished for the conspiracy having for its object and purpose the violation of the law; that is, having for its object and purpose the shipment of the goods into the dry territory.

But the thing that we are seeking to do by this amendment as it now reads is to prohibit the shipment of liquor into the dry territory, and then, without connecting through combination or conspiracy the different individuals who are found there, undertake to punish the man who may find some in that dry territory and drink it. That is a distinct, substantive, settled crime, all of which is committed within the dry State. It has nothing to do with the original package; it is not confined to the use of the stuff while it is still in interstate commerce or interference with it while it is still in interstate commerce.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me, I did not suggest the pure food and drug act and the ruling of the court upon it as entirely parallel. Whether we can make it an offense for a man in a State to drink liquer that has been sent into the State in violation of a Federal law I will express no opinion; but that we can punish the man who receives the liquor in the State or who offers to sell the liquor in the State

I have no doubt whatsoever.

Mr. BORAH. That is, offering to sell it is a part of the act of shipment into the State?

Mr. CUMMINS. It may be the act was limited to unbroken packages; but how far we can follow beyond that I can not

Mr. REED. Let me ask the Senator a question. The Senator called attention to the pure-food act or the drug act-I have not the language of the act before me-but I know that under the drug act the Federal Government is to-day inspecting every drug store in the United States to ascertain how much cocaine and other prohibited drugs or regulated drugs they have on hand and how their records are kept. If I mistake not, that power which they exercise is connected with the revenue powers of the Government. The power under which we now seek to act must, of course, be found in our right to regulate interstate commerce. There is a great difference, I admit, in the two

Mr. BORAH. The punishment upon the man is in some way related to the act of shipment in interstate commerce. If he receives the goods through interstate commerce and sells them, I have no doubt that he is a part and is related to the act of shipment in interstate commerce. I am thoroughly in favor of the Senator's amendment, if it can be made to stand the

Mr. CUMMINS. I want my own view to be made perfectly clear. I have no doubt that in the absence of any conspiracy or combination Congress can make it a criminal offense to receive in a State anything that it has a right to forbid entering the State, and has the right to make it an offense for the person who so receives the forbidden article to sell it or deliver it to any other person. When we take the next step and inquire whether Congress can also make it an offense for one to consume, drink, or eat any such forbidden article, while I am inclined to think we can, yet it must be conceded that it is a doubtful zone.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Whether that is doubtful or not, would the Senator have any doubt that we could make it an offense to knowingly purchase the article illegally sent into a State?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is, if a dealer in liquors should receive in a dry State liquors that have been sent in in violation of an amendment like the one proposed by the Senator from Missouri, and should attempt to sell them to a customer, and the customer knew they had been shipped in violation of the law, does the Senator think we could make that a crime also?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is made a crime in the pure-food law, se long as the article is in the unbroken package which has been transported from one State to another. When you pass beyond that, after the package is broken and the goods become a part of the general property of the State, then the difficult question arises in my opinion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I meant to ask really whether there was any difference in our power to make the purchase in a State by a consumer an offense and the power to make it an offense for him to consume it after he had purchased it.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is a new point to me as to just what limitations we can put upon the right of one to consume an article that has been brought into the State contrary to the Federal law. I never heard the question suggested before.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know that I did.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no definite and final opinion upon it. Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have not, either; but in a somewhat vague way it was in my mind that when the proposed consumer purchased he was possibly engaged in the commerce, but after he had purchased and reduced it to his own possession, taken it into his own house, all interstate commerce in the article must necessarily have ceased; and I do not know whether you could make it a crime for him to drink it after he purchased it

Mr. BORAH. If you could not make it a crime to drink it after he had purchased it and taken it into his house, could you make it a crime for him to step into a saloon or a drug store-I will not say saloon, because there is not supposed to be a saloon in a dry State-and purchase it after the package had been broken, after it was wholly separated from interstate commerce and was no part of interstate commerce? are purporting to do is to exercise our power under the inter-When we get beyond that we have not state commerce clause. the power when the article which we are shipping is commingled with goods of the State. It is then within the jurisdiction of the State, and the State alone has control of it. The pure-food act is very careful to confine it to original packages, and the party punished is connected with acts of interstate commerce.

Mr. CLAPP. That would be all right if it were proposed to eliminate from the amendment of the Senator from Missouri the word "knowingly." We have a right to regulate interstate commerce, and we have a right to pass those laws that are essen-We have a right to regulate interstate tial to the maintenance of the right of regulation. One of the incentives to shipping in interstate commerce of course must be the demand, and the man who contributes to that knowingly is violating the law prohibiting the shipment, and he has to be reached in order to make the law efficient. It strikes me that the word "knowingly" there means no shipment, and there would be no difficulty of solving the problem.

Mr. BORAH. What has the word "knowingly" to do with the act of interstate commerce?

Mr. CLAPP. Because it is in his knowledge that he is directly contributing to a violation of the law. The law pro-hibits the shipment from one State to another. The man who consumes it unconsciously is like the man who unconsciously buys stolen goods, while the man who knowingly buys stolen goods is a party, no matter through how many hands the transaction may have passed.

Mr. BORAH. Then the power to regulate commerce is controlled to a certain extent by the state of mind of the party in the dry State. Mr. CLAPP. Not at all; but it is controlled by the effort to make the law efficient by holding those who are parties knowingly in violation of it liable for a violation of it.

Mr. WORKS. I am a little surprised to hear my friend the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] undertake to limit the scope and effect of the jurisdiction and power of the Government to deal with a question of this kind. He has certainly given the broadest possible construction to the laws relating to interstate commerce of any Member of this body. In this particular instance, when it becomes a matter of consuming the liquor after it has come into the hands of the proposed consumer, it is a purely personal act done within the State, and it does not seem to me possible that it can in any way be connected with interstate commerce or confer any right upon the National Government to deal with it at all. I think the Senator agrees with me to that extent.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator agrees with me.

Very well. Then I agree with the Senator, if that is his position; and I am very glad to see that he at least makes some modification of his former views on the subject.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from California is not as accurate as he usually is. The Senator from Idaho has never taken a position which he is conscious of being similar to the one which is taken by those advocating this amendment here. Senator from Idaho contended is that the National Government may police the channel of interstate trade, and it has police power with reference to the channels of interstate trade just the same as a State has police powers with reference to intrastate commerce, and no further have I contended that we can go.

I say that we may do anything under this commerce clause which has to do with the shipment of liquor into the State, but after the liquor has become a part of the property of the State, commingled with the property of the State, separated from the channels of interstate trade, I do not think we have any control over it. I have never contended otherwise.

Mr. REED. Let me ask the Senator a question about that. I am going back to the illustration of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Beandegee]. The Government of the United States prohibits smuggling of goods into the United States. It makes it a crime to bring goods in without paying a duty. Now, is there any doubt that the Government can make it a crime for a person to purchase or conceal or have in his possession goods knowing the same to have been smuggled?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know just exactly what that law is, and I am not aware that it has ever been sustained upon that I point, even if it is on the statute books. The only instance that know of is where the Government undertook to prove a conspiracy consisting of the party who was shipping it in and the party who was there to receive it, all constituting one entity, to wit, the combination or conspiracy. As I said in the very opening of this argument, there might be some precedents which would sustain this proposed legislation. I do not believe there are; but I know of no instance except those cases of a general conspiracy to violate the laws of the United States.

Now, if you make this a conspiracy composed of men within the State and the man without the dry State, and make it one entity—to wit, a conspiracy—I have no doubt you can do it; but if you simply separate and disjoin an individual in the State who purchases this liquor after it is separated from the channels of trade and commingles with the property of the State, I should want to see some authority before I would say that he could be reached by a Federal statute.

Mr. CUMMINS. It seems to me there is one idea that may have been lost sight of. The substantive part of the proposal of the Senator from Missouri is prohibition against transportation from one State to another of certain commodities. the provisions in regard to selling, receiving, and using have any validity it is because they are a part of the law of the United States to enforce the prohibition against interstate transportation. We have gone a great way, I think, in this country, and properly so, in endeavoring to enforce the prohibition, which is that the goods shall not be transported. Now, how can we best and most effectually prevent the act? One way is to punish the person who receives it.

Mr. BORAH. But he has to receive it while being shipped in interstate commerce, or is a part of interstate commerce, not the mere fact that he gets hold of it. Suppose it has been in the State six months or a year separated from interstate commerce and commingled with the property of the State, does the Senator contend that under such circumstances you can punish the individual within the State who buys it? I have no doubt at all that if the party is a part of the machinery by which it is brought into the State and receives it from the channels of interstate trade while it is still a part of interstate commerce you can punish him.

Mr. REED. We agree on that. Now, if the Senator will pardon me

Mr. CUMMINS. I was about to say that I agree that there comes a time when the property is so thoroughly commingled with the general property of the State that our power over it under the commerce clause of the Constitution ceases. That is why I said that the prohibition of the proposed amendment against drinking, without limitation as to time or circumstances, except the knowledge that the article came in unlawfully, was in the doubtful zone anyway; but that we can punish any man who receives it or any man who sells it as it came in from another State, or any man who gives it away, or any man through whose act it did become a part of the general property of the State, I have no doubt whatever. I think the Senator from Missouri ought to put into this amendment the word "receive," so that he will reach the man to whom the consignment or shipment is made.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I call attention, in passing, to the act of December 17, 1914, which is commonly known as the drug act. It is true that that act is apparently attached to the internal-revenue powers of the Government; but it provides:

That on and after the 1st day of March, 1915, every person who produces, imports, manufactures, compounds, deals in, dispenses, sells, distributes, or gives away opium or coca leaves or any compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, or preparation thereof, shall register with the collector of internal revenue of the district his name or style, place of business, and place or places where such business is to be carried on.

Of course, that is a different power of the Government; but it is no broader power than the power over interstate commerce. Section 2 provides:

That it shall be unlawful for any person to sell, barter, exchange, or live away any of the aforesaid drugs except in pursuance of a written reder of the person to whom such article is sold, bartered—

That is not dealing with the shipment itself or with the goods in the original package, but it is dealing with the transaction after the package has been broken.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator from Missouri read that again?

Mr. REED. I will. It is as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person to sell, barter, exchange, or give away any of the aforesaid drugs except in pursuance of a written order of the person to whom such article is sold, bartered, exchanged, or given, on a form to be issued in blank for that purpose by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Every person who shall accept any such order, and in pursuance thereof shall sell, barter, exchange, or give away any of the aforesaid drugs, shall preserve such order for a period of two years in such a way as to be readily accessible to inspection by any officer, agent, or employee of the Treasury Department—

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Holls in the chair) Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. REED. I do. Mr. WORKS. May I ask the Senator from Missouri whether that particular phase of the drug act has been passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States? That provision seems

Mr. REED. I am unable to say whether or not it has been passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. WORKS. It has been suggested by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] that that falls under the taxing power, which is an altogether different question.

Mr. REED. I have already stated that this is attached to the internal-revenue feature of our Government; but notice, now, there is attached to that feature in our law something more than the mere collection of revenue. There is inserted the provision I have just read. Then it goes further, and pro-

Nothing contained in this section shall apply—

(a) To the dispensing or distribution of any of the aforesaid drugs to a patient by a physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon registered under this act in the course of his professional practice only: Provided, That such physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon shall keep a record of all such drugs dispensed or distributed, showing the amount dispensed or distributed, the date, and the name and address of the patient to whom such drugs are dispensed or distributed, except such as may be dispensed or distributed to a patient upon whom such physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon shall personally attend; and such record shall be kept for a period of two years from the date of dispensing or distributing such drugs, subject to inspection, as provided in this act.

(b) To the sale, dispensing, or distribution of any of the aforesaid drugs by a dealer to a consumer under and in pursuance of a written prescription issued by a physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon registered under this act: Provided, however, That such prescription shall be dated as of the day on which signed and shall be signed by the physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon who shall have issued the same: And provided further, That such dealer shall preserve such prescription for a period of two years from the day on which such prescription is filled in such a way as to be readily accessible to inspection by the officers, agents, employees, and officials hereinbefore mentioned.

mentioned.

So we go down to the doctor's office, we take control of it, and we say that he can not prescribe these medicines.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But you do not get the patient under that act.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; under that you get beyond the point of the commerce in the thing.

Mr. BORAH. Under the taxing clause.

Mr. REED. Under the taxing clause; and because we have the right to tax we have undertaken to say how we shall have a right to use it and the limitations upon it. That law is here. I can not say that it has been passed upon by the court; it may have been passed upon, but we have all been kept so busy we can not always read the court decisions and at the same time follow the business of the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will say to the Senator from Missouri it is in process of being passed upon now, because there are a great many prosecutions being brought all over the country for the violation of that very statute by physicians themselves.

Mr. BORAH. It is altogether probable, then, that the act has not yet been passed upon, or these people would have observed the law. It is likely that the act is being tested out; but that power being exercised under the taxing clause of the Constitution does not controvert the proposition at all.

Mr. REED. Well, the Government of the United States has power to say what shall go into interstate commerce; that is one power. It has the power to levy an internal-revenue tax; that is another power. Now, by strict construction we would say that the Government, having the power to regulate commerce, would have no other power to say what could and what could not be shipped in interstate commerce; but we all admit that the Government can go beyond that. The question is how far can it go? The Government has the right to levy an in-ternal-revenue tax, but would anyone say, as a matter of original reasoning, that that carried with it the right to enter a physician's office and say how he shall prescribe to his patients and what he shall do with his prescriptions thereafter? That has but a very remote relation to the matter of collecting the Government tax upon the cocaine or other drug within the prohibition of this act.

I certainly do not want to be a party to the enactment of a statute that is unconstitutional, first, because I believe that Congress is the guardian of the Constitution, and I have no patience with those who are willing to pass laws, constitutional I quorum of the Senate is present.

or unconstitutional, and to trust such laws to the courts; and, second, I do not want it, because an unconstitutional law gets us nowhere. I am in dead earnest about this proposition. I say that if the people of the States do not want liquor within their State the Government of the United States ought not to employ its powers under the interstate-commerce clause to break down the laws which have been passed by the people of that sovereign State. In like manner the people of a sovereign State ought not to enact laws prohibiting the manufacture and sale of liquor within their own State and then encourage people in other States to manufacture it, to sell it, and to ship it in interstate commerce, to the detriment of the people of that other State.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It seems to me the proposition can be defended upon this ground: Congress has power to regulate commerce among the States. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] expressed it very well, when he said that, of course, includes the power to police the channels of interstate commerce. Now, what we are attempting to do, if I understand it, by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] is to regulate that commerce in this article under certain conditions to the point of prohibiting it absolutely. Where you prohibt commerce in a certain article itself or upon the ground that in the exercise of the police power or the quasi-police power, whatever it may be, to which the Senator from Idaho has referred, it is a dangerous thing, and that the intention of Congress is to absolutely prevent it getting into that State, it makes it a crime to send it into that State. I think, then, under those circumstances, commerce having been prohibited in the article, that we can go to the extent of preventing a man from indulging in the commodity which the United States Government has absolutely prohibited to interstate commerce in the State. I am not sure about it, but I suggest that for the consideration of the Senator.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we have not very many Senators present now, and this seems to be a sort of a confidential matter between a few of us.

Mr. President, I am pretty well convinced that I can reach the object I have in view and yet escape the danger of the suggestion of an invasion of the Constitution. I therefore intend to offer the amendment in this modified form, if I may I therefore inhave the attention of Senators who have been giving this matter careful thought:

Whoever shall order, purchase, or cause intoxicating liquors to be transported in interstate commerce into any State or Territory the laws of which State or Territory prohibit the manufacture or sale therein of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, and whoever shall within any such State or Territory receive or knowingly sell or purchase or give away any such liquors so transported in interstate commerce shall be punished as aforesaid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones]. To that amendment the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] has offered an amendment, which he now modifies. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment as modified.

The Secretary. In the amendment of Mr. Jones, on page 2, line 16, after the word "addressed," it is proposed to insert the following:

Whoever shall order, purchase, or cause intoxicating liquors to be transported in interstate commerce into any State or Territory, the laws of which State or Territory prohibit the manufacture or sale therein of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, and whoever shall within any such State or Territory receive or knowingly sell or purchase or give away any such liquors so transported in interstate commerce shall be punished as aforesaid.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEA of Tennessee in the chair). Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, a Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to ask if this proposed amendment is divisible?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] to the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. What is the question of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BORAH. The question is whether the proposed amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the Senator from Washington is divisible. I desire to vote for one part of it, but I hesitate to vote for the other part.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the amendment be again read to the Senate, so that we can see whether or not it is divisible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment of Mr. Reed to the amendment of Mr. Jones.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it seems to me there are two distinct propositions there. If not, the whole amendment is in

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I think it is divisible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is attempting to find out whether the Vice President has ruled upon this question or whether it has been raised.

Mr. BRYAN. Rule XVIII settles that. It may be divided upon the request of any Senator.

Mr. BEFFD. I was no objection to the division of the Sena-

Mr. REED. I make no objection to the division, if the Senator desires that it should be submitted in that way.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri interposes no objection to the division of the question, I ask, if it will meet the approval of the Chair, that the question be divided.

divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question has not been decided heretofore. So the present occupant of the chair will hold that the question is divisible.

Mr. BORAH. Then I ask for a division of the question.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then let the language of the first branch of the amendment to the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

requested.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, of course with the question divided the penalty clause contained in the last line will have to be read · in conjunction with the first branch of the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. That can be reconstructed.
Mr. REED. Very well.
Mr. GALLINGER. It occurred to me that probably it would have to be rewritten to some extent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the first branch of the proposed amendment to the amendment. The Secretary read as follows:

Whoever shall order, purchase, or cause intoxicating liquors to be transported in interstate commerce into any State or Territory the laws of which State or Territory prohibit the manufacture or sale therein of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes—

Mr. REED. Now add the penalty clause.

The Secretary read as follows:

shall be punished as aforesaid.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Missouri has cited in the course of his argument upon this question the case of North Carolina. I want to call his attention to the fact that his amendment, as it seems to me, would not cover a State having such a law as North Carolina has, because the State of North Carolina prohibits the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes. Mr. REED. " "Therein," but permits liquor to be sent from the outside.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then it would cover that State. Mr. BRYAN and others. Question!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the first branch of the amendment as divided.

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays. Mr. VARDAMAN. I am going to ask that the amendment be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the first branch of the amendment as divided.

The Secretary rend as follows:

Whoever shall order, purchase, or cause intoxicating liquors to be transported in interstate commerce into any State or Territory the laws of which State or Territory prohibit the manufacture or sale therein of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes shall be punished as aforesaid.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Where does that come in the amendment which has been proposed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It comes in on page 2, line 16, after the word "addressed," of the amendment heretofore offered by the Senator from Washington. The yeas and nays have been asked for. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Hardwick], who is absent on account of illness. I therefore withhold my vote. Were I at liberty to vote I should vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Thomas] being absent from the Chamber, and having a pair with him, I withhold my vote.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Warren]. I notice that he is not here and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). In the absence of my pair, the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], I withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Sout! Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Has the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. THOMAS. I withhold my vote, then, as I have a pair with that Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whoever shall, within any such State or Territory, receive or knowingly sell or purchase or give away any such liquors so transported in interstate commerce shall be punished as aforesaid.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that it occurs to me that the word "knowingly" should be ahead of the word "receive." As I heard it read, it follows the word "receive" and only applies to acts after receiving. Will the Secretary read the amendment again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. REED. The Senator's criticism is correct. The word knowingly "should be transposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes

Mr. KENYON. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The year and mays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

So the second part of Mr. REED's amendment was rejected. Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I move to strike out on line 3, page 2, the word "Whoever," and insert "Any publisher or officer or agent of a publisher or a publishing company" who shall knowingly deposit, and so forth. If this is confined to publishers of newspapers or agents of publishers, the offense can be well located, and the law can be fairly enforced without any injustice; but if any individual who mails a publication is liable to prosecution for offending against this law, it seems to me the door will be wide open for blackmail.

Smith, Ariz.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I vield.

VARDAMAN. Suppose the whisky dealer should put an advertisement in a paper, and should then take it upon himself to relieve the publisher by circulating the paper. It would seem to me to nullify and defeat altogether the purpose of the

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think in that case he would become the agent of the publisher for the circulation of the paper. There is not under the postal laws, however, much opportunity for an advertiser to circulate any large number of papers in this way.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that he would have to entirely reframe the first section of the amendment, because even if the change suggested by him is made the first part of the amendment makes it an equal offense for anybody to mail a letter containing an order or a postal card; and the section which the Senator is trying to amend makes it an offense to do anything in violation of the first section or the first page of the amendment. If the Senator will read the first page of the amendment, he will more clearly comprehend the point which I suggest to him, I think.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it is possibly open to some objection of that sort; but I think if liquor dealers issue any considerable number of postal cards for advertising purposes they become publishers of the postal cards.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; but my point is that it is not the liquor dealer issuing the cards; it is the man who sends an individual order for liquors from a dry State into a wet State that is prohibited by the first section of the bill. But the Senator's amendment would leave it very much confused unless he redrafted the language on the first page—the first two or three lines of the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask that the amendment be stated from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. While the amendment is being sent to the desk, I wish to ask the Senator if the effect of his amendment is not to leave the liquor dealer the privilege of having just as many circulars used to flood the State as he sees fit, provided they are not newspapers?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will ask the Secretary to read it as amended, and see if that idea is conveyed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment

The Secretary. On page 2, line 3, it is proposed to strike out the word "Whoever" and to insert "Any publisher or officer or agent of a publisher or of a publishing company," so as to read:

Any publisher or officer or agent of a publisher or of a publishing company who shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section, or shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, in answer to the question of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], I think the liquor dealer who causes to be printed any considerable number of postal cards for distribution through the mails would become as much the publisher of those postal cards as the printer who sends out a newspaper; and if not, it might be so amended as to reach such cases. What I am seeking by this amendment to avoid is an obvious danger and evil in this amendment-that individuals who send newspapers through the mails to friends, to correspondents, or for other business purposes are liable to arrest and prosecution in case those newspapers contain certain advertisements. Now, it is true that they will be acquitted on prosecution if it can not be proven that they knew that the advertisements were in the newspapers; but the great evil which I suppose these reformers seek to reach is the distribution by wholesale of newspapers containing liquor advertisements, and this amendment of mine will put a stop to that.

Of course my own private opinion is that the reform will not come exactly in the way that some of these reformers expect. think, for instance, that it will not stop the publishers of New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago newspapers from accepting liquor advertisements. I think it will lead those publishers to stop sending the newspapers into the States that have those restrictive laws, because the newspapers will lose less in that way than they will lose by sacrificing the liquor advertisements.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield. Mr. TOWNSEND. Under the Senator's amendment, what would prevent a liquor dealer or any other person from buying up all the copies of a newspaper at a news stand and sending them out as he sees fit into dry territory?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There would be several things that would interfere with it. In the first place, he would be required to put at least 1 cent postage on each newspaper; in the second place, he would find difficulty in getting any considerable number of papers to distribute in that way. any value advertising has to be on a large scale, and my own judgment is that an individual who made an arrangement with a newspaper to send out any wholesale amount of papers would in that way become the agent of the newspaper. The laws prohibit the newspaper from sending out more than a small number of sample copies. As I have proposed to amend this amendment it would make it impossible for publishers who accept liquor advertisements to send their newspapers into the States which prohibit such advertisements; and I suppose that that is the evil sought to be reached.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. WORKS. Under the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, what would prevent a liquor dealer from sending his advertisements by postal card or by circular? Does the Senator think that he would in that way become the publisher within the meaning of this amendment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My judgment is that he would become as much the publisher of such a circular as the publisher of a newspaper. At least, if the Senator thinks this language would not cover the case, it could be so provided; but the evil

I seek to get at is this:

Under the loosely framed amendment which is now before the Senate it is quite conceivable that a large number of prose cutions might be undertaken against people who had merely sent a number of newspapers through the mail into States where they were not admissible.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am very much afraid that in construing this amendment a narrower meaning would be given to the word "publisher," which would confine it to some one engaged in the publishing business, and that it would not cover the case that I suggest.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the law, if it prohibits newspapers, ought to prohibit anyone from sending circulars; but what I think this law ought to do is not to make it possible for designing persons to file complaints against individuals and prosecute them for mailing papers containing advertisements. Now, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Thomas] said, there can be no conviction unless it is shown that the individual who mails such a paper does it knowingly; but the way this amendment is framed now, the prosecution could occur, and according to another provision in the same law the man who mails a paper, say, in the State of New York can be taken across the country possibly to Oregon or to any State far away in which the advertising of liquor is illegal and prosecuted there, thousands of miles from his home.

It seems to me such a condition would be intolerable. I think the law which these reformers desire to have passed is designed to keep out of a State systematic advertising which is contrary to the laws of the State; and it ought not to be made to apply to individuals merely sending a stray paper occasionally into such a State. If some other form of this amendment can be suggested, of course it would be all right; but certainly, as it is framed now, the law is a dangerous thing. It is likely to be used for purposes of blackmail. It is likely to impose great hardships on people entirely innocent of any intention to commit an offense.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the amendment that the Senator suggests would practically nullify one of the purposes of this amendment, which is not only to prevent the sending through the mail of newspaper advertisements, but the sending through the mail of personal letters, postal cards, and all that sort of things, into the homes of the country.

The Senator suggests that this is a loosely drafted provision. It is anything but that. It is almost word for word section 213 of our Criminal Code, relating to lottery advertisements, and was framed on that; and that section was changed only in so far as was necessary to make it applicable to put

In connection with the criticism the Senator makes in regard to taking some person across the country for trial, I think I this section so that the Senator will see what we provided with reference to that and how it compares with this. This section of the Criminal Code has been in force a great many years, and there have not been any of the hardships that the Senator predicted would come out of that.

Mr. NORRIS. Was that done by reformers?
Mr. JONES. I do not know whether reformers adopted it or not. I imagine that persons who are interested in the welfare of the country and the people of the country, just as the Senator from Nebraska is, were responsible for it.

Section 213 of the Criminal Code is as follows:

No letter, package, postal card, or circular concerning any lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance; and no lottery ticket or part thereof, or paper, certificate, or instrument purporting to be or to represent a ticket, chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of a lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance; and no check, draft, bill, money, postal note, or money order for the purchase of any ticket or part thereof, or of any share or chance in any such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme; and no newspaper, circular, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of any lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or containing any list of the prizes drawn or awarded by means of any such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme, whether said list contains any part or all of such prizes, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier.

Now, then, how do we provide for a penalty?

That is, whether the publisher of a newspaper or other-

Whoever shall knowingly deposit, or cause to be deposited, or shall knowingly send, or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section, or shall knowingly deliver, or cause to be delivered, by mall anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both; and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not more than five years.

The penalty is exactly as provided in this amendment originally, to which some Senators took such violent exception.

Now, then, with reference to the punishment for violation of this act, here is the language that is word for word as it is in the amendment that I have proposed:

Any person violating any provision of this section may be tried and punished either in the district in which the unlawful matter or publication was mailed, or to which it was carried by mail for delivery according to the direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it was addressed.

Mr. President, I do not care to say anything more about this amendment. I hope the amendment will be satisfactory to the

Mr. NORRIS. May I suggest to the Senator that while I favor the amendment, I do not believe the amendment to the amendment ought to be adopted in the shape it is in now. I can see, I think, a vast difference between the pending amendment and the lottery proposition. In the lottery act it was the intention, and there was no doubt it had the effect, to absolutely preclude advertisements of lotteries in newspapers, because the act excluded such newspapers from the mails so that there should be no more advertising in newspapers of lottery matter. The amendment we are now considering does not pretend to exclude them from the mails except partially. They are admitted in certain States and they are excluded in certain other States. So papers will be published containing liquor advertisements. The danger is where they are published legally in a State, where they have a right to publish them, some innocent person will mail a copy of the paper, legally published in a State where it may be legally sent through the mails, and send a copy of that paper into some other State through the mails where it is illegal for such papers to be admitted. It seems to me, therefore, that that is a great danger. It is a common practice, as the Senator knows, to send from one State to another to friends a copy of a newspaper without thinking of the paper having an advertisement or some other article in it than the one in the mind of the sender. I get daily, and I presume every other Senator gets, from all over the United States papers containing some editorial or some article that the writer wants to call to my particular attention. Your own children send them from the place where you live into other States to friends calling attention to something-advertising the town, it may be. If that paper should contain a liquor advertisement and be sent into a State, where the sender would perhaps have no knowledge of the law, it might be a crime, and under this amendment that person might be taken to the State to which it was. sent, as I understand it, for trial. Persons could be extradited from one State to another, and while at a trial they would be cleared, it seems to me there is great danger of an innocent person being arrested under that kind of a law, and it might be done for the purpose of revenge or spite, perhaps

I am in sympathy, and the Senator knows it, with the amendment, yet I do not want to go so far as to jeopardize absolutely innocent people. I should like to see it confined to papers sent by the publisher and then include in a separate provision circulars, and so forth, that had no other object except the advertising of liquor. That, it seems to me, would avoid an objection which to my mind is serious. Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I recognize the force of the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska, but we can not pass any criminal statute or any statute providing a penalty for a violation of a certain act without the possibility of some injury coming to innocent persons. Anyone can make a charge against anybody and hale him into court either upon a civil proceeding or in a criminal proceeding. We can not prevent that by the terms of the law. I can see how, if the terms of this law were made less restrictive, it would lead to its practical nullification.

When this measure was in the Senate a few days ago it was fully considered and passed by the Senate. Of course, I do not claim the authorship of the measure. As a matter of fact, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] introduced the measure, and it was considered in the committee.

brought into the Senate and was here considered, amendments were adopted, some of them upon the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska, and after that action it was sent to the House. Of course, it is almost impossible for us to change the law in any material respect without rewriting it, and we can not do that on the floor of the Senate here. It seems to me that in a measure which has had the consideration this measure has had, while we can see where injustice could be done, it is framed in as good way as we can get it.

I do not desire to take the time of the Senate further.

Mr. BRYAN. It is the same as the bill which passed the Senate?

Mr. JONES. Identically the same, word for word.

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to offer a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. I gather from his argument that the main wrong they are trying to remedy is the advertising of liquors in dry States. I therefor offer an amendment, so that it will read: "Whoever shall knowingly for the purpose of advertising liquors"; then further down, "shall knowingly for the purpose of advertising liquors deliver or cause to be delivered." In other words, I propose to limit the crime not only to the knowledge of the contents of the article but to the sending of it through the mails for the purpose of advertising liquors

I will ask the Senator if this is offered Mr. GALLINGER.

as an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. PITTMAN. I offer it as an amendment by way of a substitute.

Mr. GALLINGER. A separate amendment?

Mr. PITTMAN. A separate amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. After the amendment pending has been acted on

Mr. PITTMAN. I offer it really as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, if it is in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should think it would not be in order. The VICE PRESIDENT. It would not be in order, because it comes in at different places in the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will offer it after the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment has been acted on.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am inclined to think the substitute which the Senator from Nevada proposes would avoid some of the criticisms that are made against my amendment, and would in effect put a stop to depositing in the mails either newspapers or circulars sent into a State for advertising liquors in violation of law. I therefore withdraw my amendment, and will let the Senate consider the amendment offered by the Senator from

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the proposed amendment be read. The Secretary. On page 2, line 3, after the word "knowingly," insert "for the purpose of advertising liquors"; in line 4, after the word "knowingly," insert the same words; and in line 6 the same amendment, so as to read:

Whoever shall knowingly for the purpose of advertising liquors deposit or cause to be deposited or shall knowingly for the purpose of advertising liquors send or cause to be sent anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section, or shall knowingly for the purpose of advertising liquors deliver or cause to be delivered, etc.

Mr. GALLINGER. "Whoever shall knowingly for the purpose of advertising liquors." It seems to me that a man sending a publication through the mail might well say that he did not send it for that purpose, that he sent it for the benefit of his subscribers, not for the purpose of advertising his wares. I think that would be a fatal amendment. I suggest to the Senator from Washington if he allows it to go into the bill, or if the Senate does, he might as well withdraw the whole

Mr. JONES. I am sure it will not go through with my con-

Mr. PITTMAN. That might be said with regard to all criminal law unless you wish to convict somebody upon an indictment without proof. The question of proof would be as to whether or not the person sent the paper into a dry territory with the intent and purpose of advertising liquor. If it is the intent of this measure to convict an innocent person who has nothing to do with the liquor business, who has no interest in the advertising of liquor, who will make no profit by the advertisement of liquor, then I am absolutely opposed to any such bill. I am opposed to passing a measure that will submit an innocent purchaser to proceed the process of the process o innocent purchaser to prosecution under this law. I would rather allow some guilty person to escape through the failure proof than that numerous disinterested persons who have nothing to do with liquor should be prosecuted under the provisions of a loosely and carelessly drawn law.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I think the Senate adopted

Mr. JONES. I hope the Senator will wait until we dispose of the amendment that is pending.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will do that.

Mr. JONES. I hope the amendment pending will be voted

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it, and the amendment is lost.

Mr. JAMES. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names.

Ashurst	Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Hitcheock	Nelson	Smoot
Beckham	Hughes	Norris	Sutherland

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is this the Jones amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Jones amendment.

Mr. JAMES. I think the question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was a vote on that.

Mr. JAMES. No; I made the point of no quorum before the Chair announced the vote, I think.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair had announced that the amendment was lost. If the Senator wants to call for the yeas and nays, the Chair will entertain it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Before the yeas and nays are ordered I wish to ask the Senator from Washington if he will not, at the end of line 2, before the word "advertisement," insert the word "paid." I suggest that for the reason I have been informed—I do not know whether it is a fact or not—that many of the newspapers are afraid the word "advertisement" may be stretched so as to include those news articles and editorial utterances that deal with the liquor question, bringing it into prominence, and so forth. I suppose, really, what the measure now means is paid advertisements, is it not?

Mr. JONES. It means what we generally understand by advertisements. I do not think it would include editorial expressions or opinions, or anything of that sort, strictly construed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is a very severe penalty. I move that the word "paid" be inserted before the word "advertisement."
Mr. JONES. I do not think I can accept that amendment. I do not think that it includes the things the Senator has referred to at all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand the Senator from Washington does not accept it. Therefore I have made the motion that it be inserted.

Mr. JONES. I hope it will be voted down.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it, and the amendment to the amendment is rejected. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would cheerfully vote for that part of the amendment which was proposed by the Senator from Missouri, but I do not think that all the newspapers of the country which are published in the States which have not in the exercise of their own right and under their own laws gone dry should be boycotted from circulating outside of their own States. I can not, therefore, support that part of the amend-ment which is known as the Jones amendment. Now that the Senator from Missouri has annexed his amendment to it, I am compelled to vote against the entire proposition. If the Senator from Missouri will offer his amendment afterwards, if the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] should not carry, as a separate amendment, I would cheerfully vote for it, because I do believe that the Congress of the United States ought not to allow interstate railroads and the mail carried by them to circulate liquor advertisements to carry liquor into the States which have voted that they will not have liquor in their States. Take all the large cities of our country, take the city of New York, with its great metropolitan dailies, New York is not a prohibition State. Those papers circulate all over the I think it is very drastic for Congress to say that papers published legally under the laws of their States shall be limited in their circulation to the boundaries of their own States. These great daily papers are national institutions. New York State desires to have the license system or if my State of Connecticut, exercising its privileges through its license under its own home-rule laws and style of self-government, think it is better for us to have local option, and have each community decide this question for itself, and the State decides it for itself, I do not think all the newspapers in my State of Connecticut should be prohibited by the United States Government from going outside of the boundaries of that State if they contain a liquor advertisement of what is now a lawful industry in my State. Therefore I can not support this amend-

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I think the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] was agreed to under a misapprehension or a misunderstanding of the extent to which it goes. Now, listen to the reading:

Whoever shall order, purchase, or cause intoxicating liquors to be transported in interstate commerce into any State or Territory the laws of which State or Territory prohibit the manufacture or sale therein of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes * * * shall be punished as aforesaid.

I voted for this thinking that it prohibited the importation of liquors for beverage purposes; but any State that prohibits the importation of liquor for beverage purposes under this amendment, if it should become a law, could not import liquors for sacramental, scientific, medicinal, or mechanical purposes, and I am going to ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which it was adopted. I will move to amend the amendment by inserting, after the word "purposes," in next to the last line, "except for scientific, sacramental, medicinal, or mechanical purposes."

Mr. CLAPP. Why does not the Senator take the first part of the amendment, where the prohibition occurs, and insert "for use as a beverage," which will accomplish the same result with very much less language?

Mr. VARDAMAN. This is the only place I find where it will come in and make sense. That is the reason why I did not do it. I think the other way is better.

Mr. CLAPP. Very well. I just suggested it for brevity's sake.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I move this amendment. Mr. GALLINGER. The amendment will have to be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is not in order unless the original amendment is reconsidered.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is what I thought.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of making any objection to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], but I wish to ask him if it is not true that under the decision of the Supreme Court on the Webb-Kenyon law the State may by a vote of its people or by an enactment of its legislature provide that whisky shall not be shipped into the State for any purpose. If the State should so provide, then the Federal right of interstate commerce ceases at the State lines, and nothing of any sort of an intoxicating character is allowed to be shipped into the State. In other words, is not the State absolutely sovereign upon this question?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not want to leave any doubt about it. I am quite sure that there is not a Member of the Senate who wants to prohibit alcohol for scientific, medicinal, and mechanical purposes. I am also very sure that no Senator desires to prohibit wine for sacramental purposes. There is no necessity for running any risk. The matter is now in the hands of the Senate, and I move that the vote by which the amendment was adopted be reconsidered. I think I am in order to do that. I voted for the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi moves that the vote whereby the amendment was adopted be reconsidered. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I now move to insert, after the word "purpose," the words "except for scientific, sacramental, medicinal, and mechanical purposes." That coves it, I hope.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is not that an amendment in the third degree? It occurs to me that an amendment in the third degree is not allowable under our rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire raise the point of order?

Mr. GALLINGER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained. It is an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the point of order? The VICE PRESIDENT. That it is an amendment in the third degree. The Jones amendment is one, the Reed amendment is two, and the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I offered this amendment in good faith. I did not offer it for the purpose of putting up an impossible law. It was drawn hastily here while the debate was on. I did not intend to deny the people of a State the right to have liquor for sacramental purposes or for mechanical or medicinal purposes. In order to perfect my amendment I ask now to have the words inserted in it which were offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Vardaman].

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think we can do that. It will have to be amended in the Senate if amended at all. The amendment has been adopted.

Mr. REED. It has been reconsidered.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The vote has been reconsidered by which it was adopted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Missouri can modify his own amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. He can modify his amendment. Mr. REED. That is what I am asking to do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the Senator from Missouri can modify his amendment. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On the fourth line of the amendment, after the words "interstate commerce," insert "except for scientific, sacramental, medicinal, and mechanical," so that the amendment will read:

Whoever shall order, purchase, or cause intoxicating liquors to be transported in interstate commerce except for scientific, sacramental, medicinal, and mechanical purposes into any State or Territory, the laws of which State or Territory prohibit the manufacture or sale therein of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, shall be punished

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. REED. Let it be reported as now modified. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will now state the modified amendment.

The Secretary. After the words "interstate commerce" it is proposed to insert the words "except for scientific, sacramental, medicinal, and mechanical purposes," so that the amendment will read:

Whoever shall order, purchase, or cause intoxicating liquors to be transported in interstate commerce, except for scientific, sacramental, medicinal, and mechanical purposes into any State or Territory, the laws of which State or Territory prohibit the manufacture and sale therein of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, shall be punished as aforesaid.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as modified to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the amendment as amended.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before we vote on the amendment as amended, I hope to enlist the attention of the Senate a moment to its provisions. We have discussed it with reference to its effect upon the publishers of newspapers, and I do not intend to again go over that question. The Senate is advised with reference to it. But let us observe just what might happen under this bill to others who are not the publishers of newspapers. The amendment reads:

That no letter, postal card, circular, newspaper, painphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind * * shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States.

That would prohibit an advertisement of wine for sacramental purposes; it would prohibit an advertisement of alcohol for mechanical purposes; it would prohibit an advertisement of any of these things for any purpose, however meritorious.

Mr. President, returning to my remarks, that is one phase of the question that ought to be considered; but there is another. The amendment further provides:

Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section, or shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

I want only a minute on this; but I do think if Senators will consider it they certainly will amend the proposition be-fore adopting it. What we meant by the term "knowingly send"? Is it not entirely possible, under this provision, that if an individual should send a magazine containing an article advertising liquor he could be held as a criminal, although he had no purpose in sending that article to distribute the liquor advertise-What is meant, I repeat, by the term "knowingly send "? He knows that he sends the paper, the pamphlet, the document. Would a court hold that he had to know that it contained a liquor advertisement? I wish I might have the attention of the author of this amendment, the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones].

Mr. JONES. I am listening to the Senator from Missouri. Mr. REED. No; the Senator from Washington was listening to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

Mr. JONES. I was listening to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Well, it was a divided attention. Mr. JONES. I caught both of them all right.

Mr. REED. Would not this amendment go far enough if it provided that any person who should, with the intention of distributing such advertisements, send the document containing it through the mails?

Mr. JONES. I think this measure is just about right.

Well, "Ephraim is joined to his idols; let him Mr. REED. Under this amendment as now drawn it would be, in my opinion, entirely possible to send to the penitentiary an individual who should have simply put into the mail a document which happened to contain a liquor advertisement, whether or not he knew the advertisement was therein printed. Certain it is that if he should happen to know the advertisement was in the paper he could be sent to jail or to the penitentiary, even though his purpose in sending the document out was not to advertise liquor at all, but simply to convey certain information which might be found in some article printed in the publication. That is extreme; that is, in my judgment, unreasonable; and an extreme or unreasonable law never makes for the success of any good movement. I thought the suggestion to the Senator from Washington would be sufficient.

I would be willing to vote to stop the sending of advertisements into "dry" territory by men engaged in the liquor business, because they send such advertisements into "dry" territory for the very purpose of defeating the object of the prohibition laws of the State, but when you propose to put upon the statute books a law under which a man not interested in the liquor business, having no desire to promote the liquor business, may be sent to the penitentiary because he mails a paper or a pamphlet that happens to contain an advertisement for liquor, you are going beyond the limits of reason and justice, and I shall be forced, if the proposition stands as it now is, to vote

In order to test the sense of the Senate upon this matter, I move, Mr. President, on line 3, page 2, of the amendment, after the word "knowingly," to insert the words "for the purpose of advertising intoxicating liquors or promoting the sale thereof," so that the sentence will read:

Whoever shall knowingly, for the purpose of advertising intoxicating quors or promoting the sale thereof, deposit or cause to be de-

And so forth.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will repeat what I said a few moments ago, that if the amendment just suggested by the Senator from Missouri is agreed to, all a publisher would have to say would be that he sent his paper for the benefit of his subscribers; that he did not send it for the purpose of advertising the wares of the liquor dealer; but that he had another and an entirely different purpose. The adoption of the amendment, if it be adopted, will entirely nullify the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington, in my judgment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire is in error. If the language which I propose were in the first part of the bill, which applies to the publisher, then his criticism would be correct; but it is placed in the bill where it is limited to those who shall knowingly deposit a paper or other publication in the mails. The first part of the amendment prohibits the sending of these things. The clause that I am seeking to amend affixes a criminal penalty for those who shall knowingly deposit an article. It applies not only to the publisher, but it applies to everybody.

It seems to me that even a newspaper publisher could not escape under this, because when he prints an advertisement he knows that the object and purpose of it is to promote the sale of liquor. He prints it with that knowledge. That is the sole purpose of an advertisement; but when a man sends a paper through the mails to some friend or business associate he does not do it for the purpose of promoting the sale of liquor, but he does it for the purpose of conveying some other information contained in the paper.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.
Mr. NORRIS. I think I am in sympathy with the point the Senator from Missouri is trying to reach; but I want to call his attention to the fact that there is no penalty provided for the violation of the act except the one that he is seeking to amend. Consequently the language that he attempts to insert would apply to the publisher of the newspaper the same as it would to an individual who was sending such paper to a friend. Therefore, it seems to me, the objection made to the amendment by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] would be

Mr. REED. I think it would not, for the reason that I gave. namely, that the newspaper man in printing the advertisement and putting it into his paper does it for the purpose of aiding the liquor dealer in selling his wares, whereas the ordinary individual does not.

Mr. NORRIS. But the publisher deposits his paper in the post office just the same as does the individual; and under the language which the Senator seeks to put in the bill it would be necessary to prove that the publisher did it with the intention of advertising intoxicating liquor; and he could answer, I think, as the Senator from New Hampshire has stated.

I suggested a while ago that some such amendment ought to be adopted to apply to the individual who might send a paper through the mails and innocently be brought into a great deal of trouble on account of this law. Therefore, the language that the Senator seeks to put in ought to be so framed that it would not apply to the publisher of a newspaper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I hope that that amendment to the amendment will not be adopted, Mr. President. That is all I care to say

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the author of the amendment a question. Washington is a "dry" State, is it not?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. If, for instance, the Senator's wife should visit California and should send to him in Washington a newspaper containing a statement of fact which she desired the Senator to have knowledge of, if she had no knowledge that the paper contained an advertisement of liquor, but in fact it did contain one, would she be guilty of an offense under the provisions of this amendment?

Mr. JONES. She would not.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why?

Mr. JONES. Because she would not have done so knowingly. She would not send the advertisement knowingly.

Mr. ROBINSON. If she knew the advertisement was in the paper and sent it to the Senator for the purpose of communicating to him facts relating to matters of interest to him, and had no desire to transmit advertisements of liquor, would that constitute an offense?

Mr. JONES. I hardly think so; but even if it would it would be a mere technical violation, and there are a great many technical violations of criminal laws. I do not think it would be a violation.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the Senator's objection to so wording the amendment that such an act would not come within its

Mr. JONES. I doubt very much if the amendment the Senator from Missouri proposes would accomplish that object without opening the door to a great many much worse things.

Mr. ROBINSON. That may be true; but that does not answer my question. If it is possible under this amendment to indict a citizen for such an action as I have described in my question to the Senator from Washington, the amendment ought to be modified so that an indictment would not lie in such case No one who is furthering this legislation, I take it, would object to such modification.

Mr. JONES. I do not think any indictment would lie under such circumstances; but, of course, a charge might be made against some one.

Mr. REED. The Senator may say that, in his opinion, an indictment would not lie, but the language of the amendment would cover the act just described by the Senator from Arkansas

Mr. JONES. I do not think so.

Mr. REED. It would. The person charged would have knowingly put in the mails an advertisement of liquor and, having done that, the offense would be complete.

Mr. JONES. We can conjure up all possible dangers, of course, in connection with a proposed law of this character.

Mr. REED. When you write a law you should conjure up, if you have any sense, the things that are likely to happen under it. Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. JONES. I am perfectly willing to allow the suggestion the Senator from Missouri has made to this bill to be considered in the light of the facts presented.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Washington will permit me to make a statement in connection with his remarks in regard to conjuring up every possible evil, I wish to state that the newspapers in California in all probability carry liquor advertisements, because, if I am correctly informed, liquor is at present sold in California, and it is quite likely that no general newspaper published in that State is without some liquor advertisements. So that, if it became desirable to send to the Senator in a "dry" State a newspaper from some one in a "wet" State, the probability is that that newspaper would contain liquor advertisements, and the very condition that I have asked the Senator about would in practice actually arise. So I do not think that I am conjuring up anything, but I am asking a practical question.

Now, what I can not understand is this: No one who knows the Senator from Washington questions his sincerity in advocating prohibition legislation, and I am in sympathy with his effort to have a fair amendment adopted to prevent the circulation of liquor advertisements in prohibition territory; but I submit to the Senator from Washington that he can very easily modify his amendment so as to make it free from the objection.

Mr. JONES. The Senator says that it can be easily modified. If the Senator can suggest any amendment that will meet it without opening up the door to violations of the law, I will certainly accept it, so far as that is concerned; but we have to be mighty careful with legislation of this character.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator is familiar with this subject, and I do not think that one who has not given special study to it could submit the necessary amendment on the instant.

Mr. JONES. I have tried to think of some changes that might be made to meet a situation like that, but I must say might be made to meet a situation like that, but I must say I have been unable to do so without opening wide the door and practically nullifying the proposed law.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to warn the Senator from Washington to be careful about these amendments that are being offered. My friend the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] suggests that if the wife of the Senator from Washington were in California and mailed to him a paper containing a liquor advertisement—if she knowingly did so—she would be guilty; but I apprehend that the Senator's wife uses scissors, as most of us do and if there was a liquor advertisement. sors, as most of us do, and if there was a liquor advertisement she could easily clip it from the paper or she could clip the article that she wanted to call attention to and send that. I think there will be no trouble about it.

And she would very likely do so. I am not

Mr. JONES. And she wor worrying over that situation.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I believe the amendment permits the admission of liquor into the "dry" States for medicinal purposes. As a lover of humanity, I am prompted to say that I am alarmed when I stop to ponder how human ailments will multiply in that territory. [Laughter.] Ninety-five per cent of these "dry" men will have pains beyond description which they will try to assauge. [Laughter.] The counsel of St. Paul to Timothy, "Use a little wine for thy stomach's sake," will be on nearly every lip and tongue. They will be pleading for some gap, some loophole, whereby they may assuage their situation.

To my mind the whole situation has really become ridiculous and absurd. I can not imagine, as I said this morning, how a sane man, blessed with personal liberty all his life, and not interfered with by his fellows, can propose to establish lish such drastic and unreasonable regulations. God be with you, for I think your dreams must be nightmares. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, the amendment known as the Jones amendment, if it shall become a law, of course, will make it a crime for anybody to have a copy of his home paper containing liquor advertisements mailed to him in the District of Columbia. If legislation now pending, and which has already passed this body, becomes a law, I think that is correct. I will ask the Senator from Washington if that is not so?

Mr. JONES. I did not understand the question of the Senator.

Mr. HUGHES. We have already passed a certain bill with reference to prohibition in the District of Columbia. I have forgotten just how it deals with a proposition of this kind, but it would be against the law for anybody to mail a newspaper into the District of Columbia containing a liquor advertisement if that proposed legislation becomes a law.

Mr. JONES. No; we have not provided in that bill, as I understand, any prohibition as to advertising. We did not put in any provision prohibiting liquor advertisements in the papers, and all that my amendment relates to is territory where such advertising is prohibited by local law.

Mr. HUGHES. How many such States are there, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. JONES. I do not know just how many, but I think 13 or 14, or possibly more. Quite a good many of the States have adopted such legislation.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not know whether the bill which we passed with reference to prohibition in the District of Columbia contains any provision of that sort.

Mr. JONES. I am very sure that it does not.
Mr. HUGHES. The Senator is sure, and, of course, I will accept his assurance on that point.

One or two Senators have called attention to the fact that there may easily occur a great many innocent violations of this proposed legislation, and that is met by the suggeston that the word "knowingly" will operate to prevent a man who innocently violates the law from being convicted. It is very true that it is going to be extremely difficult to convict anybody under the language of this provision. Nobody is going to be con-victed, in all human probability, under the language of this amendment, just as very few people have been or ever will be convicted under the language of the white-slave act.

This proposed legislation, however, will, if enacted, open up another door to blackmailers all over the United States. people may be in a position to prove perhaps before a petit jury that they did not knowingly commit a certain act, or may be in such a position that the Federal prosecutor could not possibly prove that they did knowingly do so; but, nevertheless, there is nothing to prevent a harsh and relentless Federal prosecutorand there are some of them in this country who get practically 100 per cent of indictments in the cases which they lay before their selected and hand-picked juries-from getting an indictment and nothing to prevent him from getting before the same kind of a petit jury perhaps a conviction. Any lawyer or any man who has ever sat as a criminal judge knows, that under a fair administration of this proposed law it would be practically impossible in any event to secure a conviction in such a case as has been suggested here, but petit juries do not always give the language of the law the consideration that they should give it, and innocent persons may suffer, although I think it will be very difficult to secure convictions under the proposed act. However, the fact remains that it will be possible to secure indictments under this measure of innocent persons who may be haled into court and tried, and the question of their guilt or their innocence, their liberty, or their forfeiture of liberty, submitted to the tender mercies of a Federal jury, thousands and thousands of miles away from their homes, perhaps. It seems to me that this is carrying the desire to stop people from drinking whisky to unheard-of lengths, and I intend to vote against the amendment.

Mr. REED. I desire to withdraw the amendment which I

Mr. REED. I desire to withdraw the amendment which I last offered and to offer another in lieu of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has that right.

Mr. REED. Then I withdraw it; and, on page 2, line 3, I move to strike out the word "whoever" and insert the following: If the publisher of any newspaper or any other publication or the agent of such publisher or if any dealer in said liquors or his agents shall—

Then, taking the language of the amendment-knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited-

And so forth.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I inquire as to whether or not the former amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri was agreed to? I think it was.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was.

Mr. GALLINGER. If so, I would like to have the amendment the Senator from Missouri now suggests read in connection with it. I think it will not be quite as the Senator would wish to

Mr. REED. Does the Senator refer to the amendment that offered a moment ago?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; and which was agreed to, as I

Mr. REED. I do not think it has been agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would like to have that read in conjunction with the amendment the Senator now offers.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment now offered by the Senator from Missouri again read. did not catch where it was to come in.

Mr. REED. The Senator from New Hampshire has preferred a request.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I should like to have read first the amendment that was agreed to, and then the proposed amendment. I think there will be found to be a conflict in the terms, or a duplication, one or the other.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment which has already been agreed to.

The SECRETARY. To the amendment of Mr. Jones, on page 2, line 16, after the word "addressed," the following amendment has been agreed to:

Whoever shall order, purchase, or cause intoxicating liquors to be transported in interstate commerce, except for scientific, sacramental, medicinal, and mechanical purposes, into any State or Territory, the laws of which State or Territory prohibit the manufacture or sale therein of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, shall be punished as aforesald.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not the amendment which I thought had been agreed to.

Mr. REED. The amendment to which the Senator evidently refers I have withdrawn. Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has withdrawn that amendment?

Mr. REED. Yes. Now, answering the Senator from Washington, the amendment I have proposed is to strike out the word "whoever," in line 3, on page 2, and to insert the following language:

If the publisher of any newspaper or other publication or the agent of such publisher or if any dealer in said liquors or his agent shall—

Then follows the language-knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section—

And so forth.

Now, that will get the newspaper man who knowingly violates this law. It will get his agent. It will get the liquor dealer who is violating the law. Every liquor dealer who is now engaged in circularizing a State, advertising his liquors, will be caught by that law if he sends the advertisements through the mails. Every newspaper publisher who intentionally and knowingly puts an advertisement in his paper and sends it into dry territory will be caught by the law. private individual who is neither a liquor dealer nor the agent of a liquor dealer, who is not a newspaper publisher or the agent of a newspaper publisher, who sends a paper through the mails will not be within the language of the act.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to hear it read once more.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 2, line 3, it is proposed to strike out the word "Whoever" and to insert in lieu thereof "If the publisher of any newspaper or other publication, or the agent of such publisher, or if any dealer in such liquors or his agent," so that it will read:

If the publisher of any newspaper or other publication, or the agent of such publisher, or if any dealer in such liquors, or his agent, shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section—

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, of course it is very difficult, on the floor here, to determine just what the effect of the amendment may be. That amendment reads very well to me. I do not want to have legislation passed that is likely to result in what some of the Senators fear might happen under it; and I do not want to put any friend of this legislation in the attitude of being forced to vote against something that he thinks he ought to vote for. I feel that there are enough votes to pass this amendment in the shape it is in, but I do not want to have any Senator feel that he is compelled to vote for an amendment that he does not like very well. I am going to assume the re-sponsibility of saying that that amendment is satisfactory to me.

With the word "said," before "liquors," changed Mr. REED.

to "such."

Yes; so that it will read "such liquors."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as modified and amended.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, is that the Jones amend-

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the Jones amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Has this proposed amendment to it been adopted by the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been accepted by the author of the amendment

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, before this amendment is voted on I want to say a very few words.

If the United States of America had adopted a constitutional amendment providing for national prohibition, I could see that this amendment would be a proper one. But, Mr. President, where, as at present under the law, this question is dealt with by the separate States, and where, as we are doing in this amendment by the accepting of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, it is made a crime for any liquor to be transported from a wet State into a dry State, it seems to me utterly uncalled-for to say that no newspaper in a wet State which is advertising goods and wares which are lawful in that State shall be sent outside of the lines of that State into some State that has a different policy.

The object of this amendment is perfectly plain. The object of this amendment is not to prevent anybody mailing a news paper or a publication to anybody else in a dry State. object of this amendment is to prevent the newspapers and the other publications which are published in wet States from carrying any liquor advertisements. That is the object of this amendment, and that is its entire purpose. There can be no purpose whatever in excluding a newspaper from a dry State, if the newspaper carries a liquor advertisement, if the law of the Nation prevents any liquor going into the dry State. The object is to drive the newspapers of the country, under threat of being prosecuted for crime, into refusing all liquor adver-tisements in States where it is perfectly lawful to sell intoxicating liquors.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is not quite along the line to which the Senator is addressing himself, but what I want to know is this: If a State prohibits the manufacture and sale of liquor, but allows a certain quantity of liquor to be shipped into the State—a quart a week has been illustrated here—has Congress any right to prohibit that liquor going into the State, where the State itself allows it?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I think it has. I think clearly the United States Government and Congress can prohibit liquor from going into the State of North Carolina, for example.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the legislature of the State allows such products to be shipped in?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; I think that under the power to regulate commerce among the States Congress can prohibit it. Mr. OVERMAN. Could Congress then say that no liquor should be shipped into Connecticut?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think it can say that no liquor shall be shipped into any State.

Mr. OVERMAN. Into Connecticut, even though the State has no prohibition law?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; all of them; and that is just what the Reed amendment is proposing to do. Now, I say I think it can legally do that; and even if the Jones amendment with the Reed amendment attached should be defeated, I should be in favor of adopting the Reed amendment prohibiting the shipping of liquors from a wet State into a dry State, because I think the people of that State ought to be protected when they vote "dry." But, Mr. President, simply because some of the States have gone dry I am utterly opposed to an attempt to force all the newspapers of this country that print liquor advertise-ments either to confine their circulation to their own States or else not to print the liquor advertisements.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator is not quite accurate when he says the amendment prohibits these newspapers going into States that have gone dry. It does not permit them to go into a State that has a law forbidding the news-mit them to go into a State that has a law formidding the newspapers of that State to publish advertisements of this kind.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will modify my statement to that extent. I see no reason for the adoption of this amendment; and I will say to the Senator, in view of the remarks he has just made—that the prohibition is not against going into a dry State, but is against going into a State which has a law prothibition. hibiting liquor advertisements in the papers published in that State—that no State will have a law prohibiting liquor advertisements in its newspapers unless it has gone dry.

Mr. GALLINGER, No; of course not.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. So that it amounts to the same thing. I do not think we are called upon, Mr. President, to use the powers of the United States Government to control the press of the country on this question until the United States Government itself has made this traffic unlawful. If it had, then I agree that this would not do any damage; at least, it would not be inconsistent with the national policy. But unless we are ready to amend the Constitution of the United States and make this Nation a dry Nation, I do not think the heavy hand of Congress ought to be put upon every publication in the United States of America, telling them what they can print and what they can not, when what they print is perfectly lawful under the laws of the State in which they reside and under which they are incorporated.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I agree entirely with what the Senator from Connecticut has said with regard to this amendment. I think legislation of this kind has gone too far. I am a newspaper publisher myself, and the newspapers which I control do not admit to their columns advertising of this nature. They circulate to a considerable extent in the neighboring State of West Virginia, which prohibits advertising of this character in its own newspapers. But, Mr. President, there are other reputable newspapers published in our section which circulate in that neighboring State; and as long as the liquor traffic is recognized by the laws of the United States, I do not feel that I have any right to sit here as a lawmaker and aid in the passage of a law which will be a handicap upon those newspapers which are competitors of mine.

For this reason, Mr. President, I do not propose to vote in favor of this amendment. I think it is a restriction upon the liberty and the rights of the newspapers of the country. As long as the newspaper owners see fit to admit such advertising into their columns, and as long as this traffic is recognized by our laws, I feel that these newspapers should not be shut out of the mails, and that these newspaper proprietors should not be subjected to the condition of criminals because they are following lines of legitimate business in admitting advertisements to the columns of their papers.

I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, it seems to me that the purpose and effect of this amendment is misunderstood. There are four or five, perhaps six, States in the Union whose legislatures have enacted laws prohibiting the advertisement of liquors and other intoxicating beverages by the newspapers of those States. They are subject to prosecution if they violate that law. Now, I do not quite understand why papers and advertisers on the outside of the States that prohibit advertising within their borders by their papers should be permitted to flood those States with their whisky advertisements through the This is simply an effort to aid these States in the enforcement of their laws.

If these laws are not wise, if they are wrong, the people of the States where these laws have been enacted are to blame and responsible for it. That is the only purpose of the amendment. It does not apply to a State where the legislature has not prohibited such advertisements. It does not apply to a State where whisky is sold in any way. There are in a number of States in the Union so-called dry sections, while other sections of the State are authorized to sell spirituous liquors, and do sell them. This amendment does not apply to States of that sort. This amendment does not apply to the State of Washington—the comparison was made a while ago as to the State of Washington—because that State has not yet prohibited the advertisement of whisky within the State by the press of the State.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I think the State of Washington has prohibited such advertisements.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It has been done very recently, then. I stand corrected. I am glad they have, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. While this amendment in that particular may aid the State law, is it not true that where a State has gone, as we say, bone-dry, this amendment that is adopted nullifles the bone-dry provision of the law and allows whisky to be shipped in from the outside for the purposes exempted in the amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That may be true, Mr. President. I did not vote for that amendment.

Mr. JAMES. It was adopted, however.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; it is true it was adopted by the Senate. Now, that is all I care to say, except this—
Mr. JAMES. The point I was making, if the Senator will permit me, is this: In one particular the argument can be made for this amendment that it aids State law. In the other particular it is subject to the criticism that it nullifies State law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think that is true under the amendment legislation in the Senate; but I want to remind Senators, if I may be permitted to do so, that we are now within about 15 or 16 days of the adjournment by law of Congress. Many of the important appropriation bills have not yet passed the House. The most important ones have not come to the Senate. We have here the revenue bill, which must be passed before we adjourn; and it does seem to me that the Senate ought to be satisfied with the two days' discussion we have had on this amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill. It does seem to me that everything has been said that can properly be said on both sides of this question. I have refrained from any discussion of it because I thought perhaps others could do it better

I want to appeal to the Senate, in the interest of legislation-I want to appeal to the Senate, in the interest of orderly proceedings in the Senate, if I may be permitted to use that phrase—to consent now that we may have a vote on this amendment, and let it go to the conference, where it must necessarily go; and it may be—I do not know, of course; I can not speak for the conferees—it may be that we will be able to work out a measure that will be entirely satisfactory to the Senate. But in any event I appeal to the Senate to discontinue the discussion that has been going on upon this particular amendment for two whole days.

Mr. JONES. Oh, no; it just commenced to-day.
Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, this and the other amendment. We had two amendments.

Mr. JONES.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I stand corrected; but we discussed an amendment all day yesterday. Now, we have discussed this amendment all day to-day, and while I do not know, it may be that some other amendment will be presented here that we will be called upon to discuss all day to-morrow.

That is all I have to say. I do hope the Senate will permit us to vote on this amendment, and take up some other legislation that must necessarily be passed before Congress can adjourn.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as amended. [Putting the question.] The amendment is unanimously adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I realize the great desire of the Senator in charge of the bill to hasten its consideration. and I shall not consume more than four or five minutes unless I am interrupted.

I send two proposed amendments to the desk, and ask that they be read by the Secretary, and as each is read I shall explain its purpose and sit down.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amend-

The SECRETARY. On page 30, after line 2, it is proposed to insert the following new paragraph:

That from and after the passage of this act the privilege of admission to the mails as second-class matter extended to the bulletins issued by State boards of health under the provisions of the act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, shall be extended to the bulletins issued by the beards of health of cities in the same manner and under the same conditions.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, as the Senators probably know, the bulletins issued by the boards of health of the various and several States at the present time are carried as secondclass matter in the mails. Up to a recent time the bulletins issued by the city boards of health have also been carried through the mails as second-class matter. A recent ruling of the department, however, has resulted in the boards of health of cities being informed that the bulletins issued by them must be carried at first-class rates instead of second-class rates. amendment is to authorize the carrying of bulletins issued by city boards of health at second-class rates, as they have been carried up to very recently.

Mr. BRYAN. Instead of at third-class rates?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President. They have been carried at second-class rates for four years in the city of New York, we will say. Now, a recent ruling of the department demands that they pay first-class rates.

Mr. BRYAN. I think it is a good amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.
The Secretary. The Senator from New York also proposes, on page 23, after line 20, to insert the following:

That the Postmaster General shall have full authority to grant to any employee not to exceed two weeks' sick leave in any one year with pay.

that has been agreed to.

I merely want to say one word more, Mr. President. I have learned long since that there is no possible way of hurrying so that it will read "any employee of the Postal Service,"

Briefly, let me remind the Senate that the employees of the United States Government here in the city of Washington are now permitted to take 30 days' sick leave; and that includes, as I understand, the employees of the Post Office Department on departmental duty here in Washington. They have 30 days' sick leave. The employees of the Postal Service in the field, outside of the city of Washington, are not permitted to have any sick leave whatsoever under the present statute. My amendment is designed to permit the Postmaster General to give those men two weeks' sick leave with pay in each calendar year.

Mr. BRYAN. While they have not sick leave, they do have 30 days' leave with full pay.

Mr. WADSWORTH. So also, Mr. President, do the employees in Washington, who get 30 days' leave and 30 days' sick leave. The employees in the Postal Service outside of Washington do not get any sick leave at all, and only 15 days' ordinary leave.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I am aware that in Washington

the employees have about 70 or 75 holidays or days off, 60 of them with pay. That, however, is no reason why it should be extended to the whole country but is a reason for cutting down the holidays allowed here.

I raise the point of order that this is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. BRYAN. The point of order is that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill. It proposes to grant two weeks' sick leave, with pay, to the postal employees throughout this country—employees of the city post offices and other postal em-

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not read quite that way. It

That the Postmaster General shall have full authority to grant to any employee of the Postal Service not to exceed two weeks' sick leave in any one year with pay.

That is conferring a discretion upon him, is it not?

Mr. BRYAN. No, Mr. President; that language is intended to direct. When we confer authority upon the President to do anything it is intended to be mandatory upon him, and it is universally construed that he would be directed and required to do it. But, Mr. President, even if you left it in the discretion of the Postmaster General, it would be general legislation.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there a law now fixing sick leave?

Mr. BRYAN. They have no sick leave. There is a law now granting 30 days' leave of absence with pay.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not sure whether he is correct or not, but he is going to sustain the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and will say just one word concerning it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. In line 3, page 29, after the words "yearly salary," it is proposed to insert "of $1,800," so that it will read:

That the maximum yearly salary of $1,800 shall hereafter be paid to the rural carrier on Lake Winnepesaukee, who furnishes his own equipment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there is only one water route in this country where the carrier furnishes his own steamboat, and he has been allowed the maximum yearly sum, which is $1,800, but some subordinates in the Post Office Department have made him a great deal of trouble, put him to much inconvenience; and while I think he has in every instance, except possibly one, got the money, yet he has had trouble about it. propose to insert the amount in the bill, so that there can be no contention over it. It does not increase the salary at all, but simply defines it.

I ask for a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. It is strange, notwithstanding that under the peculiar language of the greater maximum he should get $1,800, but I do not understand how there can be a maximum and then a greater maximum.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not see. It is in the bill, however.

Mr. BRYAN. It is in the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the word "greater" has been

Mr. BRYAN. It has been stricken out. As the bill reads now the maximum yearly salary shall hereafter be paid, and it would not operate to give this carrier $1,800. The committee struck out the word "greater," and the contention of the department was that he ought not to have $1,800.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is entirely a novel statement to me.

I was not present when the word was stricken out. The fact is that he received $1,800 last year.

Mr. BRYAN. The word was eliminated with the understanding that he would not receive it. I will read to the Senator what the Postmaster General says about it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will give notice now that when the bill comes into the Senate I shall ask for a separate vote on that amendment which was made, because I had no knowledge of it.

Mr. BRYAN. Agreeing to the Senator's amendment will accomplish the same purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly. I did not suppose there was any controversy as to the proper compensation for this carrier. It has been conceded.

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator will pardon me, the Postmaster

General says:

General says:

The carrier on this route should not be paid $1,800 for the service rendered by him. The route is served by motor-boat operating but four and a half months in the year, and in connection with the performance of mail service the carrier conducts a lucrative freight and passenger business, and it is understood that his business is interfered with in no way by the delivery and collection of mail. It is noted that when this carrier performed double daily service during the month of July, 1915, he delivered 23,459 pieces of mail and collected 19,810 pieces of mail; that the total weight of all mail, including fourth class, during that month was approximately 171 pounds per day delivered and 46 pounds per day collected; and that the tour of service was, for the first trip, 4 hours and 30 minutes and for the second trip 4 hours and 15 minutes, making a total of but 8 hours and 45 minutes. This carrier should receive neither the lower maximum salary of $1,200 nor the higher maximum of $1,800 per annum, as it is believed he would be fully compensated for the service rendered if his salary were fixed in accordance with the regular schedule of salaries, based on distance traveled, as established by law.

That is all I know about it.

That is all I know about it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not any knowledge of that law. The Postmaster General has been disposed heretofore to make trouble for this particular carrier. The carrier has a very fine boat that he has purchased himself, and it is splendidly equipped. He carries the mail to all the larger islands in Lake Winnepesaukee, which is a very extensive sheet of water. He has rendered very satisfactory service. I think I know that anything less than $1,800 would be an inadequate compensation for this service. While there has been some contention about it in the Post Office Department, he received $1,800 last year, after having some little trouble with the subordinates in the department; but I do think it is rather an extraordinary thing that an issue should be made now concerning this matter and an attempt should be made to reduce this salary.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me ask the Senator if he is familiar with this particular rural route?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been over the route several times. Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator think the salary ought to be $1,800?

Mr. GALLINGER. I certainly do, because I have consulted

Mr. BRYAN. I will say to the Senator, then, let the amendment go into the bill, and he can have a separate vote on striking out the word "greater."

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well, if that is satisfactory. not know until this morning that it had been stricken out.

Mr. BRYAN. Or it can be reconsidered now.
Mr. GALLINGER. Will not the Senator allow the words I have submitted as an amendment to go into the bill and go to conference?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes: I am willing to do that.
Mr. GALLINGER. Then let the amendment be agreed to and let the matter go to conference. Then the controversy will be as to whether the word "greater" shall be restored or stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. After the word "maximum," page 29, line 3, insert the words "of $1,800."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I give notice that when we get into the Senate I shall ask for a separate vote on the shipping-subsidy amendment, commencing at line 16, page 22.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator reserves the amendment for a separate vote.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir. Mr. KENYON. I desire to reserve for a separate vote the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] and all amendments to his amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Day before yesterday I think I reserved the right to offer an amendment providing that on and after July 1. 1917, drop letters should be mailed at a rate of 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof. If not, I do so now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Save those amendments which have been reserved for a separate vote, the question is on con-curring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

this legislation.

The amendments were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the first reserved amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 2, at the end of the line, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the word "greater," where it reads "that the greater maximum yearly

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not want to make any issue about I was willing that the amendment as agreed to should go to conference.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 4, line 15, after the numerals "$32,-000,000," I offer the following amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 15, after "$32,000,000," in-

Provided, That on and after July 1, 1917, drop letters shall be mailed at the rate of 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrier and rural free-delivery offices.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in a letter dated January 30, 1917, to Hon. J. H. BANKHEAD, chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, the Postmaster General, in speaking of this matter, makes the following statement:

After carefully considering the matter, I believe the department at this time should ask Congress to reduce the rate on drop letters from 2 cents to 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof. It was my desire that coincident with the reduction of the rate on drop letters the rates on second-class matter should be increased; but if the latter must be deferred for the time being, we may reduce the rate on drop letters at this time, provided no provisions are made in the bill for useless services or unnecessary expenditures for unwarranted increases in salaries and other items.

While this action the provided are death covers a defect in the postal ways.

While this action would, no doubt, cause a deficit in the postal revenues for the first few years, it is believed that by pursuing the policy outlined the department would be able to place the Postal Service on a self-sustaining basis in a short time.

Mr. President, in the hearings on the subject matter of 1-cent drop-letter postage before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate I find there is a popular demand for this legislation. There are some 10 pages of those hearings in which the petitions that have been received are recorded, coming from the leading organizations in the United States. not a State in the Union whose leading commercial and other organizations, including religious organizations, and, I may say, organizations of every character that have not petitioned for

The estimated revenue from drop letters to the Government of the United States amounts to about $54,000,000, based upon a test that was made a year ago last October for the first seven days of the month. We all know that drop letters are generally used by the business interests of the country on the first of the month in sending out statements and for other purposes, and therefore the test was at a time when the showing would be greater, as far as revenue is concerned, than at any other time of the month or season of the year. Under that showing it would appear that there would be a loss of $27,000,000 a year.

But, Mr. President, if we take into consideration the history not only in this country but in Canada and other countries wherever there has been a reduction made in the price of postage the loss has been very slight, indeed. In 1883 when the rate of postage was reduced from 3 cents to 2 cents, for that year the total revenues of the Post Office were $45,508,000, and the expenditures for that year were $43,282,000. For the year 1884, one year after the postage had been reduced from 3 cents to 2 cents, the revenue of the Post Office was $43,325,000 and the expenditure was $47,224,000.

so, Mr. President, the decrease in the postage in our country on account of the drop from 3 cents to 2 cents was only $2,183,000. I am quite positive that if drop-letter postage is reduced to 1 cent there will not be a difference of more than $15,000,000 in the revenue, if so much. The Postmaster General says that he has no doubt but what there will be $10,000,000 surplus at the end of the coming fiscal year.

So under any circumstances, Mr. President, there would not be a deficit at the end of the first year to exceed $5,000,000, and I believe it will be less than that.

I wish to call attention to the fact that in the testimony before the committee it was shown that many of the larger institutions of the country that now deliver their monthly state-ments by messengers, if the rate on drop letters is reduced to I cent will immediately change that system and they will be delivered through the mails. The reason why they deliver by messenger now is because it is cheaper, but upon a basis of 1 cent it will be about equal to what it costs for the messenger service to-day. Therefore that, with other agencies that we know will use the mails for drop letters if drop letters pay only 1 cent, will enormously increase the number of such letters

There has been no reduction in postage rates since the year There is a universal call for it, and the Government of the United States can well afford to adopt it now. that it does not cost much more than one-third of a cent each to handle drop letters, and when we are charging a cent on every letter there is a profit in the service of over one-half cent for each letter, even though the rate is 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof.

Mr. President, I am perfectly aware that a point of order will lie against this amendment, but I hope the Senator from Florida will not interpose it but allow the Senate, if there is doubt as to what the Senate really desires in this matter, to express itself by a vote.

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator will accept an amendment to the amendment, I will agree to it.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Robinson in the chair). To whom does the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from Nebraska rose first, and if the Senator from Florida will just permit him to ask me a question I will then gladly yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator if, in his judgment, drop letters would include delivery to and from rural routes starting from the office where the letter was mailed?

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment provides that, I will say to the

Mr. NORRIS. I did not so understand.

Mr. SMOOT. It provides

That on and after July 1, 1917, drop letters shall be mailed at the rate of 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrier and rural free-delivery offices.

That I understand was the point the Senator referred to.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; the language does not seem to me to be ain. Suppose the letter were mailed at the office to be delivered out on the rural route; the Senator intends to include that letter?

Mr. SMOOT. I am sure the amendment would include it. Mr. NORRIS. Suppose the letter were mailed out on a route to be delivered in town at the end of the route; would it include

Mr. SMOOT. You mean in a drop box? Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. It would include that I think.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that I offered the same amendment last year, but I specifically provided in the amendment when I offered it that it should include those. It seems to me they ought to be included.

Mr. BRYAN. This amendment was prepared by the department.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator from Florida say it would include that?

Mr. BRYAN. It would.

Mr. SMOOT. It would include it. I was going to say to the Senator that this is the identical language prepared by the Post Office Department to accomplish the purpose the Senator has in

Mr. NORRIS. All right.
Mr. BRYAN. Of course, as the Senator from Utah says, the amendment is subject to a point of order. If the Senator will accept an amendment to his amendment, I shall not interpose the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. SMOOT. What amendment does the Senator propose?
Mr. NORRIS. We can not hear the colloquy over here. I hope the Senators will speak louder.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish the Senators would speak louder. Mr. BRYAN. I propose to insert at the end of the Senator's amendment:

Provided, That the rate of postage on second-class matter when sent by the publisher thereof and from the office of publication, including sample copies, or when sent from a news agency to acutal subscribers thereto, or to other news agents, shall be 1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and 2 cents per pound or fraction thereof during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and on and after July 1, 1919, 2 cents per pound or fraction thereof:

And provided further, That nothing contained herein shall effect the free-in-county privilege on second-class matter or the present rate of postage on newspapers, when the same are deposited in a letter-carrier office for delivery by its carriers, or on second-class matter when sent by others than the publisher or news agent.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, if I accept that amendment, I know there will be a point of order raised against it; but I will say this to the Senator: I am perfectly willing the amendment should be accepted, provided we can have it divided and have a vote in the Senate upon both questions.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator accept it?

Mr. SMOOT. No. Mr. President; I am quite sure if I accepted it a point of order would be made.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator may be just as sure if he does not accept it a point of order will be raised against his amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will accept it, in order that the whole amendment may go to conference; and now, Mr. President, I ask for a division of the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. No; let us have a vote on it as one amendment. Mr. SMOOT. Then I must accept the amendment, because if I do not it will go out on a point of order and prevent a consideration of the subject in conference.

Mr. BRYAN. Let the question be put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The Chair hears no objection. The Secretary will state the next reserved amendment.

The Secretary. The next reserved amendment is on page 22, beginning on line 16.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I had intended to make some remarks on that amendment, but I realize the lateness of the hour and the lateness of the session. All I care for is to have a separate vote on the amendment.

The Secretary. A substitute was offered and adopted for the committee amendment as printed in the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I was not aware of that. I understood this amendment was agreed to as it is printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

A substitute amendment was offered and The SECRETARY. adopted at that point for the amendment as printed, as follows:

Provided, That hereafter the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into contracts with American citizens for the carrying of the mail between United States and Great Britain on steamships built in the United States capable of maintaining a speed of 30 knots an hour at sea in ordinary weather and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 35,000 tons. The said service to commence not more than four years after the contract shall be let. The rate of compensation to be paid for the said ocean mail service shall not exceed the sum of $10 per mile for the shortest practicable route for each outward voyage. The Postmaster General shall have the right to reject all bids not, in his opinion, reasonable for the attaining of the purposes named: Provided further, That all of the provisions of the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce," so far as they are not inconsistent herewith, shall control and apply to the methods to be used and the contracts to be made hereunder.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was aware of the change in the amendment which the Secretary has read on line 1, page 23, but there appears to be no material change of the amendment as I have it. As I desire to have a separate vote on the amend-ment, so far as I am concerned I am ready that the vote be now taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are several Senators who have entered the Chamber since the amendment which was offered by me was agreed to. There were very few Senators in the Chamber at that time, and it has been stated that Senators now desire a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to. I therefore move that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, we might as well have the test on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in order that the Senate may understand the motion made for a reconsideration, I desire to state that I offered an amendment providing for 1-cent postage on drop letters

The Senator offered that amendment, the bill Mr. HUGHES. being in the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the bill is now in the Senate, I will say to the Senator. The Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] suggested that he would not make a point of order against the amendment, as I had asked him not to do so, if I would accept an amendment which he would offer. The Senator read the amendment, and it was exactly the same amendment that was reported by the committee providing for an increase of postage on second-class mail matter. I thought that perhaps it would be best that the question should go to conference and let the conferees decide as to whether the 1-cent postage rate should obtain, even though the other part of the amendment should be disagreed to. In order that it might go to conference, I agreed to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, and the Senate agreed to the amendment as thus amended. Since then a number of Senators have come into the Chamber who feel that there ought to have been more Senators present than there were when the Senate passed upon it. Therefore, Mr. President, I have moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and that is the question now before the Senate.

I desire to say that if the motion to reconsider shall be agreed to, I shall then offer my amendment as originally offered, providing for 1-cent postage on drop letters. As I have previously stated, a point of order no doubt will lie against it, and if one is made, of course, the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I scarcely think any Senator would refuse to vote for this motion to reconsider. scarcely think any Senator would deny that it is fair to all of us that the motion to reconsider should prevail. For two days we fought over this question. We came to a vote on a motion to suspend the rules, and by a substantial majority the Senate declined to suspend the rules and permit these amendments.

Those of us who were not present thought that this question was behind us; that it had been disposed of. We are all busy in our offices or in committees, and when we are not necessarily here we go to them. With the Senate in session from 10.30 to 6 o'clock we must spend time in committee work and with our correspondence while the Senate is in session. A number of us have been busy nearly all day as conferees upon the Agricultural appropriation bill. I desire to ask every Senator, in a spirit of fairness to those of us who were absent and who had not anticipated that this question could possibly come before the Senate, to give us a unanimous vote in favor of the motion to reconsider, so that we may have an opportunity of meeting this question, which we really thought we had disposed of.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, to state the matter just exactly as it was, I will say that before the bill was reported to the Senate from the Committee of the Whole the Senator from Utah reserved the amendment which he offered. He said he reserved the amendment; but, as a matter of fact, there was no amendment, but the Senator simply offered when the bill reached the Senate a portion of the amendment on pages 4 and 5. He offered that portion providing for a reduction of postage to 1 cent on drop letters and on rural routes. I offered to that, as an amendment, and it was adopted, the remainder of the committee amendment as found in the bill, and the amendment of the Senator from Utah was agreed to as thus amended.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon an interruption, it was agreed to without a vote, was it not?

Mr. BRYAN. It was agreed to like all other amendments are

Mr. WILLIAMS. Although we had fought over it for two or three days, and every Senator expected that there would be a roll call.

Mr. BRYAN. Well, I do not know, Mr. President. I do not want to treat any Senator unfairly, but this is the situation now: The Senator from Georgia very naively suggests that we reconsider the vote by which this amendment was adopted, but when we reconsider it, then a point of order can be made against the amendment, whereas now it is beyond the possibility of being killed by a point of order. That is the difference. If it could be unanimously considered that we have suspended the rule and that the point of order will not be made when the motion to reconsider is agreed to, I would have no objection to the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to being reconsidered.

Mr. President, in connection with the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia that there be unanimous consent to reconsider the vote, if he will incorporate in that a request for unanimous consent that we vote for this amendment on its merits and that no point of order will be raised against it, I have no objection to the Senate expressing itself.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, no Senator can make any promise now for the Senate. The only question before us now is whether or not we will reconsider the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; I understand that.
Mr. SMOOT. Then, of course, as the Senator says, a point of order will lie against the amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, a point of order will lie against both amendments, will it not?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. It will lie against both amendments.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, very much in favor of both amendments; but, after the statement made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and the statements made by other Senators who have opposed this provision. I do not think we can afford to tie their hands in this I think we ought to let it go to the Senate and let the will of the Senate be the law, so far as this branch of the department of the Government is concerned.

Mr. BRYAN. If that could be done, I would be perfectly willing to yield the advantage that is now gained; but to open this matter on a reconsideration of the vote means that any one Senator can defeat the will of the Senate on this important proposition, involving the loss to the Government every year of nearly $90,000,000 in postal revenues, a loss taken out of the stamp tax upon first-class mail matter. I deny the right of any one Senator to deprive the Senate of a vote upon the proposition. One Senator, and one Senator only, has raised his voice against the Senate considering this amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? I realize the force of the Senator's argument, but it seems to me, after what has been stated upon the floor, that this amendment which he and I want was gotten through without an expression of the will of the Senate, and I do not think we can afford to take advantage of the technicality.

Mr. BRYAN. Now the Senator is making a speech. come to the question of the technicality. It is a technicality to keep the Senate from voting upon it—a pure technicality; noth-

Mr. VARDAMAN. But the Senate did vote upon it at one time

Mr. BRYAN. No; the Senate never has had a chance to express itself upon this amendment reported by the committee. Senate was deprived of that chance by a point of order raised by one Senator. The Senator from Utah says he is in favor of some of it now. He expressed as his reason for voting against it the fact that he never voted to waive any rule of the Senate to put general legislation on an appropriation bill. It is said that we are taking a technical advantage now, and yet we are asked to reconsider this amendment in order that one Senator here may take a technical advantage of the whole Senate.

Mr. JAMES and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not yield now. Let me go on for just a

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I for one am not conscious of having done anything wrong. This is the Senate of the United States. The bill first appears in the Committee of the Whole. It then goes into the Senate to be considered again. Amendments are in order there. Because, when the amendment is reoffered, the point of order is not raised there that was raised in the Committee of the Whole, it is said that we are technical; but when the motion is made to reconsider, it has but one purpose. That purpose is to allow one Senator to defeat the committee amendment.

I do not feel that I have a right to yield that advantage. I feel, now, that this amendment is in the Senate, where a majority of the Senate can decide it. A majority of the Senate can decide it on the motion to reconsider, and those in favor of giving this relief can vote against the motion to reconsider. It will hardly be fair to make the motion to reconsider, and to appeal to Senators for not a single Senator to object to that, in order to get it back into the Senate, where one man could kill the whole proposition.

I think when the Senator from Georgia reflects upon that he will see that there is some merit in it. The Senator from Georgia now wants all the Senate to put it back where one Senator can kill it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I withdraw the suggestion that all do, and I ask that an overwhelming majority agree

Mr. BRYAN. Then, Mr. President, all I ask is this: The question has been discussed. The technical objection can not now prevail, and the Senate has a chance to express itself upon the question of whether this amendment ought to be adopted. If a majority of the Senate are in favor of adopting it, they can vote against the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not want to discuss the merits of the proposed legislation, although I am very much opposed to raising the postage upon newspapers. In a certain sense magazines are luxuries, but a newspaper in these days is a necessity. The lawyer must have it to keep up with his profession. The merchants must have it to keep up with their quotations. Everybody must have the daily paper. I do not want to discuss that, however. I want to discuss the right and wrong of this situation.

In any proper sense this amendment has never passed the Senate. A little private conversation was going on in the usual way one of the faults of the Senate-between two Senators. offers an amendment and another one agrees not to make a point of order upon that amendment, provided the first Senator will accept an amendment which he offers; and then later the Chair says: "Without objection, the amendment as amended will stand adopted "—an important matter that Senators had been quarreling with one another about for two or three

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And had voted on.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And had voted on indirectly, not directly. But there was not a Member of this body that expected this amendment to be adopted without a yea-and-nay vote. was not a Member on either side of the dispute that would not have called for the yeas and nays. So that in any proper, moral, right sense the amendment has never been adopted at all. The sense of the Senate has never been expressed; and there is not one of us that did not expect, if it was expressed, that we would have a right to vote. For that reason some of us kept our mouths shut when the question was being debated.

And it is true also, I will say to the Senator, that a majority of the Senate voted against suspending the rules, and it requires two-thirds to suspend the rules.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and a majority voted against it. They did not even get a majority. Now, in my opinion, twothirds of the membership of this body is opposed to raising the postage upon newspapers, whatever may be the case as to magazines, and whatever may be the view of the Senate as to the drop-letter postage. I do not know what that is, but I am sure I am right in the diagnosis of the situation; and yet it gets upon the bill by a sort of an agreement that "If you will not make a point of order, I will not, provided you accept an amendment;" and then the Chair says—I did not hear it; I doubt if many Senators did-" Without objection, the amendment will be adopted."

I submit that it is not fair to one another. We have a right to cast our votes upon it. Now, then, I ask that every man who is opposed to this thing standing, done in the manner in which it was done, shall vote for the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, pending the motion to reconsider, the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah, as amended by the Senator from Florida, be considered as in order, so that the Senate, after the motion to reconsider is adopted, shall be given an opportunity to vote upon this matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection to that, provided the question is divided. I want a vote upon the drop-letter question, I want a vote upon the magazine question, and I want a vote upon the newspaper question.

Mr. HUGHES. That can be done under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And I will not make any objection to the unanimous-consent agreement if you couple with it a stipulation that there shall be a division of the question,

Mr. HUGHES. Oh, that follows, of course. That is the Senator's right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That will not do. Mr. JAMES. But, Mr. President, does the Senator think it is quite the fair thing to put up to the Senate, in view of what has transpired? Here is what occurred: This matter was debated, and a vote was had upon it. Under the rules, two-thirds was necessary to suspend the rule. Instead of two-thirds, a majority voted against suspending the rules. Now, while it was permissible under the parliamentary law of the Senate for the Senator from Florida to offer again his amendment, it is the unusual thing to do. The Senate usually relies upon such action as it took upon this matter as being final. No notice was given the Senate that the matter would be renewed.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, let us get the confusion straight.
Mr. JAMES. The Senator had a perfect right—
Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from Utah offered the amendment for the drop letters.

Mr. JAMES. Yes; I gathered that, and then the Senator from Florida offered his amendment, the two together mak-

Mr. BRYAN. Now, let me ask the Senator-

Mr. JAMES. Just a moment; the two together making the very question that the Senate itself had determined by a yeaand-nay vote, and by a majority at that, to refuse to suspend the rules to consider. Now, what I am submitting is this—that the Senate had a right to rely upon its former action as having closed this question; and for it to be brought up again, and action to be taken upon it without any debate, when it was known in this body by its record that a majority had voted against suspending the rules, I do not think is right. As far as I am concerned, I am unwilling to give my consent to any conditions upon the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I would be perfectly willing to have this question decided on the motion to reconsider, and it is the only way in which it can be decided. I do not think the Senate is called upon to vote in favor of this motion to reconsider on account of the way the amendment went on the bill, however, because I sat here, as far away from the Presiding Officer as any man in this Chamber, and the Senator from Utah offered his amendment, and I heard every word he said; and the Senator from Florida offered his amendment, and I heard him; and at the request of some Senator sitting on the extreme left of the Chamber he read it, every word of it. There was debate upon it. There was debate by the Senator from Florida: there was debate by the Senator from Utah; and there was no excuse for any Senator in this Chamber not being thoroughly familiar with what was going on. The attention of the Chair was called to the fact that the question was ready for decision by the Senate. The Chair hesitated a moment, because, for some reason or other, he did not seem to know exactly what was before the Senate, as it seemed to me from Finally the slip was handed to him by the Secretary, and he said: "Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Now, so far, so good. The people have been benefited against the will of the Senate, it seems, from the position that some Senators take here. Inadvertently we have saved $88,000,000 to the people of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, no.

Mr. HUGHES. Inadvertently, we have provided that the people who have been receiving a service for $88,000,000 less than it is worth shall pay something like what it is worth.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But we do not want it done in that way Mr. HUGHES. Because that was such unprecedented action in this Chamber, we are asked to throw party lines aside and abandon the previous positions we took on this question and vote for the motion to reconsider, because, forsooth, certain gentlemen were derelict in their duty, according to their own statements, and were not paying attention to what was going on in this Chamber, although they know-they are bound to know—that questions that are passed upon in Committee of the Whole come up again in the Senate.

I have been waiting here for an hour to get a vote on certain measures that I had no opportunity, or did not ask for an opportunity, to vote upon in Committee of the Whole. A very important matter was decided by a viva voce vote here a short time ago—the Jones amendment. I knew that I had a right to ask for a roll call on that motion in the Senate, and I let that proposition go over.

The only way in which this question can be decided upon its merits is for those Senators who agree to the principles contained in the amendment of the Senator from Utah and the amendment of the Senator from Florida to vote against the motion to reconsider. If there are enough Senators who believe that the amendment should be voted down, the Senate will have its way, and the Members will have their way, by voting against the motion to reconsider.

So far as I am concerned, I was present here all the time. That amendment was put upon this bill in a legitimate and proper way. In my judgment, it is a good amendment and saves millions and millions of dollars to the people of the United States; and if I am the only Senator in this body to do so, I shall vote against the motion to reconsider.

Before I yield the floor I will say that I have asked unanimous consent to have this proposition considered as in order, and that the gentlemen who are against it will give the Senate a chance to act on it. They have refused that consent. The only way in which the Senate can now act, in this parliamentary situation, is for those Senators to vote against the motion to reconsider who believe that we should have 1-cent drop letters and that we should compensate the Treasury by taxing certain people a little more than they are now paying for a service which costs so much more than the Government gets from it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I am a member of the Post Office Committee, and if the Senators will recall when this proposition came before the Senate I gave notice that if the motion to suspend the rules prevailed I should offer an amendment excepting newspapers from the operation of the proposed raise in rates.

It is my opinion that the Senate was fully advised as to the purport of the proposed legislation and that its vote refusing to suspend the rules expressed the sentiment of this body in reference to the proposed legislation. I think it was so understood. I so understood it. Some Senator here has said that he would like to have the newspapers excluded. It was clearly understood, in case the rules were suspended, that a motion to that effect would be made. I think that the action of the Senate in refusing by a majority vote to suspend the rules was the judgment of the Senate in reference to this legislation at this time. I am more convinced that that is true because, despite the fact that some Senators said they would not vote to suspend the rules on principle, regardless of the thing for which it was sought to have them suspended, the rules have been suspended in the consideration of this very bill, though I am in favor of the legislation as amended in the manner in which I propose to seek to have it amended, I shall vote to reconsider this vote, because I think the action of the Senate was clear-cut and unmistakable on the merits of the proposition and not on the motion to suspend the rules

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the reconsidera-tion of the vote whereby the amendment was adopted.

Mr. ASHURST, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, and Mr. JAMES called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I am very much interested in this amendment. I do not want to treat anybody in the Senate I think the Senate committee was subjected to a very technical objection here. This is rather an important question with which we are dealing. It is a question that has been fought over for 20 years. I do not know whether I have the right as an individual now, after having this proposition in order for the first time, to join in a request for a reconsideration in order that some Senator might kill it again. That is what is bothering me about voting to reconsider. I would rather vote to reconsider and risk that than to have any Senator feel that any sharp practice has been brought to bear on this bill. I do not see how there has been myself.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.
Mr. CLAPP. I do not think there is a Member of the Senate who for one moment thinks there was any sharp practice in putting in this amendment. I do not think the Senator from Florida should feel that that thought is entertained by anyone on this floor.

Mr. BRYAN. Then, Mr. President, if that is true, we are deliberately placing this amendment in a position to be murdered by one Senator. That is all there is to it. We are throwing away the chance to reduce the burden that is resting upon users of first-class mail $26,000,000. We are throwing away the chance of making these newspapers contribute something toward their cost to the Government. I will be willing for the Senate to reconsider it. I suppose they will. I do not know about that. But I have about come to the conclusion that, as far as I am individually concerned, I am going to vote against it. I do not feel that I have the right to put back a proposition involving so much just in order that it may be said I was accommodating.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me? I have been very diligent in my attendance upon the Senate, not only to-day but other days. I did not know that this matter was coming The Senator from Utah presented it and made his speech covering at least 15 minutes, and the Senator from Utah talks so that we all hear him. I was paying attention to it. Senator from Florida suggested that he would not support it unless it was amended as he suggested. That was accepted by the Senator from Utah. The Chair announced after a proper delay that it was agreed to without objection. So there was no snap judgment about it.

Mr. BRYAN. I read the whole thing to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. The RECORD will show to-morrow that the Senator from Utah made rather an elaborate speech for him. He does not talk at great length except on rare occasions; but it was thoroughly understood by the Senators who were present.

Mr. BRYAN. I thank the Senator for that.

Mr. SHIELDS. May I ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question before he takes his seat? Was there not some confusion in the amendment, in the manner in which it was to be submitted, by the contention of the Senator from Utah stating that he would accept the amendment, or words to that effect? I could not hear it fully. The Senator was here and did hear it. He said, "I will accept the amendment, provided it be divided." In other words, there was to be a separate vote on the decrease on drop letters and on the increase on newspapers. That was really the way it was presented, and it got into the other tangle, and was put into it, by some colloquy between the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Florida which I did not hear. I know I was surprised by the question having been put as one amendment, and simply by the words "being unobjected to it is agreed to.'

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator from Tennessee states

it accurately, as I recall it.

Mr. BRYAN. I am much obliged to the Senator from New Hampshire. I read the proviso deliberately and slowly, and I thought every Senator here understood it. I was not trying to take any snap judgment on the Senate. The Senator from Utah said to me he realized it was subject to a point of order, and he did not want me to raise it. I was in this position with reference to that. I had talked here for two days to get the Senate to allow this amendment to be in order. The position of the Senator from Utah would have forced me to raise a point of order against the provision I was in favor of, that I had tried to suspend the rules of this body in order to get considered.

If the Senate simply wants to vote on the proposition, that can be easily adjusted, and it is, of course, divisible upon request of a single Senator; but if we put it back and vote to recon-sider the amendment, then it is subject to a point of order. It is not now.

The question that troubles me is, Have I a right, as an individual who is not interested in this matter one way or the other, to surrender the advantage that has been gained for the people we all represent? Like the Senator from New Jersey, I do not believe I have that right.

Senators in this body understand perfectly well that if they want to oppose legislation, the place for them to express that opposition is here, where the legislation is being enacted. You can not very well oppose the Post Office appropriation bill over in the Senate Office Building or in an office or down town. That ought to be understood. Here we have been working day by day for several days to get it passed. I thought it was sufficiently evident to some of us who are so vitally in favor of this bill that we took up two or three days to fight for it and pleaded with the Senate to give us the right to vote upon it to let the Senate vote its will.

Every change that has ever been made in the postal rates has been placed upon the Post Office appropriation bill. Senators, this matter has been fought through by President and commission. President Taft five years ago appealed to Congress to take this step and submitted the report of the commission, but the attempts were made always on an appropriation bill, on this annual bill, to get some measure of justice, and a point of order always stopped it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But on an independent bill, where no point of order could be made, there would be full and free

It would have full and free consideration; it would have too full and free consideration. It would be-talked and filibustered to death. It is the first time a proposition like this has ever been able to come out of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield. Mr. VARDAMAN. The statement the Senator has made amounts to an admission that a majority of the Senate does not approve the amendment. Now, when the Senator-

Mr. BRYAN. I do not make that admission. I think a majority of the Senate do want it.

VARDAMAN. I myself very much favor it, but I do not think we can afford to legislate by parliamentary finesse or short cuts. It is manifest to my mind that the action of the Senate on the motion to suspend the rules indicates that the Senate was against this particular amendment. able and eloquent Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Hughes] said this afternoon about the conduct of the Senators may be true. Every Senator should be in his seat. We all understand the rules governing this body, but we also understand the habits and common faults of us all. The fact remains that Senators were not in the Chamber when the agreement between the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Florida was made with reference to this amendment. It was done without the knowledge of a majority of the Senate, and while I favor very heartily that which they agreed to I shall vote to keep the amendment in the bill. But under the circumstances I feel in honor bound to vote in favor of reconsideration. I believe in

Mr. BRYAN. The only way to carry a measure is by those in favor of it to vote for it. Senators say this is not an opportune time to vote for it. The way to pass this amendment is to refuse to reconsider it. Let Senators say we will take a fair, square vote on it, and let the Senate determine whether it wants it or not. If the Senate will do that, there is no Senator who will object to its being reconsidered, but they are asking us to reconsider upon the claim that it is not exactly right to bring up the matter again in the Senate after having been considered and disposed of in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President-

Mr. BRYAN. I do not yield just now.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let me ask a question.

Mr. BRYAN. In just a minute. You are going to reconsider it and put it back in order to do what? In order that the Senate may express itself? In order that we may have a division on this question? No; in order that one Senator may take it out of this bill.

Now, when Senators ask us to reconsider, have we not a right, those of us who favor this legislation, to say, "Well, we will let it be reconsidered; divide it up as you please, but let us vote on it." But if a majority of them say, "We will re-consider this amendment already adopted" it will go back and one Senator can raise the point of order and kill it. That is asking a majority of the Senate not to take advantage of an individual Senator; it is asking a majority of the Senate to put itself in a position where one individual can take advantage of the whole Senate. That is what we are being asked to do

Mr. President, I hope it will be settled without any reconsideration. There was no action taken in the Senate except in the open. There was no attempt to evade. Who criticizes the Senator from Utah? Nobody. He is not subject to any criticism. He gave notice that he was going to ask to have this matter considered again. The Senator from South Carolina said that he gave some notice about it. Senators who were away because the point of order had been sustained in the remaining days of the consideration of the bill should be here for its consideration. An individual Senator ought to be the one to worry about a point of order when there was an expressed wish by a goodly portion of the Senate that they should have the opportunity to vote.

Senators say the majority voted against waiving the rule. That is true, Mr. President, a majority of three. One of that majority claimed that he voted against it because he would vote against suspending any rule except in a case of great emergency. Yet that Senator has offered the 1-cent letter postage part of the amendment. So that would make a vote of 35 to 36, and that is enough. Take 35 of us, and you ask us to put ourselves in the position of allowing one Senator under the influence and power of the press to kill the whole measure.

I should like to be accommodating to him and to hear my friend from New Jersey discuss it. This is my last chance ever to help bring this about, and Senators have been here for 20 years trying to do it and have never had an opportunity. I do not believe I have the right to accommodate one Senator in this body by surrendering valuable and important rights of the American people.

Mr. President, I think those of us who are in favor of this amendment ought to vote against the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida is mistaken in one of the statements that he has just made. voted, for example, to suspend the rule. I did not vote for it because I was in favor of all of the legislation. I voted for it, as did the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] and various other Senators, because we wanted to give the Members of the Senate an opportunity to vote on each of these separate propositions, and we could not give them that opportunity without voting to suspend the rule. Five or six certainly, and, I think, more, of the Senators who voted to suspend the rule were opposed to more or less and some of them to all of the legislation.

Mr. President, this is very important legislation. There is great divergence of opinion upon it. There are very decided opinions upon both sides. I say that the Senate as a body never expected any of this legislation to be passed without a roll call. Under conditions of that sort ordinarily a point of no quorum is made when there is not a quorum—and there was not upon this occasion—so that Senators may have notice that an important question is about to be voted upon, and that they That was not the course taken in this case. may be here. am quarreling with nobody about it. They had a perfect right to do whatever was done in the technical parliamentary sense; but that is a fact.

All I want is to have a vote of the Senate upon these proposi-That vote ought to have been given us. Our attention ought to have been called to this important question by making the point of no quorum, if necessary, so that Senators could be here. I want to do nothing unfair.

I want now to make a request for unanimous consent, which, in my opinion, will put this whole matter upon the proper basis. I do not want to cut the Senate off from a vote. I do not want any one Senator to have an opportunity to defeat this legislation. I would not want any one Senator to have the oppor-tunity to put it through. I shall therefore ask unanimous consent that this vote be reconsidered, and that the Senate proceed to vote upon each one of the three propositions involved in this amendment separately.

Mr. BRYAN. And that no point of order shall be raised.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course. I say proceed to vote, and that settles it. I ask unanimous consent that this vote be reconsidered, and that thereupon the Senate shall proceed to vote upon each of the questions involved in this amendment—drop letters, raising postage on magazines, and raising postage upon newspapers. That will be the fair thing. The Senate has a right to be heard.

For myself, I differ with the ruling of the Chair concerning the point of order, but I am not a good parliamentarian; I never was. I attribute some of my success in public life to the fact that I never was. But I should like to make that request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that this amendment as amended be reconsidered and the Senate thereupon proceed to vote upon each of the questions involved in the amendment. I think that is fair and right.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I object to the unanimous consent the Senator from Mississippi asks. I am not willing to be put on terms in respect to this matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want to put anybody on terms, Mr. President. I am proposing to coerce no man. I was very politely and very courteously making a request for unanimous consent, and any Senator has a perfect right to refuse to concur with the unanimous consent; but I hope I will not be put in the attitude of being a public enemy and coercing somebody or making any terms with anybody either, except that I was asking the Senate to do something that I think would be fair and right.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I had no idea that my remarks would be construed as at all disagreeable to the Senator from Mississippi. I simply meant that this matter ought to be considered on its merits and the right of every Senator to make a point of order I wanted preserved, if anybody wants to make a point of order. I do not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to have it considered on its merits, and I shall vote to reconsider if the request for unanimous consent is not granted, because I am not willing for this thing to stand done the way it is done.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think the proposition which the Senator from Mississippi has made is a very fair one, and it ought to have been acceded to and would be acceded to if the Senate was willing to meet this proposition openly and squarely and fairly. We have been contending in regard to this matter for years, since I have been here, and I presume long before I came, and by some modus operandi the Senate always avoids meeting the matter squarely and fairly.

I should very much prefer to see the vote by which the amendment was agreed to reconsidered, in view of the apparent misunderstanding with reference to the matter which was voted upon; but I dislike to see it reconsidered when we know it is for the express purpose of taking it out upon a mere technicality and of preventing the Senate from passing upon the subject

This is a matter of considerable moment; it has grown almost into a scandal. The way the Senate of the United States has disposed of it is almost an indictment against this body. are advertising the fact now that we have not the courage to meet this question, and we are hiding behind a technicality in order to avoid meeting the question. Can a Senator stand here and say, as the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] says, that he wants to meet the question upon its merits, and then object to unanimous consent which will bring it up for consideration upon its merits? It is apparent upon the face of it why the objection is made.

Has the Senace of the United States come to the point where it is unwilling to record its vote upon the merits of a question, and will get behind the technical rules which it makes and if we can get this matter before the Senate, and the Senate is which the people can not control? I admire the able and courageous stand which the Senator from Florida [Mr. Bryan] has taken in this matter. It is a tribute to his character and to his standing, that he has made the fight which he has made.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think the request for unanimous consent submitted by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] should have been granted and that the Senate should have been given an opportunity to vote squarely upon this question.

I concur in the statement made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah]. The amendment in the form that it has been agreed to is not entirely acceptable to me, and I should like to have an opportunity of modifying it or of voting to modify it: but I shall vote against the motion to reconsider, unless the Senate is given an opportunity to express its conscience on this sub-

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have sat in my seat and listened carefully to the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] and to the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], and I think it is exceedingly unfair and unjust to intimate in any way that the Senator from Florida has taken an undue advantage of the Senate in the matter in which he has been engaged.

Mr. President, I want an opportunity to vote for 1-cent dropletter postage. I want an opportunity to vote to exempt, if it can be done, the newspapers that are included in this amendment, or at least a large class of them.

There are three distinct propositions contained in the amendment: One is 1-cent drop-letter postage. I do not believe that there is a Senator here who objects to that amendment, provided, of course, he feels that the revenues of the Post Office Department can stand that reduction without an increase in the revenues from some other direction. That everybody concedes ought to be the rule.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the Senate ought to be willing to consider these three separate and distinct proposi-tions on their merits, if they have merit, and they have some merit. I for one very seriously question the wisdom of giving 1-cent drop-letter postage unless we can find somewhere by some means an opportunity to increase the revenues of the department from some other direction. I feel that it will bring about quite a large deficit; but I am willing to risk that. I do not believe it ought to be expected of the Post Office Department that it should be a profit-making institution. The business and the duty of the Post Office Department is to give the people of this country the most efficient post-office service that it can render, without reference to the cost, provided the administration is economical and businesslike.

Is some Senator here, if this vote should be reconsidered, going to rise in his place and make the point of order against the 1-cent drop letter proposition? Some of us fear he will. These matters, Mr. President, are entitled to be considered upon their merits in the Senate. I am almost persuaded to vote for a reconsideration, with the hope and belief that all Senators will be fair enough and just enough to give the Senate of the United States an opportunity to consider each one of these questions on its individual merits. Therefore it seems to me that there ought not to be any difficulty whatever in reaching a decision that, if this vote is reconsidered and the questions brought back to the Senate for consideration and action, the Senate will have an opportunity to consider the propositions contained in the amendment.

I know, Mr. President, that there are some Senators who are so very much opposed to increasing the postage on second-class mail matter that they would be willing to sacrifice the other question of giving the people of this country the advantage that 1-cent drop letter postage would bring. Everybody knows that second-class mail matter does not pay its just proportion of the revenues; everybody knows who has given the matter any consideration whatever that there is from seventy to ninety million dollars deficit between the revenues derived and the cost of the transportation of that matter.

On the other hand, I know it is argued with force that this is the wrong time to make this increase; that print paper has increased in cost; but I also know, Mr. President, as most Senators know, that advertising has also increased in cost. We all know that many of the magazines contain 80 per cent of advertising matter and that it is the very highest class of advertising matter. Some of the magazines receive as high as $5,000 a page per issue; and yet it is said, notwithstanding these facts, that Senators are willing to continue under existing conditions because print paper has advanced in price. They do not take into account any other considerations which connect themselves with this question.

But there is no use in discussing that question. I presume going to be fair, as I believe it will, and give us an opportunity to consider these questions upon their merits, that perhaps the Senate, when it comes to consider the question of second-class mail matter as it relates to magazines, may conclude that a small advance in the postage rate would be justified.

However, Mr. President, we are not going to agree, in view of the advance in the cost of print paper used by the newspapers of this country, to increase their postage rates. I am not going to undertake to say here in this presence why we are not going to agree to do so. Everybody understands the reason why we shall not why we shall not agree to increase the cost of the transportation of newspapers.

Mr. President, I am at a loss to know what to do about this

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me a moment, in order that I may make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator. Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the bill is now in the Senate?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes

Mr. OVERMAN. And this amendment has been adopted in the Senate. I want to ask, if the Senate decides not to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to, can not these three questions be tested in the Senate by amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the amendment has been agreed to; but a new amendment having been agreed to, new matter having been added in the Senate which went out of the bill as in Committee of the Whole, can not the bill be further amended along that line?

Mr. BANKHEAD. If that were the case, there would be no necessity for reconsidering the vote.

Mr. OVERMAN. The point I have in mind is, even if the vote is not reconsidered, can we not reach it in another way?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I was about to say—and that is all I intend to say—that I am greatly troubled about this situation. I want to vote for 1-cent drop-letter postage. I believe that two-thirds of the Senate desire to vote for that I want to vote for excepting newspapers, or a certain class of them, perhaps not all of them, from the operations of the provision of the amendment increasing the rate on second-class mail matter. I should like to vote to increase the postage on magazines and second-class matter of that kind; but, if we can get a vote on each of these questions in the Senate, I shall be content with whatever the Senate does. are entitled to such a vote.

I desire to repeat what I said in the beginning, that the criticism of the Senator from Florida, if what has been said can be construed as criticism, is unfair, unjust, and unwarranted, because nothing has been done that it was not his right to do, and nothing has been done that it was not his duty to do under the circumstances.

That is all I care to say, Mr. President. I have not decided whether or not I shall vote to reconsider, but I would unhesitatingly do so if I thought that we could get a vote in the Senate on these propositions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there are three propositions contained in the amendment as reported by the committee. I am opposed to them all. I am opposed to each of them in the shape in which the question is presented.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] says it is well understood why a number of Senators oppose increasing the charge on the daily papers. I do not know what he means to imply, but I know why I am opposed to it on papers that go not a hundred miles from the office of publication. It is because they now pay all it costs the Government to carry them, and there is no excuse for adding a cent a pound for carrying daily papers that do not go over a hundred miles. I am opposed to the newspaper provision because I think it puts an unjust burden on the daily papers that are transported only a limited distance.

Coming to the magazine proposition, I am opposed to that because it is not scientifically drawn. It is not drawn so as to place the charge where the burden comes upon the Govern-The great burden comes from the length of the haul, and the only way to make a fair charge on magazines is to proportion the charge to the length of the haul. I am in favor of taxing them; I am in favor of increasing the postage against them based upon the length of the haul, based upon the service rendered; but I am not in favor of a flat rate upon all, charging the same increase to a publication that goes across the entire Nation and costs at least 15 cents a pound for haul that is put on one that goes but a hundred miles,

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator has such deep convictions on that matter, what objection can there be to bringing this matter up and letting him present his ideas in the form of an amendment, and let us vote upon the proposition?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will come to that in a few moments. I do not think this is a wise time to reduce the rate on drop letters. We need more money. We are seeking in all directions to raise money. The present rate is not a heavy burden, and I think that while we are straining for revenue we can very well afford for the present to leave the 2-cent rate on drop letters. The chances are that within the next 60 or 90 days we will need a good deal more revenue than we expect to raise by the pending revenue bill, and we will be called upon to provide additional means to raise revenue. If you consider the extra cent on letters as a tax, the tax is well distributed, and for the present the revenue is needed and should not be dis-

Now, as to the situation that confronts us. We debated a motion to suspend the rules; we discussed this whole subject; with a full Senate we voted on it, and by a majority voted not to suspend the rules. It is well known to Senators that those of us who are away from the Senate are usually not away for There are committees in session, and when the Senate is meeting at half-past 10 in the morning we are obliged to go to our offices a part of the time and work there. It is not a neglect of our duties to be in our offices at work when the Senate sits from half-past 10 in the morning until 6 in the evening. We must take time to go to our offices when we think there will not be before the Senate subjects in which we are especially concerned and when we think votes will not take place. We had fought out this question of suspending the rules to consider this amendment, which was designed to make such a radical change in our Postal Service, and half of the Members of the Senate now present were at work in their offices or in committee rooms when the amendment was offered in the Senate. It was reasonable to believe that such a question as this would not be submitted to a vote without the suggestion of the absence of a quorum or a call for the yeas and nays. Mr. President, if we can not rely upon a vote such as the one we had on this subject and which practically settled it, at least guaranteeing us that we will get notice and have a chance to come back and vote if the question is to come up again, then we can scarcely go to our rooms at all to attend to business.

I do not suggest any unfairness on the part of any Senator. There is not a Senator for whom I have a warmer affection than I have for my next-door neighbor, the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], and I know that nothing could induce him to do an act that he did not think was fair; but now is it not just for us who come back into the Senate and tell you that we were busy in our offices, inasmuch as we had fought this proposition out once and defeated the motion to suspend the rules, even by a majority, and had no thought that you would bring it to another vote without a call for a quorum or a call for the yeas and nays-is it not right to reconsider that vote and give us a chance?

I want to say that, while I am opposed to the propositions involved in this amendment, I do not intend to make any point of order against them. I do not think they ought to have been attached to this bill. For myself I will not make the point of order, but I do hope the Senate will reconsider the vote and not set the precedent of action of this kind without giving Senators who were absent the privilege of reconsideration when they come back into the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Georgia that there ought not to be any snap judgment taken in the Senate to the disadvantage of any Senators, although that has not always been the rule which has obtained here. I deny, however, that there has been any snap judgment taken in this case.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I did not say there was "snap judgment."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understand that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not mean that at all. I said it was regular and proper.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The fact of the matter is that the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], not a member of the Committee on ost Offices and Post Roads, arose and made a speech in the Senate in a tone of voice that everybody here could understand. He spoke to the Senate. The conditions in the Senate were the same as those that have obtained in this body during all the consideration of the Post Office bill. He proposed the amendment with reference to 1-cent drop-letter postage. After he had made his speech the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], in charge of the bill, rose and offered his amendment, reading from the bill the proposition which he asked to have submitted as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Utah. There was some discussion between the two Senators. The Senator from Utah did not wish to have the second-class mail amendment put on. The Senator from Florida insisted that it must go on. After a while consent was granted. The Chair asked if there was any objection, and after waiting quite a long time no objection was offered, and he declared the amendment as amended carried. Understand, the question was opened not by a member of the committee or by a Senator favorable to the committee amendment, but by a Senator who voted against the proposition to suspend the rules to consider the matter in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss the merits of the proposition to change the rates of postage. That matter has been discussed in the Senate, and if consent is given to reconsider and the subject is laid before the Senate on its merits it can be discussed further and amendments offered. I simply wish to direct myself for a moment to the question which is immediately before the Senate, namely, whether we shall reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

Believing as I do, and knowing as I do, that this amendment was adopted properly, I dislike very much to give up any possible advantage which it may have, although I would be very glad, indeed, to vote for a reconsideration if the propositions before the Senate could be considered upon their merits. It has been suggested that this amendment was not a proper one to be placed on the Post Office appropriation bill; but, sir, we have seldom passed any legislation affecting rates and other postal matters except upon an appropriation bill. Such action has always been taken by unanimous consent.

I have great respect for the opinions of others. I want them to have the same freedom of expression that I ask for myself; and unless I am convinced that the arguments are presented by Senators interested in the matter at issue, they will be given my conscientious attention. It does not seem possible to me, sir, that Senators interested in this matter will, through a technicality, deny the Senate an opportunity to act upon it and settle it upon the merits. That would be a monstrous proposition. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Martin] says he wants this matter considered upon its merits, and yet he couples with that statement the proposition that he wants every Senator to have a right to raise the point of order, which would prevent such consideration.

I believe, sir, that if I were opposed to this amendment and a large number of Members of this body came in and said, "I want to discuss that question upon its merits," I would refrain from exercising the right to interpose an objection which would prevent consideration. I repeat, I would like very much to vote to reconsider in order that Senators may have a right to discuss the matter and propose amendments, because I do not claim that we have presented a perfect proposition. We have, however, presented the basis for legislation which the country demands. Maybe certain newspapers or other publications should be exempt from the provision proposed by the committee; maybe it ought to fail altogether; maybe the committee which has presented the matter is wrong. Consideration by the Senate would tend to determine that question. You may listen to some influences which speak through the press and believe that therein lies your duty; but you go out to the people and present the matter to them and say, "We propose to reduce your postage one-half, and in order to do this we are asking that the great publications of the country shall pay simply a moiety, an almost negligible part, of what they ought to pay for the service which the Government performs for them." Tell them that, as I have tried to tell them for years, and popular sentiment will be found to be different from what you think it is, because the proposal is just, and many newspapers and other publications admit it is so. There is not a Senator here who wants to do injustice to a single legitimate publication, but every Senator should insist, without fear or hope of reward, that at least approximate justice shall be done the people.

I am anxious to listen to the arguments of Senators in contradiction of the proposition which the Senate committee has proposed; and I am going to ask again, now, Mr. President, if it is in order, for unanimous consent that this matter may be reconsidered, the rule suspended, and this amendment taken up and considered on its merits.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, does the Senator understand that there is coupled with that a request for an agreement that the amendment shall be considered upon its merits?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair state it. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Townsend] asks unanimous consent that the vote whereby the amendment was adopted be reconsidered, and that clause 3 of Rule XVI be suspended for the purposes of considering this amendment. Is there any objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I object. I want to explain that I have not the slightest purpose in making the point or order myself, but I do not think the Senate ought to be put on terms in respect to this matter. If any Senator wants to make the point of order, I am not willing to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement which would prevent him from doing so.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, what is a unanimous-consent agreement for the consideration of any bill but the Senate binding itself to refrain from objection? When we propose unanimous consent to take up any measure, what is it but the Senate putting itself "on terms" by agreeing that that matter may be considered without a point of order being made? That is all I ask here.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, there is no occasion for the Senator and myself to argue about what a unanimousconsent agreement is. Unanimous consent is asked, and I

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is all right. I do not like the excuse of the Senator.

Mr. President, that being true, every effort having been made to present this matter fully and fairly before the Senate, I submit that there is but one course for the Senators to pursue, and that is to vote against the motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The year and nays have been ordered on the motion to reconsider. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I now ask for a division of the two questions in the amendment now pending, the first vote to be taken upon the following part of the amendment:

Provided, That on and after July 1, 1917, drop letters shall be mailed at a rate of 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrier and rural free-delivery offices.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I am in favor of the whole amendment, of all parts of it; but the situation is that the postal revenues can not stand 1-cent letter postage unless the loss can be recouped in some measure by an increase on second-class mail matter.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if the Postmaster General does not say that even though the increase on second-class mail matter is not agreed to, he still would recommend that 1-cent postage on drop letters be provided for.

Mr. BRYAN. It is true the Postmaster General wanted this, anyhow; but here is the reason the Postmaster General gives for it. He thinks that if this reduction comes on drop letters the people will begin to understand that they can get the reduced rate upon all letters if second-class mail matter can be made to pay its proportion. It is a question for Congress to decide whether it wants to force a deficit of $20,000,000 or more. Assistant Postmaster General Koons, who, as everybody knows, is an expert in postal matters, says that the loss will be about $26,-000,000. Although every member of the committee voted in favor of the reduction on drop letters, the committee feel that it can not consent to do that and confront a deficit of fifteen to twenty million dollars.

If the Senator from Utah has the question divided and has a part of it adopted, it will be too late to raise the point of order, and then what happens? You have allowed the deficit to be created and you have prevented an opportunity to recoup any part of it. Of course, I can not agree, on the part of the committee, that the Smoot amendment shall be adopted until I know that the Senate will have a chance to vote on the other part of the amendment. It is an embarrassing position for the committee to be placed in, but that is the position we are in.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to ask the Senator from Florida if he will be willing to accept as a substitute for the rate provided 1 cent a pound on second-class mail for a distance of 100 miles, 2 cents a pound for 300 miles, and an increase of a cent a pound upon each additional 200 miles, thereby placing upon it the cost it puts upon the Government? I will vote for substantially that proposition against newspapers, magazines, and everything else.

Mr. BRYAN. I think that would be too great an increase. It would be too much. Of course, I would be willing to say for the first 100 miles 1 cent a pound, then 1½ cents a pound, and then 2 cents a pound.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, would you be willing to have it 1 cent a pound for the first 100 miles and add half a cent a pound for the next 200 miles, and half a cent a pound for the next 200 miles, making your charge upon second-class postage based upon the cost it places on the Government? I think it should increase beyond 2 cents for the long hauls, which really places the great charge upon the Government.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield. Mr. WEEKS. May I remind the Senator from Florida that a test was made of the probable loss on second-class mail the first week of last October, which indicated that by reducing the rate on drop letters 1 cent there would be a loss of $26,000,000 in revenues? The department officials think that is a little higher than it would average all the year around; that it would probably be between $20,000,000 and $25,000,000 dollars in revenue.

One other point. Rather than to accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia, it does seem to me that rather than do an irrational and unwise thing it would be better to have this whole matter go over until to-morrow and have an amendment carefully considered rather than to take it up at this hour of the night.

Mr. BRYAN. Just a minute and then I will be through. Of course we have to take whatever we can get. I suggest for the first 100 miles 1 cent a pound and for the balance of the country 11 cents a pound the first year and 2 cents the second year; but we will take whatever we can get.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida a question for information. That part of the amendment on which the Senator from Utah asks a separate vote relates to first-class matter. As to that part of the amendment, what would be the loss in dollars if the rate should be reduced from 2 cents to 1 cent an ounce?

Mr. BRYAN. Twenty to twenty-six million dollars. The Senator from Missouri must see that—

Mr. STONE. I should like to know why we should do that in the present state of the finances.

Mr. BRYAN. Because the department feels that the coun-

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I would like very much to hear. On this side we can not hear a word. I wish we could have order so that we may hear the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask unanimous consent that this amendment be considered in order to be amended as the Senate sees fit.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As the thing stands at present I shall object to that. If this matter can go over until to-morrow, some intelligent proposition may be presented to the Senate; but I shall object to-night to the consideration of any amendments that may be proposed.

Mr. BRYAN. Then I will move that the Senate take a recess. MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I present, and ask to have printed in the RECORD, a letter from a manufacturing firm in Detroit, Mich., in behalf of universal military training.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE TIMKEN-DETROIT AXLE Co., Detroit, Mich., February 13, 1917.

Hon. Chas. A. Townsend, United States Senate, Washington, D. C. DEAR SIR: I telegraphed you to-day via day letter, prepaid, as

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I telegraphed you to-day via day letter, prepaid, as follows:

"I would strongly urge the passage during the present session of Congress of a bill for universal military training. I believe a move of this kind is in the interests of adequate national preparedness and an insurance against war."

As a citizen of the United States, American born and of American descent, and consequently without the distracting influence of any partiforeign allegiance, I feel very strongly on this matter. I believe if this country nad been adequately prepared for trouble by universal training that the present crisis which we are facing would not have appeared. Germany has a very excellent spy system. The condition of this country has been reported, so I am informed, to the German military officials and like a great many other things they have done, they have taken it for granted that this country would be helpless and if they did get in trouble with them it would not amount to very much anyway.

Little Switzerland, right on Germany's border, is like a porcupine, full of spines, they don't want to bother her because, while Switzerland minds her own business, it wouldn't pay Germany to try and force her borders or violate her neutrality.

I belleve that the Senate and Congress of the United States owe it to their people to take such steps as will put this country in position where European nations will consider that they could not afford to have trouble with this country and them we won't have it.

I have three boys, all of which would come under this new law, and they and their parents would be only too glad to see that such a law was passed for the insurance of our country's continuous existence and independence.

I trust, therefore, that you will do as you always have done, work on the right side and use your influence to help this country put itself in position where its position as an independent Nation will be respected, because people and nations who are not inclined to respec the United States remain at peace, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Hartford, Meriden, Middletown, North Ashford, Norwalk, Norwich, Ridge-field, Stratford, and Westville, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for national prohibition, which were ordered to lie on the table

Mr. OLIVER presented petitions of the Congress of Women's Clubs of Western Pennsylvania, at a meeting held in Pittsburgh, and of the Chamber of Commerce, of Butler, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the use of all surplus funds from naturalization sources for the education of immigrants, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WATSON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Richmond, Ind., remonstrating against the proposed tax on excess profits of corporations, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Chamber of Com-merce of Santa Rosa, Cal., praying for the passage of the socall Webb bill to promote export trade, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles, Cal., remonstrating against the discontinuance of the pneumatic-tube system by the Post Office Department, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (S. 6254) for the relief of the Adams Express Co., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1055) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McLEAN:

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, some days ago the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Kern] gave notice that on Saturday, the 17th day of February, 1917, immediately after the routine morning business, he would ask the Senate to consider resolutions in commemoration of the life, character, and public services of the late Senator Benjamin F. Shively, of Indiana; the late Senator EDWIN C. BURLEIGH, of Maine; and of the late Senator JAMES P. CLARKE, of Arkansas. A conference has been held by Senators from the States of Indiana, Maine, and Arkansas, and, at the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Kern] and other Senators, and for the convenience of Senators I submit a request for unanimous consent, as follows:

The subject matter of this bill relates to controversies between railways and their employees. All legislation on this subject having been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and that committee having reported a bill on the same, unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from further consideration of that bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Com-

R. 19937) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks to take from the Speaker's table a bill which the Clerk will report by title, and disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. Sherwood, Mr. Russell of Missouri, and Mr. LANGLEY.

MANAGERS OF THE NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the joint resolution, which is the unfinished business.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 335) for the appointment of four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday in an amendment to this joint resolution appears the name George W. Black as a substitute for GUY T. HELVERING. That was a mistake. It should have been George Black. There is no "W" in his name, and I ask unanimous consent that that change be made, striking out the surplusage.

Mr. MANN. The amendment is still pending.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks to strike out the middle initial "W," leaving the name George Black. Is there objection?

There was no objection,

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute in the desk copy of the joint resolution, in line 10, the name of Thomas S. Bridgham.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the amendment that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] was offering is what the gentleman from North Carolina refers to. It was amended by substituting the name of George Black in place of Mr. Findlay. His amendment further provided for substituting the name of John W. West in line 10 for Thomas S. Bridgham. Now the gentleman asks unanimous consent that that part of the amendment be withdrawn.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will that make it Thomas S stead of John W. West? I do not recall exactly Will that make it Thomas S. Bridgham in-

Mr. MANN. A part of the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony] was to strike out the name of Thomas S. Bridgham in line 10 and to insert the name of John W. West. That part of the amendment is withdrawn, which leaves it Thomas S. Bridgham.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is what should be done. It was an error.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered. The question is on the remaining amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third others pertaining to the public lands of the United States.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Speaker lay before the House the bill (S. 7872) for the ratification of the sale of a Federal building site in Hawaii, there being a similar bill on the calendar. There is one small amendment that I want to offer.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 7872) to confirm and ratify the sale of the Federal building site at Hono-

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for half an hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, February 13, 1917, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] made a speech in which he intimated that a newspaper conspiracy exists, organized for the purpose of misleading the people of the United States as to our international relations and as to the cause of the European What his evidence may be I do not know, but undoubtedly he will present it at the investigation which he tells us he will demand. I doubt whether the people of this country are of the opinion that the German side of the war has been insufficiently and unfairly presented in the press of the country. Personally I believe that Germany has had a fairer show than Great Britain. I do not say that the German side of the question has had in our press a fairer presentation than that of the allies, but I think that Germany herself has had a fairer show than Great Britain. Prof. Henry Van Dyke has been our minister at The Hague all through the war until recently, when he returned home to the United States. Prof. Van Dyke did he returned home to the United States. Prof. Van Dyke did not derive his knowledge of the course of the European war from American newspapers. He formed his opinions on the spot, almost within sound of the guns. Yet he has written the fiercest indictment of Germany which I have seen in the public press. But, Mr. Speaker, the American people are not going to base their opinions of the European war on the biased statement of either side. That is not our way. There are certain facts which stand out so clearly that no man can dispute them, and on those facts the American people will make up their minds and on those facts the American people will make up their minds and on them history will base its verdict.

There are certain things which each one of us knows. know that when the war broke out Germany was ready to the last buckle both on land and at sea. We know that France and Russia were only half ready, and in the matter of ammunition entirely unready for war. We know that Great Britain had practically no army and even less equipment, but that she was admirably prepared at sea, as she always has been for the last 100 years, and as an island empire she must be if she wishes to make sure of her food supply. We know that Germany's original White Book attributed the outbreak of the war to Russia and that only subsequently did she accuse Great Britain. facts, at all events, we have to guide us in our search for the nation guilty of instigating the war.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a matter of information?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman has just stated the facts were indisputable that Germany was overwhelmingly prepared for war, and that the allies were insufficiently unpre pared. Will the gentleman please tell us how it could be that a nation so overwhelmingly prepared was defeated at the battle of the Marne and driven back a long number of miles by a nation wholly unprepared?

Mr. GARDNER. I said that France was half prepared. According to Belloc, the reason why Germany was defeated in the battle of the Marne was this: In order to meet a movement of the Sixth French Army around their right flank the Germans weakened their center and the French under Gen. Foch broke through. The battle was won because of the worst military mistake which German strategy has made since before the days of Frederick the Great.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentle-

Mr. GARDNER. Oh, if the gentleman will please not make me show my ignorance in a military discussion. These facts, at all events, we have to guide us in forming our judgment as to which nation was responsible for the outbreak of the war. Whichever nation was responsible, it has probably brought more misery upon the human race than has been caused by all the European wars for the last 300 years put together. Such is the heavy burden of responsibility which must be borne by some one, and Americans who have read the evidence know well who ought to

We know that Germany intentionally violated the treaty by which Belgium's neutrality was guaranteed. We know that fact by her own statement. We know that Germany treated Belgium, and continues to treat Belgium, with unheard-of barbarity—"frightfulness," as it is called in the German war vocabulary. We know that Germany has repeatedly torpedoed and shelled defenseless noncombatants, while Great Britain has been seriously accused of only one act of ruthlessness at seathe Baralong murder, as the Germans call it. I am obliged to admit that I have not been altogether satisfied with Great Britain's defense in the case of the Baralong.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. GARDNER. Yes. Mr. CALDWELL. I just wish to ask the gentleman about Great Britain's treatment of Greece.

Mr. GARDNER. The allies were invited into Greece by Venizelos, who was then prime minister. They have murdered no women and children in Greece. The sympathies of the Greek people are overwhelmingly with the allies. I have many The sympathies of the Greeks in my district, and I have yet to hear of one of them who takes the part of Germany and the central European powers. There is not a Greek in the United States who fails to know that the only reason why Greece, under Venizelos, did to know that the only reason why Greece, under Venizelos, did not join the allies was because it was forcibly restrained from so doing by King Constantine, the brother-in-law of the Kaiser.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. I received a telegram signed by a great many Greeks in my city protesting the interference of the allies with the people of Greece, so that there are some Greeks here—

Mr. GARDNER. Oh, I know those telegrams can be gotten up anywhere, but I can testify, and so can the gentleman, if he knows anything about their rank and file, that Greeks in America side with the allies side with the allies

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. GARDNER. I prefer to go ahead at present.

We know that in this war both sides have resorted to the use of poisonous gases and the bombing of cities from aircraft, practices which seem to us indefensible. In each instance we know that the allies followed Germany's example. We know that Germany has torn from their homes in Belgium and in northern France peaceful citizens, and has subjected them to a new form of slavery, against which the civilized world protests. All those things we know, whether our news is drawn from pro-ally news-papers, like the New York Herald and the New York Sun, or from pro-German newspapers, like the New York American and the New York Evening Mall. Furthermore, we know that on February 10, 1915, President Wilson warned Germany that we should hold that nation to "strict accountability" if in her submarine warfare she destroyed American lives or American ships. We know that on May 7, 1915, a German submarine tor-pedoed the Lusitania and that more than 100 American lives were destroyed. We know that for almost a year subsequent to the destruction of the Lusitania communications were exchanged between our Government and the German Government, and that meanwhile Germany continued to maintain and to some extent, at least, to practice her asserted right to torpedo merchantmen without warning. We know that after the Sussex was torpedoed President Wilson on April 18, 1916, informed Germany that we should break off relations with her unless assurances were given us that no more vessels would be torpedoed without warning. We know that Germany gave President Wilson the required promise, but reserved the right to recall this pledge. We know that except in a few debatable instances Germany subwe know that except in a few departure instances definant, substantially kept her promise, so far as American interests were concerned, until January 31, 1917, when she withdrew her restrictions on submarine warfare. Thereupon President Wilson broke off all relations with Germany on February 3, 1917, and informed the world that if the German threats were fulfilled he should come before Congress and ask us to authorize the use of the armed forces of the United States to protect our people in their rights. There the situation rests, but there it can not continue to rest, for it has speedily become apparent that American merchant ships are unwilling to face the terror of German submarine warfare unless they are furnished with some means of defense. I for one believe that it is the duty of our Government to see that our merchantmen are armed to defend themselves or are convoyed through the danger zone.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield? We gave the gentleman 30 minutes.

Mr. GARDNER. All right. Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman just expressed his opinion of what the United States ought to do with reference to protecting its commerce?

Mr. GARDNER.

Mr. CALDWELL. Now, I would like to know of the gentleman if he will maintain that position if the President actually

Mr. GARDNER. Of course I shall.

Mr. CALDWELL. All right.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield before he goes Mr. GARDNER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio. Will the gentleman yield before he goes further?

Mr. FESS. I am personally anxious to know whether in our reading the news-we are reading dispatches that are not censored-we are justified in believing that the facts are as we read them in the press? In other words, getting to Mr. Mooke's charge as to the accuracy of these press dispatches we read.

Mr. GARDNER. Of course, I can not know; but before I go on with my speech I am going to read Henry Van Dyke's poem addressed to Germany, which was published a day or two ago. Henry Van Dyke, our minister to Holland all through this war, can not have been misled by censored news. Here is his poem:

MARE LIBERUM.

[By Henry Van Dyke.] Tou dare to say with perjured lips:

"We fight to make the ocean free"—
You whose black trail of butchered ships
Bestrews the bed of every sea
Where German submarines have wrought
Their horrors! Have you never thought
What you call freedom men call piracy?

Unnumbered ghosts that haunt the wave
Where you have murdered cry you down,
And seamen whom you would not save
Weave now in weed-grown depths a crown
Of shame for your imperious head,
A dark memorial of the dead
Women and children whom you left to drown.

Nay, not till thieves are set to guard The gold, and corsairs called to keep O'er peaceful commerce watch and ward, And wolves to herd the helpless sheep, Shall men and women look to thee, Thou ruthless Old Man of the Sea, To safeguard law and freedom on the deep!

In nobler breeds we put our trust:
The nations in whose sacred lore
The "ought" stands out above the "must,"
And honor rules in peace and war.
With these we hold in soul and heart,
With these we choose our lot and part
Till liberty is safe on sea and shore.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. I will ask the gentleman please to let me continue. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 10 minutes remaining. Mr. FESS. Is Dr. Van Dyke's poem an answer to my ques-[Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER. Absolutely. That shows that men on the spot form the same opinion of Germany which we form here.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

Mr. GARDNER. I will yield for one "Amen!"

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. There is a

Mr. GARDNER. But not for a stump speech.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. There is a serious question in my mind which I would like the gentleman to explain. He has asserted the right of trade to-day with the nations with whom we have the right to do business

Mr. GARDNER. How does the gentleman know I have? Mr. DAVIS of Texas. The gentleman said he was willing to convoy and defend that trade.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; because we warned Germany that we should hold her to "strict accountability."

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. The question I want to ask is this: Up until the last few weeks, for the past two years have not we had a perfect national and international right to trade with Germany as a free Government and we a neutral?

Mr. GARDNER. I do not know; but if we break off rela-

Mr. DAVIS of Texas rose.

Mr. GARDNER. No; the gentleman must allow me to answer. If we break off relations with Great Britain on the ground that she has interfered with that right, you will not hear me on the floor of this House making speeches designed to help a nation with which we have broken off all relations.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. The point with me is not a hypothetical case. It is an actual condition.

Mr. GARDNER. Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, William Jennings Bryan proposes that we should prepare ourselves to present a united front to the enemy by first tearing the Nation asunder in a political campaign on the question of peace or war. He and his followers, the pacifists, the extreme socialists, and those who place loyalty to Germany above loyalty to America, are engaged in appealing to the cowardice which lurks in every man's breast.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. I can not. Mr. SHALLENBERGER. You just attacked a very distinguished gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman will please protect his distinguished statesman in his own time.

Cowardice is the consequence of the instinct of self-preservation, the strongest of human instincts. The extent to which a man can overcome the instinct of self-preservation is the measure of his manhood. They are trying—
Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman answer or not whether he voted for the naval bill?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have my time protected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has notified everybody that

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has notified everybody that he does not want to be disturbed while delivering his speech. The Chair will keep everybody off that he can.

Mr. GARDNER. This cowardice Mr. Bryan and his followers glorify by calling it "good will toward men," and timidity they have rechristened "service to humanity." They are trying to goad the people into a campaign in which class will be approved excited the service of the company of the compa arrayed against class and race will be arrayed against race. Smooth-tongued speakers are to be employed and trenchant pens are to be made sharper. Perchance foreign gold may be spent; who knows? Then, when the Nation is successfully split into two halves, animated by hatred of each other, rather than by a joint hatred of the foreign foe; when our courage is at the lowest ebb; when our righteous indignation has been sufficiently aspersed; then we are to vote upon the question of peace or war, If the vote be for peace, we are to submit to any indignities rather than strike back. If the vote be war, as a Nation divided

The President of the United States, our captain, even now should be nerving us for the struggle. By every means in his power he should frown down this campaign of William Jennings Bryan, who is whispering to the rank and file that death awaits them at every turn; that the cause for which they are enlisted is unjust; that peace and plenty are pleasant things, while the snows of Valley Forge are bitter cold and the rapid fire of machine guns is dangerous. Oh, the instinct of self-preservation is strong in men. Doubtless the Bryans of those days were whispering trembling words to the Minute Men of Lexington. In those days gentlemen were crying, "Peace! peace!" just as they are crying, "Peace! peace!" to-day. They were crying, "Mediate!" and "Arbitrate!" but the patriots fought on instead of parleying, and we gained our liberties.

The pacifists and the copperheads of the Civil War declared for arbitration and mediation and said that the war was a failure and that a convention ought to be called to put an end to the horrible strife and that the question of slavery should be left for future adjustment. But Abraham Lincoln said "No; we have put our hand to the plow and we shall not turn back." We did not arbitrate and we did not mediate. We fought the Civil War to a conclusion. We put an end to slavery, and who is there to-day, North or South, who does not rejoice that we turned a deaf ear to the pacifists of 1864?

It may be that the day shall come when mankind will beat its broad falchions into plowshares. It may be that internationalism will solve the awful problem of war; but I shall not believe in internationalism and I shall not believe in the brotherhood of man as a practical, statesmanlike rule for world government until I find Californians who are willing that their daughters should be married to Chinamen or until I find some Mississippian who is willing that his sister should marry a When those far-off days are here, then I shall know that we have reached the era of the brotherhood of man.

Meanwhile I am an American. I want no internationalism. I want no conglomerate flag of all the nations, with a yellow streak down the middle. I know what the Star-Spangled Banner stands for. I know what it has stood for in history. When I behold it my ears seem to hear the shrill music of Lexington's fifes and the grim rattle of the drums at Concord. There is an echo which reverberates in my head. It is the thunder of Perry's cannon on Lake Erie. I see the sharp escarpment of Missionary Ridge. I see the charge of Pickett at Gettysburg, and I see the stubborn Union battle line whose heroic valor checked that heroic assault. I hear the deep bass of Dewey's guns at Manila, and I hear the sharp rattle of musketry in Cuba. I know what that banner stands for in peace, how it stands for liberty and honesty and courage and for the rights of man; how it stands for the homely virtues of the family and for the friendships which gather around the fireside.

May the God of our fathers ever protect and defend that flag. May it rise triumphant. May it ever be unfolded to the music of the trumpet which shall never sound "retreat," and may it wave forever. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CALDWELL. To ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes so that he can answer a

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts want to answer?

Mr. GARDNER.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cald-WELL] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended a minute to answer a question. Is there objection?

I object. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] is recognized for 20 minutes. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I wish the newspapers of this country which are now declaring war against a foreign country and endeavoring to involve a hundred millions of American citizens in a strife which is not their business would take note of the fact that the American Congress to-day, by this expression of applause, indicates that it is prepared to be a de-liberative body under the Constitution and proposes to exercise its rights. [Applause.] I wish the great editorial writers, whether subsidized or not, would take note of the fact that there is a revival of the independent spirit of Americanism in this old House of Representatives that proposes to stand its ground against any stampeding, whether it be inspired by British gold or German lucre. [Applause.]

Why, I am surprised at the pacific tone of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] this morning. I had expected he would be prepared to declare martial law in the United States, and that under the lead of that eloquent editorial writer, Col. George Harvey, who spoke to us in Washington last night, and pictured the glory of war in Europe, we would hear the "tramp, tramp, tramp" of the American boys coming up from the farms and firesides prepared for the terrible onslaught. I thought we might hear the salvos of applause that would come from the boys in the trenches in France crying "Vive l'Amerique," and from the boys of Great Britain as they exclaimed, "Here come the boys of the United States to share our burdens with us." [Applause.]

But the gentleman from Massachusetts is pacific this morning. The only warlike note that he sounds to-day is the piece of verse that he brings us from Henry Van Dyke, who evidently is as strong a champion of war as the novelist, Owen Wister, who paid an unusual tribute in verse to the President of the United States some time ago; so that all we have before us this morning in addition to the usual "declaration of war" in the newspaper headlines is the poetic recital of the gentleman from Massachusetts and the report of the American Rights League.

Ah, my friend from Massachusetts and my friend Col. Harvey who spoke last night of the beauties of the war in Europe, let me suggest that the recruiting offices are open and that the ships are carrying munitions back and forth under the protection of British guns, and that every American boy who wants to enlist in the war in Europe is free to go and will be received with open arms on the other side. [Applause.]

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I can not yield. But are those who are declaring war, the signers of the Declaration of the American Rights League, including the Washington minister of the gospel who declares that Christ came upon earth not so much to save men as to punish nations—are those signers of the Declaration of the American Rights League and the numerous other editorial belligerents in America resigning their positions and enlisting in this war in Europe to save civilization?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not yield. The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There are many men fighting this foreign battle in the United States who are not prepared to come up to the captain's office and sign up for this war they are agitating, particularly in that aggressive fraternity whose editorials just now are calling upon other men to make the sacrifice. If they were sincere, those who are calling upon the youth of America, the recruiting offices of the Nation would not now be so devoid of volunteers as they are. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I can speak a little for the common people of the United States this morning. I have been hearing from them in thunderous tones during the last three or four days; the mere reference to the fact that there is a Liberty Bell still existing in the United States, and that the old Hall where American independence was proclaimed and where the Constitution was given to the people still stands, has reechoed throughout the country. The responses coming in from every State of the Union are expressive of the American heart upon this question of foreign alliances-with almost a unanimous voice they are sounding praises to almighty God that some men remain in the Congress of the United States who adhere to American principles. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] has not been personal in his references, and I am glad he has not, because I would not want to be personal in kind. The gentleman seems to think-in fact, he stated-that my remarks on Tuesday were an indictment of the newspaper press of the United States for publishing false reports that tended to inflame the people and encourage them in the belief that it is their duty to civilization to pull one of the belligerents out of the stress in which it finds itself. I did not make the direct charge.

I stood upon this floor and quoted the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Callaway], and I read his speech into the Record, which speech charged that the J. P. Morgan interests had arranged with 12 great newspaper men with a view of influencing other newspapers, and that those newspapers-25 of the greatest of them-were being paid for the service they are rendering in the promotion of the war spirit, and in the teaching of a false patriotism in the United States, misleading the people into the belief that this war in Europe is an American war. It was the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Callaway] who made that charge. He put it in the Congressional Record. And so far as I know not one newspaper in the United States published that remarkable statement; and it was not published at all until I made reference to it on the floor of the House and invited some one of the majority to introduce a resolution to investigate it. I repeat now that challenge to the majority of this House, a challenge to introduce a resolution to inquire whether or not newspapers are actually subsidized as charged, because it is due to honest journalism in the United States that the real facts with regard to this monstrous proposition be known to the tax-payers of this land, whose blood must be let and whose burdens must be tremendously increased if we are to be driven into this fierce controversy across the seas. I will leave that challenge stand for the day. If no one of the majority will introduce that resolution, I shall expect to introduce it myself, in fairness to those men in this country who are writing newspaper articles and publishing newspapers, who want to be free from suspicion that they are under the Morgan influence or that they are dominated by Lord Northcliffe or the moneybags of London or Berlin. [Applause.]
The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] deals, as I expected he would, with the horrors of war. I give him credit for gallant service in the Spanish-American War, in which he made an honorable record. The gentleman has not seen all the horrors of war; he was not old enough to observe its ill effects in the United States when we had our difficulty more than 50 years ago; but the gentleman has spoken of the horrors of war, and he has dwelt, as these great editors do, upon the bombs flying in the air destroying children and the submarines coming up from the bowels of the sea destroying ships that are carrying munitions to keep the war in Europe going. He pictures all this, but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] does not tell the whole story; his view is restricted somewhat by the influence upon his poetic mind of the verses of the former minister to The Hague.

Did the gentleman from Massachusetts look away down at the bottom of the page of the Washington Post this morning and read this simple announcement—

Holland buys tanks.

And did he read, coming from The Hague, this simple, special cable dispatch, almost buried where it could not be found in the newspaper:

Holland continues to improve and modernize her defenses. Among other ultra-modern war machines which will soon be received here are several tanks. Two frameworks for these machines have just arrived from America.

So we are making war tanks for Holland!

The Army construction work will equip them with armor.

Holland, a neutral country in this war, is preparing to use tanks. Now what are tanks? They are the invention of some American, I understand, and they have already been successfully employed by the British in the treuches in dealing with the Germans. Here in this paper is the picture of a tank an instrument of terror rolling ruthlessly over the trenches in which the German soldiers are. No notice, no warning. Buried alive! "Crushed in the earth by these amiable instruments of warfare that are manufactured in the United States and are being used by Great Britain to win its victories. If submarines are ruthless, and maybe they are, what are these tanks?

The very paper which publishes the picture of one of these tanks relates how these men cry out in despair, the fathers of children, the husbands of wives made widows; crushed and covered into the very bowels of the earth without warning, just as is charged against the submarine or the aeroplane. Buried in the dead of night without warning. But that is war; it is what is to be expected if we plunge into the kind of war that the gentleman from Massachusetts has been preaching in this House, and that the great editors of this country are urging the President to declare.

The paper from which I quote is opposed to Germany. have nothing to do with that. I am only pointing out that if the sinking of the Lusitania was inhuman, there are other inhuman methods of warfare to which civilized nations apply themselves.

Here is an article from the same paper entitled-

"German brutality on raids by U-boats."

Mr. Noyes, the great English writer, tells us all about it it is copyrighted for the papers that are to use it in the United Then comes the picture on the same page of the apparently praiseworthy and effective work that is being done by the English tanks rolling over the men sleeping in the trenches. The headlines tells us that-

Tanks, airplanes, and guns, not men, will win the war. Land ironclads of huge power foreseen which will make present tractors but toys, and will destroy the country over which they pass. Modern war made so terrible by new monsters of destruction that the prospect of an organized world-controlled hostilities is forecast.

Surely this new method of warfare does not have the sanction of international law.

But the story comes from H. G. Wells, one of the novelists of England, who pictures the terrible execution of these new instruments of war that England is said to employ,

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not yield. The gentleman from Massachusetts, in order to get his facts right, ought not to be pro ally nor pro-German, but a fair, square-deal American. [Applause.] Did he take up the Washington Times of last night? If he did and looked closely into the "afternoon edition," he found, way down at the bottom of the page, so far down that he could scarcely see it—the woman's referendum question takes up most of the column-but way down at the bottom, in an eight-line paragraph, he would find an announcement. Bearing in mind that Germany is the fierce "barbaric power" that is "ruthlessly destroying" little children in their sleep, he should have read this brief article. Here it is. How it got by, the Lord only knows, but here it is at the bottom of the page:

FLYERS KILL 16 TOTS.

BERLIN (via Sayville wireless), February 14.

Funeral services for 16 children killed by English flyers on February 10 were held in the Church of Our Lady, at Brugge, on Sunday, the press bureau announced to-day. The children were skating when the flyers dropped bombs.

It is not one side alone that plays this war game. tries involved are playing it, and playing it to the limit, and those that may be getting the worst of it at times send out the Macedonian cry to the Government of the United States, now at peace with the world, "to come over and help us." But let us see about this "barbaric" warfare, this killing of these "16 little tots" skating on the ice.

Did this news get very far? It you obtained a copy of the last edition of the Evening Times and examined it from the front to the last column, you would find that even these eight lines had gone out. I do not find fault with the Times. doing the best it can, it is a good paper, but somebody slipped a cog, and that item which got into the afternoon edition, telling you how English bombs were dropped on children skating on the ice, was removed from view when the final edition was [Applause.]

Mr. SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 7757. An act authorizing a further extension of time to purchasers of land in the former Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indian. Reservation, Okla., within which to make payment.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 455. An act to define the rights and privileges of the trustees of municipally owned interstate railways, and construing the act to regulate commerce with reference thereto;

H. R. 10697. An act for the relief of S. Spencer Carr.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 8003. An act authorizing the county of Morrison, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in said county; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 18453), disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses with the exception of amendments numbered 48 and 111.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman can get in like some of the rest of us on the general debate on the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there is no conference report to The gentleman does not require unanimous consent.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Senate disagreed to the conference report.

Mr. MANN. And that wipes it out.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But I will say that the conferees agreed on all of the articles except four.

Mr. MANN. That may be true, but the conference report has been rejected, and we have been notified to that effect, and that ends it. The Senate has sent a message to the House, which is irregular and unparliamentary, which they probably do not know, stating that they have rejected the conference report, and insist upon four Senate amendments, but what they have done as far as the parliamentary situation is concerned is to insist on all of the Senate amendments. The gentleman should now move, not to ask unanimous consent, to take the bill from the Speaker's table, with Senate amendments thereto, and to further insist upon the disagreement of the House to all of the Senate amendments with the exception of the two which he desires to concur in with amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, that is correct. move to take the House bill from the Speaker's table, with Senate amendments thereto, and to further insist upon the House disagreement to all of the Senate amendments with the exception of amendments 48 and 111, and to agree to the conference.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the gentleman does not want to agree to the conference yet.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, there are two amendments that I desire action upon, amendments 48 and 111.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to all of the Senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill except amendments 48 and 111.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, as to amendment No. 48, I move that the House concur in amendment No. 48 with an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House concur in Senate amendment 48 with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Senate amendment 48 be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report Senate amendment No. 48.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to approve the assessments, together with maps showing right of way and definite location of proposed drainage ditches made under the laws of the State of Minnesota upon the tribal and allotted land of the Indian reservations in the State of Minnesota.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to pay the amount assessed against said tribal and allotted lands. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000, to be reimbursable from any funds belonging to the individual allottees, or their heirs, from any funds belonging to the tribes subject to be prorated, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to approve deeds for right of way from such said allottees, or their heirs, as may be necessary to permit the construction and maintenance of said drainage ditches upon the payment of adequate damages therefor: Provided, That no patent in fee shall be issued for any tract of land under the terms hereof. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to do and perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions hereof into force and effect.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texass. Now. Mr. Speaker, I move to con-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in that with the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to approve the assessments, together with maps showing right of way and definite location of proposed drainage ditches made under the laws of the State of Minnesota upon the tribal and allotted lands of the Indian reservations in the State of Minnesota. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to pay the amounts assessed against said tribal and allotted lands. That for the purposes specified in this section there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $60,000, to be reimbursable from any funds in the possession of the United States belonging to the individual allottees, whose lands are benefited, or their heirs, in case of their decease, when the payment relates to allotted lands, and from any funds belonging to the tribes subject to be prorated, when the payment relates to tribal lands. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to approve deeds for right of way from such said allottees, or their heirs, as may be necessary to permit the construction and maintenance of said drainage ditches upon the payment of adequate damages therefor: *Provided*, That no patent in fee shall be issued for any tract of land under the terms hereof. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to do and perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions hereof into force and effect.

**Nr. MANN** Mr. Speaker in order to keep the recover depreciation.**

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in order to keep the record straight, while it was not so reported, I understand that the gentleman's motion is to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment striking out all of the language of the Senate amendment and inserting in lieu thereof the language which the Clerk has just read.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that so that the Clerk may have that record.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Texas is that all of the language of Senate amendment No. 48 be stricken out and the matter just read in the nature of an amendment be substituted therefor.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, in the reading by the Clerk of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas one clause was omitted, and is probably omitted from the copy sent to the Clerk's desk, namely, the clause after the words "said tribal and allotted lands"- on account of benefits accruing to said lands by reason of the construction of a drainage ditch or ditches under the laws of the State of Minnesota.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman a complete copy?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that the gentleman send that up and have the complete copy substituted for the other.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the following substituted for the language just reported by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Stephens of Texas moves to concur in Senate amendment No. 48, with an amendment striking out all of the language of amendment No. 48 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to approve the assessments, tegether with maps, showing right of way and definite location of proposed drainage ditches made under the laws of the State of Minnesota upon the tribal and allotted lands of the Indian reservations of the State of Minnesota. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to pay the amounts assessed against said tribal and allotted lands, on account of benefits accruing to said lands by reason of the construction of a drainage ditch or ditches under the laws of the State of Minnesota. That for the purposes specified in this section, there is hereby appropriated, ont of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $69,000, to be reimbursable from any funds in the possession of the United States belonging to the individual allottees, whose lands are benefited, or their heirs, in case of their decease, when the payment relates to allotted lands, and from any funds belonging to the tribes subject to be prorated, when the payment relates to tribal lands. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to approve deeds for right of way from such said allottees, or their heirs, as may be necessary to permit the construction and maintenance of said drainage ditches upon the payment of adequate damages therefor: Provided, That no patent in fee shall be issued for any tract of land under the terms of this paragraph until the United States shall have been wholly reimbursed for all assessments paid or to be paid on such tract under the terms hereof. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to do and perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions hereof into force and effect."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that this amendment came from the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER]. It was not put in the bill in the House for the reason that it is legislation. The Senate, however, inserts everything of that kind it desires, as we know, and in order to come to an agreement with the Senate on this amendment we submit the present substitute for the Senate amendment, and that is the parliamentary situation at present. I desire to state that the committee investigated the matter and we believe that the relief asked for should be granted. The situation is this: The Indians are situated in a drainage district in that State. The State has laws regulating these matters and the Indians are interested equally with the whites and the citizens of the State relative to the drainage of this land. What benefits one benefits all and it is a piece of legislation that is needed in that country, and we received from the gentleman from Minnesota his amendment that covers the same ground that the Senate one does. For that reason we ask that the substitute be adopted.

Mr. STEENERSON. I want to ask the chairman of the committee

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I first yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Carter].

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the conferees when they went into the conference found this proposition in the bill, and after an examination it was decided that neither the language nor the amount appropriated was sufficient to do the thing that was contemplated by the amendment. The conferees had no right under the rules of the House to put in the language necessary to have the work done, and certainly had no right to exceed the amount appropriated by this amendment. So rather than exceed our authority we brought the matter back to the House, all of us agreeing that the proposition should be taken care of. I yield back the balance of the time to the be taken care of. I yie gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire some time? I will yield him some time.

Mr. STEENERSON. Very well. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield the gentleman from Minesota five minutes

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman this question: What is the difference between the substitute as offered by the gentleman from Texas and the proposition as offered by the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota to answer the question himself.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The substitute is mine.

Mr. STEENERSON. But the gentleman from Texas has offered an amendment and then the gentleman from Minnesota offered an amendment or a substitute to his amendment,

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I can say there is no difference except I found the Clerk, in reading the one sent up by the chairman of the committee, omitted to read one clause, and thereupon I sent up my copy, which the Clerk read in its en-

Mr. STEENERSON. Where did this originate? Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will say to the gentleman, if I have permission, four years ago I received a request from the Fond du Lac Reservation in our State, that has been open to white settlement, for some kind of legislation that would enable the construction of ditches serving allotments of Indian tribal lands similar to the construction of ditches in purely white territory under the laws of the State. I thereupon framed

Mr. STEENERSON. An act of Congress?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes; an act of Congress. That was confined to the Fond du Lac Reservation. At that time it was suggested in the Indian Office that it might be possible to have the terms so broad as to cover the entire State, but we did not enact it in that form at that time.

Under this act which formerly was passed they proceeded in that county and on the reservation to establish the drainage ditch, and, as the gentleman well knows, it is a court matter, and the court proceedings in our State have been complied with and all the surveys have been made and estimates of the benefits made, so every piece of land, whether belonging to whites or Indians, has now assessed against it the proportionate benefit it will receive from the construction of this ditch. That work was completed more than a year ago. The original act required plans and specifications for the ditch should have to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and he had full dis-cretion in this matter. It was thought advisable to give him full discretion in order that the rights of the Indians might be absolutely and completely protected. The Secretary of the Interior, acting through an engineer whom he sent out there a year and a half ago and again last year, suggested that some modification in the plans was needed in order that some of the Indians might have their rights absolutely protected beyond peradventure and thereupon modifications were had, the last only occurring a very few weeks ago, about two weeks ago, and a final statement from the engineer sent out by the Indian Office was made as to certain minor details that would have to be changed. They have made those changes and at their request it is necessary to have an appropriation. I found that the Indian Office, while the bill was in the Senate, had asked that there be inserted in the Indian appropriation bill legislation giving general authority in drainage matters all over the northern part of the State, so that the law will be applicable to the White Earth Reservation or any other place where Indian lands might be affected by drainage propositions. So when the bill went to conference it contained this provision which the Senate had inserted, and they had authorized an item of $15,000, which they thought would be sufficient, though this did not have any provision made for this particular drainage proposition. That was all that was thought necessary. I may say this is ready for actual action.

That is on the Fond du Lac Reserva-Mr. STEENERSON. tion.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That is on the Fond du Lac Reservation. We found the assessed benefits against all the Indian allotments-and there are several hundred of themamount to $35,000. Therefore I suggested we increase the $15,000 to $35,000, so that this Fond du Lac proposition could now be taken care of and we would not have to pass a general law, which was satisfactory to all persons interested, but it has been suggested that there might be need of more than the $35,000 and $15,000, and so out of caution we authorized the Secretary, in his discretion, to draw up to $60,000, but no more. So the law is applicable generally to the State as it now stands, and substantially it takes care of this proposition.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Steenerson] has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a further question of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Mil-LER]. I believe he states that this provision has the approval of the Interior Department?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am informed by the Senators that it was submitted to the Interior Department; and some of the language, I think, they changed to suit themselves, and it does meet with their approval.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman has no direct information?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Except in this, that I conferred with the drainage engineer in the Indian Office and with the administrative officer that has general charge of matters of that kind. I was unable to get hold of the commissioner, because he was not in his office. I recollect that I talked briefly with Mr. Meritt, the assistant commissioner, while he was on duty at the Senate end of the Capitol, and he did not disap-

Mr. STEENERSON. As I understand the provision now, it will include all the Indian reservations in Minnesota-the Red Lake Reservation, where there are no allotted lands, and the White Earth Reservation, where the lands are allotted?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. But there will be no action without additional appropriation, the gentleman will under-

Mr. STEENERSON. I understand.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It was understood in the Indian Office-and that is the point on which I conferred with Mr. Meritt particularly—that $35,000 is to take care of the drainage proposition in Fond du Lac Reservation. Mr. STEENERSON. Has the gentleman from Texas [Mr.

Stephens] any information as to whether this provision is satisfactory to the Department of the Interior?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Only through the conference of the two Houses. We discussed the matter, and we had the in-been placed before the House originally the House would have agreed to it, but that it would have been subject to a point of order because it was new legislation.

Mr. STEENERSON. You have no communication from the Interior Department?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Interior Department has no objection to it, I understood it from the hearings of the Senate I think it is very beneficial at this point.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say to the gentleman that I received several protests from people who had lands on the White Earth Reservation, stating that this project was inimical to the interests of the Indians. The gentleman has heard nothing about it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is all in the hands of the Secretary, and if he sees that it would be injurious to any of the Indians he has discretion to use the funds as he sees proper.

Mr. STEENERSON. I can see where it would be beneficial to the Red Lake Reservation, where there are 300,000 acres of

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The senior Senator from Minnesota has carefully gone over this, and it meets with his entire

Mr. STEENERSON. I had not heard anything about that. I received two protests from the White Earth Reservation, stating that they were sent to Senator Clapp and Senator Negson and myself, and those are the only objections that I have

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. After we investigated the matter we were sure that this legislation should pass in the shape that it is now in.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman is satisfied that it would be for the interest of the Indians on all these Minnesota reservations?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It comes out of their funds. It is reimbursable.

Mr. STEENERSON. I understand that where the expense of the drainage project benefits the tribal land it is paid out of the tribal funds, and where it benefits individual allotments it is taken out of the funds of the allottees?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is correct.
Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield to me? received one protest from Mr. Beauleiu, I think it was, against this proposition, which was the only dissenting voice I have heard, if my memory serves me right.

Mr. STEENERSON. My information comes from other

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. One of the Senate conferees stated the Indian Bureau was favorable to this and so expressed itself in the Senate hearings. I did not look up the hearings to verify that statement, but after looking into the proposition and seeing that the drainage of all these lands might be stopped and held up unless something was done, and a large portion of these lands might be held up unless something was done to provide for running the ditches across the Indian lands, it then seemed to me imperative that we take some action in the premises, and we next looked to see if there was any violation of any treaty, because in view of the Choate against Trapp case, if you have a treaty with an Indian that his land can not be taxed for any purpose, an act of Congress would be invalid. We were advised that no treaty was being violated in case we should provide to take these funds out of the tribal funds for drainage across the Indian lands in order that the Indian might be benefited along with the white man.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman is, I think, himself as well

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Steenerson] has again expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. North].

Mr. NORTON. I want to ask the gentleman a question, because I believe the gentleman is as well informed concerning the actual conditions on the Indian reservations in Minnesota as any man in the House,

Does the gentleman—and I take it that he understands the nature of the proposed legislation-see any objection in legislation of this character?

Mr. STEENERSON. No.

Mr. NORTON. This permits the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to pay for the benefits from the construction of drainage ditches received by the allottees of these Indian

Mr. STEENERSON. In answer to the question of the gentleman from North Dakota, I will say that from my general knowledge of the drainage laws of Minnesota and my knowlformation that, without a dissenting voice, if this matter had edge of the conditions of various reservations I believe this provision would be very beneficial. But I would further say that I have received no petition or request from any of the reservations, and I have never heard from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or any department officials about it. So I would to be informed. wanted to be informed. I am satisfied that this legislation may result in the reclamation of very large tracts of land which are now valueless and do it in an equitable manner, so as to distribute the cost as it ought to be distributed.

Mr. NORTON. It has impressed me as being very desirable. I can see, of course, that it may be objectionable to some allottees. Some individuals would not wish to have a drainage ditch constructed near their lands in any case. They might have no reasonable ground for objection, but would object on general principles, on account of their contrary nature.

Mr. STEENERSON. These two land owners who have communicated with me say they live on high and dry land, and are afraid that they would be taxed for the drainage of lands that are wet.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Under our law such a man could not be taxed for the drainage of high and dry land.

Mr. MURRAY. I will state to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Steenerson] that this is very much like the legislation passed a few years ago concerning the lands of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. STEENERSON. In Oklahoma?
Mr. MURRAY. Yes. This is like the act passed for Lincoln County, in that in its administration it is left in the discretion of the Secretary. We must presume that the Secretary will not permit assessments that are wrong upon the

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I desire to take a few minutes' time to assure my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. Steenerson] that he ought to have been consulted in legislation of this character, no matter where it originated, and I am sure he would have been consulted if it had originated in this Chamber. this legislation had emanated from the Indian Office originally no doubt it would have been brought to his attention and the opinion of the gentleman would have been asked in reference I drafted, as I said, a bill making this the law for the Fond du Lac Indian Reservation. I was going to put it in the conference report, and found they had put in this, so I seized hold of this framework and changed it, so far as it was necessary to make it good law, and then it was agreed upon by the

One word further. I think, as the gentleman says, this is a law capable of producing a great deal of benefit to the Indians in certain portions of Minnesota. The gentleman is familiar with the Red Lake Reservation, much more so than I, and I perhaps am more familiar with some other sections than he. In all these lands we have invited the whites to go in and take the unallotted lands and improve them along with the Indians, and road building has been encouraged in order that the Indians and white men might progress side by side. In some portions of that country, in order that there may be any development at all, drainage is necessary. I have received many letters—scores of them from this section—to the effect that a great part of the land in this section is covered with water and at certain times the people have to move about in boats, and the development of such lands is impossible unless a drain-age proposition like this goes through.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Murray] has called attention to the fact that all these laws vest in the Secretary of the Interior full authority for the protection of the Indians. We have one test of that with respect to this project that I have mentioned. I can say without reservation that the Secretary of the Interior, through his subordinates, has exercised un-bounded care to protect the Indian in all these assessments against him. In fact, they have used a microscope on him. In fact, the Indian allotments here are protected better by far than any of the lands held by the whites on the same proposition. The Indian Office has required a change and a variation in these plans in every particular where they thought there was the slightest doubt or where they thought the welfare of the Indian was not properly conserved. Therefore, exercising this discretion, the Secretary has amply protected the Indians, and this project will be for their eternal benefit and welfare. Therefore I hope it will be agreed to without dissent.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Are the commissioners who are appointed to assess the damages named by the district court?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. And they make a report back to the court?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes. It has to be approved by the court under the law. Of course, it is all done by engineers. We have ditch engineers in the State who survey out the projects, locate them, assess the benefits, and make up the plat. That has all to go to the court, and proper evidence has to be given to show that the benefits have accrued, and then the court approves.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House concur in Senate amendment No. 48 with an amendment. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask that amendment No. 111 be reported.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman offering an amendment to it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; it is a Senate amendment. We desire to concur in the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment 111. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is for an increase of salary. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 27. That to provide during the fiscal year 1918 for increased compensation at the rate of 15 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate per annum of $480 or less and for increased compensation at the rate of 10 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate of nore than $480 per annum and not exceeding $1,000 per annum so much as may be necessary is appropriated? Provided, That this section shall only apply to employees who are appropriated for in the act specifically and under lump sums or whose employment is authorized herein: Provided further, That detailed reports shall be submitted to Congress on the first day of the next session showing the number of persons, the grades or character of positions, the original rates of compensation, and the increased rates of compensation provided for herein.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that this does not apply to employees of the Indian Bureau in this city. That proposition is cared for in another bill now pending in the House. This does apply to Indian employees outside of the city of Washington. This is the recommendation of the Senate, and each one of your conferees was in favor of this amendment. It begins with the employees receiving the lowest amount of salary, and gives them a raise of 15 per cent up to a certain point and 10 per cent above that. Above a thousand dollars nothing is given to them, according to the amendment just sent up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves to ve-ther proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman what arrangement we can make relative to a division of time between those speaking for and those speaking against the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman has control of the time. I do not suppose I will use all of the 15 minutes which I have, If I do not, I will yield it back to the gentleman, and I think it will develop how much time is needed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state that I want to make an equal division of time if possible. I have quite a number of names here

Mr. MANN. I hope I will not use all of my 15 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the proposition which is before us will determine the attitude of the House with reference to the increase of salaries of Government employees. There are to-day in conference three appropriation bills-the legislative appropriation bill, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and the District of Columbia appropriation bill—and in each case there is in conference now what is called the Smoot amendment of the Senate, giving increases in salaries to employees receiving $1,000 or less, and there is what may be called the Committee on Appropriations proposition, which was to give an increase of 10 per cent of salary to all receiving less than $1,200 and 5 per cent to all receiving between $1,200 and $1,800. These two propositions are in conference between the House and the Senate on the three appropriations which I have mentioned. The Indian appropriation bill now before the House contains as a Senate amendment what is called the Smoot amendment, which gives an increase in salary up to and not above $1,000 in salary

Well, there are a great many ways of skinning a cat, and here is a parliamentary method, I will not say intended, but which would have had the effect of preventing the House ever ex-pressing its opinion on any of these things if the motion made had been permitted to go through without calling it to the attention of the House. For that reason I made the point of no quorum. The present proposition is for the House to concur in the Smoot amendment on the Indian appropriation bill. That is a privileged and preferential motion. If the House concurs in the Smoot amendment on the Indian appropriation bill, the House conferees on the other bills will take this as the instruction and position of the House on the subject, and they will promptly agree in conference to the Smoot amendment on the other appropriation bills, and will be entitled to do so.

Now, the present proposition before the House is to concur in the Senate amendment. That is a preferential motion. At this stage of the proceedings a motion to concur in a Senate amendment takes precedence over a motion to concur with an amendment. If the House wants to abandon the position it took when it voted on the legislative appropriation bill and make no increase in salaries where the present salary amounts to over $1,000, then the committee should vote for the pending motion to concur in the Senate amendment, because that will eliminate any increase in salaries where salaries exceed $1,000. If the House declines to concur in the Senate amendment and votes down the present motion, then a motion will be offered to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment inserting in the Indian appropriation bill the same amendment which the House put in the legislative bill, in the Agricultural bill, and in the District of Columbia bill. We have before us now for determination whether we will vote against increasing the salary of any of the Government employees according to these terms where the salary amounts to over $1,000.

I was not willing to let the House put itself on record without its knowing the facts. The motion was made and we were about to have a vote. I made the point of no quorum and have stated the matter to the House, as I ought to in all fairness. If the House does not want to give an increase of salary where the salary amounts to more than $1,000, but wants to take the Smoot amendment as it passed the Senate, then it should vote !

to concur in the Senate amendment, and under the present motion it would be a vote of "aye." If Members do not want to do that, but want to insist on the position of the House that there should be an increase in salaries up to $1,800, they should vote "no" on the pending motion, and then there will be another motion presented on which they can vote, maintaining the position of the House.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to state that the increase in the Senate amendment is to provide during the fiscal year of 1918 increase of compensation at the rate of 15 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at the rate of $480 or less, and an increase in compensation at the rate of 10 per cent per annum to employees receiving more than $480 and not exceeding $1,000 per annum, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. That is the Smoot amendment, and I thought that everybody understood what it was; but if they do not it is easily stated. The House proposition was to increase by 10 per cent all salaries below $1,200, and an increase of 5 per cent for all salaries from $1,200 up to $1,800, inclusive. The Senate proposition is to increase salaries 15 per cent up to $480, and 10 per cent from $480 to $1,000, and no per cent above $1,000. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Page].

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, when I asked for recognition it was largely for the purpose of saying to the House just what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has House just what the gentleman from This said, that we might not vote under any misapprehension on the section made by the gentleman from Texas. There are five of these appropriation bills, all involving salaries, either now in conference or in the Senate, and will be in conference with either the House provision or both provisions embodied in them in disagreement between the two bodies.

As a conferee on the part of the House in one of these bills-and I know other gentlemen charged with the responsibility feel the same way about it-I have felt that I would like to have the House take from us the responsibility of determining whether or not it was going to stand for the original House provision as passed in the legislative bill, increasing by 10 per cent for the fiscal year 1918 all salaries below $1,200 and 5 per cent all those salaries from $1,200 to $1,800. both inclusive, or whether they prefer the amendment placed in bills in the Senate of 15 per cent increase in all salaries below $480, and 10 per cent on salaries between $480 and

I think, too, that the House ought to know, as nearly as can be calculated, the amount of money involved in each of these provisions. The amount involved in the provision in the legislative bill and carried in all the five appropriation bills into which it will be incorporated, will require something like $30,-000,000 to meet the increase for the fiscal year.

Mr. COX. That is in all the appropriation bills?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. In all the appropriation bills carrying salaries, about $30,000,000. The Smoot amendment involves a little less than half that amount, or thirteen or fourteen million dollars.

I know that there are men in this House who feel that the salaries of all these people ought to be increased. On the other hand, there are a great many others who believe that their present wage is greater without any increase at all than the wage for a like service rendered in private employment. I think the House ought to take this into consideration and it ought to take into consideration the condition of the Treasury and the other expenditures that we are making from the Treas If these people were not as well paid as other people or people in private employment, if their hours of labor were onerous, or if the conditions under which they work were unfavorable, then it seems to me that there might be some excuse for us to pick out these people who have the good fortune to be employed by their Government and give them a bonus and tax the other people who have not the good fortune to be employed by their Government to pay the bill. My own personal view about the matter is that both amendments ought to be stricken out, although I have no hope that we can do it.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Spenker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Does not the gentleman think we ought to strike out these increases in view of what Gen. Wood and Admiral Fiske have told us about the American people being effeminized by their luxurious lounging on cushioned chairs and sleeping in downy beds and riding in limousines and wearing kid gloves?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That does not apply to an employee of the Government who receives $480 a year.

Mr. LANGLEY. Nor $1,000.
Mr. CALLAWAY. According to their statement it applies generally to all of the American people. They say that this business has so effeminized us that it is necessary for us to now

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I do not think any Government clerk is weighted down by the amount of work that he has to perform. He may be fatigued in his search for something to do in some of these departments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to yield me a little more time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three more minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; for a question, Mr. MADDEN. I understood the gentleman to say that he did not think the Government clerk was weighted down by the amount of work he had to perform. He might have added nor by the amount of money he is obliged to carry about.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Oh, no; and neither are a great many other people in the gentleman's district and in There are thousands of wage earners who do not receive a salary equal to that of the Government employee, and they have to pay a tax to increase the salaries of these fellows here. There is not a man here in whose district that does not apply. I dare say that the average wage earner in the district of any man upon the floor receives less than the average wage of the Government employees in any branch of the Government service, and I know his hours of labor are longer and the character work that he has to do is more onerous. Believing that, I shall take the very least that I can get; and I want to state to the House that I shall vote for the motion made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens], that the House concur in the Senate amendment known as the Smoot amendment. If the House expresses that judgment, then, as one of the conferees on another bill, I shall walk into the conference and take the same action without coming back to the House, believing that I am warranted in doing so, and so will the other conferees on these other bills. My hope is that the House will vote for the motion of the gentleman from Texas to concur in the Senate

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL, Mr. Speaker, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] will be voted If that happens, the House will then be in a position to vote to concur in the Senate amendment with the House provision or such an amendment as may seem proper. I think the Members of the House thoroughly understand the situation as it is presented to us. The House provided for an increase for a year of 10 per cent in all of the salaries up to $1,200 and 5 per cent in the salaries from $1,200 up to $1,800. The Senate proposes a 15 per cent increase of the salaries up to $480, 10 per cent increase of the salaries from $480 to $1,000, and no increase beyond that. What is the situation with regard to the Government clerks? In a general way I agree with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Page] that the Government pays its employees liberally and well in the higher grades, but that is not true with regard to the many low-paid employees of the Government. Before the recent increase in the cost of living these people were not generally receiving more than was paid by private employers for the same class of work, and since the increase in the cost of living that has come under this Democratic administration, private employers have increased the pay of their employees all of the way from 5 to 25 per cent, while these low-paid employees of the Federal Government have rethese low-paid employees of the reactar dovernment into ceived no increase. The Secretary of Commerce of this administration, in a report made a short time ago, estimated the increase in the cost of the most important articles entering into the cost of living in the last year of 34 per cent, and the most that we have suggested as an increase to anyone is 15 per cent to charwomen, and a few other very low-paid employees, and 10 per cent to the employees up to $1,200 and 5 per cent up to $1,800. The difficulty about the Senate amendment is this: It reaches only the thousand-dollar-a-year employee, and so far as the clerical employees and skilled labor under the Government are concerned the Senate amendment affects comparatively few married employees. It does help a very deserving class of elsewhere, but, when you come to the grade of skilled labor and the lower-paid clerical help, the thousand-dollar limit reaches comparatively few of those who need it most, to wit, the married employees, because below $1,000 the places are to a very considerable extent filled by young men and young women who have no one dependent upon them; when you reach the grade a little higher, then you get into the positions held by those who have been in the service long enough to have reached the higher pay and to have taken upon themselves the responsibility of a family.

These people need our help more than any other class of employees under the Government, and I say to you gentlemen that from the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations it is to me as plain as anything can possibly be that the highest increase proposed in any of the amendments is not enough to relieve many of these people from actual distress. It is exceedingly difficult for them to live and support their families decently on the sums they are now receiving.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. All right.

Mr. MONDELL. If the motion of the gentleman from Texas is voted down, and I have an opportunity, I shall make a mo-tion, or hope some one else will, to this effect: That we accept the Senate amendment so far as it relates to the employees getting $480 and give them 15 per cent. That as to the 10 per cent raise, we advance that to the point fixed in the House provision, $1,200, and that we add to the Senate amendment the 5 per cent provision offered in the House for employees from $1,200 to $1,800. That will be a provision of 15 per cent increase up to $480, 10 per cent up to $1,200, and 5 per cent from $1,200 to $1,800. And I say to you gentlemen, after a pretty careful consideration of these matters as they have been presented in the committee by the officers in charge of the bureaus and departments of the Government, that that increase is the very least for which we can in good conscience afford to

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will, but I have only a minute.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the gentleman think it is an equitable distribution wherein a man drawing $1,100 gets $110 whereas a man drawing $1,200 will only get $60?

Mr. MONDELL. There is no plan on which you can arrange it that will not leave some inequities. If the gentleman can propose a plan that will not leave such an inequity, I will be glad to join him; but we have not the time to go into the matter in any great detail now. We are proposing a temporary provision to partly, at least, meet the present situation, and I hope we will do it in a fair and decent way. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Miller], a member of the committee.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me this amendment should be adopted. I do not know how any man can live in the city of Washington or any place else on less than $2.50 a day. In my town, which has very little manufacturing, surrounded by a rural community, a laboring man doing common labor receives $2.25 every day that he wants to work, working nine hours, and oftentimes, particularly from April to November, you have to engage a man two or three days ahead to get him at that price. How can a man live in the city of Washington on $500 or $600 a year? If I had to live on $500 or $600, if that is all I could get for myself and my family, I think I would prefer the almshouse, where they and I would be taken care of and do what little work I could do for them there. It comes with ill grace from people all over the United States, who are receiving large salaries and large incomes, to refuse to give to a man, the head of a family, enough money to feed them, so that at least they will not go to bed hungry, to at least clothe them reasonably well, to enable them to live like human beings, and, considering what we get, considering what we receive, considering what we are paid, I hope that this House will vote to give the miserable, measly little increase to these employees that is asked for in this amendment. [Applause.]
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DILL].

Mr. DILL. Mr. Speaker, if this amendment or if this mo-tion is not adopted, I shall be glad to vote for the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell]. In other words, I believe that the lowest-paid employee should employees, many of whom are married, like the custodians of public buildings, the engineers and firemen about the public buildings, and certain other employees in the field service and tween these two amendments, and it seems to me that whether we are in favor of helping people who need help the most or whether you are in favor of cutting down the amount of money that is to be taken out of the Treasury, we should favor the motion of the gentleman from Texas to concur in the Senate amendment

The people who are receiving $480 or less are the most in need of this increase. The people who are receiving more than $1,000, I believe, are in need of an increase, too, but when I must choose between whether I shall help a man whose standard of living has been affected by the increase in the cost of living or help the man whose standard of luxury and savings is affected, I shall choose on the side of the man whose standard of living has been affected. As has been said here, the amount of money that will be taken from the Treasury will only be about one-half as much by taking the Senate amendment in preference to the House amendment. I want to give another reason as to why I am in favor of the Senate provision. There has been a great deal of talk when this question of raising salaries had been brought up at different times about the short hours of work by men in the Government employ. The fact of the matter is that the lowest-paid employees of the Government work the longest hours. If I must choose between which class of employees should not be helped, I shall choose not to help those who work the least number of hours. [Applause.] So that it seems to me that we shall be acting in accordance with the demands of the people who need help the most; we shall be acting in accordance with the theory that he who works longest should be helped first; and we shall be acting in accordance with the demands of the Federal Treasury, which some gentlemen seem so much concerned about when we talk about wages but seem to have no concern whatever about it when we talk about spending it for some imaginary need of munitions that happen to come up in the House. So for these three reasons it seems to me the Senate amendment is preferable to the House amendment. [Applause.]
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] five minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, this provision was gone over very thoroughly when the legislative bill was before the House. It will be recalled that in that bill we increased the pay of our own secretaries and clerks $500 per year. It will be recalled we gave an increase of 5 per cent to every employee of the Government who received a salary of $1,200 to $1,800, both inclusive. The Senate amendment grants no increase to a person who receives a salary of $1,200 or more. It gives, as has been stated, 15 per cent to the charwomen instead of 10. To those employees who work only a small portion of the day, if you please, who have other employment, it increases their wage 15 per cent, but it does not do a thing for the person who is the head of a family, the man who ought to have our sympathy.

When the fortification bill was before the committee that framed it, those who came before the committee stated that it was necessary to pay 25 per cent more for material now than a year ago, and when asked why, they said the whole increase practically resulted from an increase in the wages paid by the The facts are, my manufacturers throughout the country. friends, that every financial institution in the land, every manufacturing institution in the land, is increasing the pay of its employees. And can it be said that this House is a progressive body if it will stand pat and refuse, in view of the greatly increased cost of living, to give a reasonable increase to the Government employee who is at the head of a family, but who gets only $1,200 or $1,220 a year? That is what this proposition is.

The Auditor for the Post Office Department has about 700 employees under him. I asked him a few days ago how many heads of families among the employees in his department would be affected by the House provision and how many would be affected by the Senate provision. In that great department, if we adopt the Senate provision, we will only benefit 44 out of 700 employees, but by the House provision we will benefit, if that is adopted, 185 men who are heads of families. [Applause.1

Take the naval appropriation bill, and many of the increases in that were made necessary because of the increased cost of producing guns and naval stores. We recognized the increase of wages paid by the employer in those institutions, and we granted larger appropriations because of that fact, but we say to these employees of the Government, "We will not do for you what we are encouraging manufacturers to do for their employees, and that is, increase the wages of our employees.

Now, whatever is done in this House to-day with regard to this item, we will, of course, do, as was stated by the gentleman the country long hours. Out in my country to-day men who from North Carolina [Mr. Page], in the legislative bill, the do not receive for their labor more than an average of about

District bill, and the other supply bills. It seems to me the House ought to be consistent and vote down the provision that is inserted in this bill, and it ought to vote to include in the bill the same proposition that was included in the legislative bill, and that would give an increase to all of the employees of the Government who receive salaries of $1,800 or less

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. I yield.
Mr. MANN. If the House refuses to agree to the present amendment, will the gentleman offer to concur with an amendment inserting the House proposition?

Mr. GOOD. I have an amendment to that effect, and if this is voted down I will offer a motion to concur with an amendment, and that amendment will be the exact proposition which this House finally adopted when the legislative bill was before the House

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr.

Good has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Norton], a member of the conference committee.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, it has been very clearly stated what the effect of the adoption of this amendment would be. Whether we adopt the motion to concur in this amendment or not, it seems to me, should depend upon a fair consideration of the salaries now being paid Government employees and the salaries being paid employees in similar private employment. As far as my observations have gone I do not find that for the most part Government employees are underpaid. I know that in my section of the country-and not only in my own congressional district, but throughout the Northwest-there are hundreds, yes, thousands of men and women employed in productive occupations who are not being as well paid for their time and labor as the employees in the Government service in that section of the country or in this section of the country.

I know if we were to listen to and be guided in our actions by the newspapers of Washington and by the magazines that claim to officially represent Government employees, which newspapers and magazines are largely, if not altogether, dependent for their existence on the patronage of Government employees, the last dollar in the Treasury would be the only limit to the increase of wages granted.

A few weeks ago I had the opportunity of spending some time. at Panama and the Canal Zone. There the Government employees, like here in Washington, are loudly clamoring for an increase in wages, without any thought or consideration of what men and women outside of the Government service are receiving for their days and hours of toil in similar lines of work. As is well known, there has been an attempt made to represent to the people throughout this country that the climatic and health conditions on the Canal Zone are very bad, and that it is a great patriotic sacrifice for anyone to remain in the Government employ on the Canal Zone, whereas, as a matter of fact, the health conditions and the working conditions on the Canal Zone are almost ideal.

I am not going to take the time now to recite at length some of the conditions I found down there recently. At some future time I expect to occupy the time of the House in presenting some facts concerning conditions on the Canal Zone that will be of interest to the House. I want to say here and now that I never saw employees anywhere in the country-and I have been over pretty much all of this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Canadian boundary to the Gulf of Mexico—living in more ideal conditions than are the Government employees down there. But are they satisfied with what the Government is paying them? No; not at all, and will not be as long as they are led to believe that the Treasury of the United States is open for further easy raiding.

Now, I believe, and I want to say it in the short time I have, that this amendment is a fair amendment to adopt under all existing labor and living conditions in this country. I have always believed in helping the man who works most and who is receiving relatively the least compensation. The man or woman who receives $480 a year or less in the Government service is the one who is doing relatively the most and the hardest work, and who most needs an increase if there is any increase to be given to Government employees. I believe that we will be doing a fairness and a justice to adopt this amendment at this time, but I do not believe that there is any just need now to make a horizontal increase in the salaries of those receiving more than $1,000 a year.

The men who, for the most part, are paying the taxes to meet the salaries of Government employees are working throughout

$1.60 a day are feeding cattle, feeding horses, and doing the never-ending work on the farm not for 8 hours a day, with 60 days a year for vacation, but they are working 10, 12, 14, and 16 hours a day. They are delving down in snow banks 3 to 10 feet deep to-day to get out hay and feed for their live stock. They are working from early dawn to late at night to produce the products the Nation must have to eat and wear. They it is who by their hard toil supply the funds for taxes to pay the salaries of Government employees who are working six or seven hours a day and who are living a life of comparative ease. Those things and those conditions, gentlemen of the House, should be taken into consideration in determining this

Mr. RICKETTS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.
Mr. RICKETTS. I understand you to say the laboring men in your State are working for $1.60 a day and 10 to 14 hours a day?

Mr. NORTON. Yes; those who labor on our farms. They do not receive on an average more than that.

Mr. RICKETTS. Do you notice any difference in the high cost of living in your State?

Mr. NORTON. Yes; we have noticed a difference in the high cost of living. We have to help pay for all these people who are nonproducers throughout the country, and who occupy most of their time in demanding an increase of wages.

Mr. RICKETTS. Is it the purpose of the gentleman to put the Government employees in the same category with the people in your State that perform agricultural or manual labor?

Mr. NORTON. I will tell the gentleman what it would be my purpose to do. If I could, to-day, I would place a large percentage of the employees of the Government in this country and other men now in nonproductive occupations on a salary that would induce them to go into productive occupations; into lines of industry where they would produce things for them-selves and other people of this country to eat and wear. This would equalize and lower the cost of living more than anything else of which I know.

Mr. RICKETTS. I agree with you on that proposition. I have no quarrel with you about that at all. But does the gentleman know that the cost of living in Washington is now higher than it has ever been, that you can not buy a pound of sugar in the city of Washington for less than 15 cents?

Mr. NORTON. I know what the high cost of decent living is, and I know what the cost of high living is throughout the country. But we here are helping to produce and continue this condition. We are inviting young men and women into the Government service at high wages and taking them out of productive We are creating a condition such that you can not hardly get a young man to work on the farm any more. He will tell you that he prefers to go to an agricultural experiment station conducted by the Government where he will receive a salary of $100 or more a month. He will not work on a farm at $50 a month. He usually has in mind to go to Washington or elsewhere in the Government service, where he can have easy employment, short hours, and a fat salary to be paid out of the taxes supplied by those not in the Government employ.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

yield?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Do you pay as high as $50 a month in your State for farm hands?

Mr. NORTON. Yes; we pay as high as $50 a month in my State for farm hands.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am glad to know that. I worked once for $25 a month.

Mr. NORTON. Well, I may say I have worked for $15 a month on the farm and worked harder than any Government employee here in Washington is required to work.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. And I was glad to get it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. NORTON. Certainly; I shall be pleased to yield to the

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. NORTON. No. I am not entirely mistaken, nor am I partly mistaken. I know pretty well about farm-labor conditions in the gentleman's State; and I want to say to the gentleman that the employees in the Government service in Iowa are to-day better cared for and receive better salaries than the farm laborers who are producing the things to eat and to wear for these Government employees. [Applause.] Mr. GOOD. What I had reference to was his comparison of the salaries paid by the Government with salaries paid by institutions in Washington. I had the Bureau of Efficiency get some information for me, and I have it here. That information is to the effect that the street railway companies pay more for common laborers than does the Government in the city of Washington, and firms like Woodward & Lothrop and contractors in Washington pay more for clerk hire than the Government does in Washington. I have that information here. Of course the gentleman knows it is not fair to compare a salary in Washington with the salary paid in some little town of 300 or 400 inhabitants, where the people have their chickens and their pigs and their gardens and all that sort of thing. The conditions are not comparable.

Mr. NORTON. In these little towns to which you refer they work from 10 to 16 hours a day. Many of these country people are doing that. I want to say this to the gentleman, in reply to his statement as to salaries paid in Washington in private business and in the Government service: Did the gentleman ever have this thought occur to him that if all those employed in the Government service to-day were discharged and their positions were open it would not take very long to fill these positions from those employed in private business to-day in Washington? Everywhere you go here in Washington citizens of Washington are clamoring to get into the Government service. who has not acquired the Washington viewpoint the eagerness of men and women here to get into the Government service does not evidence that they can secure and are securing higher salaries in private employment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma

[Mr. Hastings] is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] to concur in Senate amendment No. 111, providing for an increase of salary of employees in the Indian Service, as follows:

Salary of employees in the Indian Service, as follows:

That to provide, during the fiscal year 1918, for increased compensation at the rate of 15 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate per annum of $480 or less, and for increased compensation at the rate of 10 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate of more than $480 per annum and not exceeding $1,000 per annum, so much as may be necessary is appropriated: Provided, That this section shall only apply to employees who are appropriated for in the act specifically and under lump sums or whose employment is authorized herein: Provided further, That detailed reports shall be submitted to Congress on the first day of the next session showing the number of persons, the grades or character of positions, the original rates of compensation, and the increased rates of compensation provided for herein.

It provides an increase in the salaries of 15 per cent of those

It provides an increase in the salaries of 15 per cent of those employees now receiving a salary of less than $480 per annum and an increase of 10 per cent in the salaries of those receiving more than $480 per annum and less than $1,000 per annum.

If an opportunity is given to vote an increase in the salaries of those receiving more than $1,000 and less than $1,800 per annum I shall vote for a 10 per cent increase for them.

At present the only motion before us is to concur, and I therefore vote for that. I think conditions justify this increase. It is fair and moderate.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. London].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I believe the House should insist on the 10 and 5 per cent increases. There is a fundamental distinction between Government employment and private employment which should not be disregarded. The private employer has the wages which he pays determined not by any rule of ethics, not by the question whether it is right or wrong, not whether the wages paid is sufficient to maintain a decent standard of living. The private employer determines the wages primarily by the condition of the labor market. He has no compunctions about it. He never considers the question whether the wage is sufficient to enable a man to live the life of a man. In determining wages for Government employees you can not afford to be guided by the law of supply and demand. You can not afford to be governed by the conditions of the labor market, because after all the man who uses the expression "labor market" in the sense in which the potato market is referred to or the wheat market is referred to has the soul and the mind of a narrow, petty merchant, and is very little of a man.

There has been such a tremendous increase in the cost of living that it is almost impossible for the man of small means to exist. The man who gets $1,000 or $1,200 or $1,800 a year feels this extraordinary increase in the cost of living just as sharply as the man at the very bottom of the soical and economic ladder, just as sharply as the man who has become so accustomed to privation that it is a part of his existence. And because it is extraordly difficult to measure with any degree because it is extremely difficult to measure with any degree of definiteness the agony and the suffering endured by the man who gets less than $1,200 a year and the agony and suffering endured by the man who gets less than $1,800 a year, I believe both groups are entitled to an increase of wages, and that the House should persist in its opposition to the Senate amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances the fairest thing to do is to adopt the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens], who is in charge of this bill, for a moderate increase to those low-priced employees of the Government. We can not make in the Government service any fair comparison with temporary conditions which may exist in some private employment at the present time. There are several reasons for that. In the first place, the wages in private employment have been so low, habitually so low, that an increase of 10 per cent in the average wage of private employees would not bring them up anywhere near to the average level of Government salaries. I think it goes without challenge, and has gone without challenge, that in many departments of the Government, particularly in Washington, wages have been adjusted at from 15 to 40 per cent higher than for similar service in any other employment.

There is another reason why we can not compare the conditions with private employment at this time. The Government service has the advantage of being continuous. Not only are the hours short, but Uncle Sam is an employer who never misses a pay roll, who never has slack times, who never has a strike, a lockout, or a boycott. None of the ordinary disabilities that affect the labor market elsewhere occur here in Washington or in the Government service. A man has his full year's work and his full lifetime work, if his record and service are good.

Take the ordinary skilled employee belonging to a first-class, high-grade labor union; take a structural steel worker, who gets $5 a day when he works; his business is of a seasonal character, and if he works 200 days in the year at a gross income of $1,000, he is having a good, prosperous year. In the bad years he does not earn so much, and the best year may amount to $1,000 or $1,200. The time lost in lockouts, strikes, boycotts, and unemployment, depression in business, sickness, and ill health he pays for out of his own pocket. The man here in Government employ has a steady job year in and year out at $1,000 or $1,200 or $1,400, so that we are bound to increase only the lower-grade employees.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20783) making appropriations for the support of the Army; and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to six hours, three hours to be controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and three hours by myself.

Is there objection?

There was no objection. The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill, with Mr. Saunders in the chair.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. Chairman, this bill carries an appropriation Mr. DENT. of something more than $247,000,000. It is a little less by $20,000,000 than the amount carried in the Army appropriation bill last year. It is something over $70,000,000 less than the original and supplemental estimates furnished by the department. In making these remarkable decreases from the estimates the committee has not been unmindful of the fact that at the last session of the present Congress the national-defense act largely increased the appropriations for the Military Establishment. The committee, therefore, has seriously and carefully undertaken to provide for every feature contained in the new legislation enacted by this Congress at this last session, without imposing any unnecessary burdens upon the Public Treasury. I may say further that the Military Committee early in its hearings reached the conclusion unanimously that at least this was not an opportune time for any radical changes in the military policy of the country as established by this Congress only at its last session. The committee has not gone into the question of universal compulsory service, therefore, which has agitated the public mind in some quarters in the past few months. While the committee itself has taken no formal action upon the subject, there are members of the committee who regret that some officers high in authority have prejudged the nationaldefense act of last June, pronouncing it a failure in advance. It is to be exceedingly regretted that officers high in authority, who hold their commissions under the law created by Congress and who receive their compensation from the Congress, should have been willing in advance to pronounce the action of this Congress a failure without giving this legislation a fair and an impartial trial. Certain it is that whatever may be the merits of the legislation adopted by Congress at its last session for the national defense, that legislation must necessarily prove a failure if administered by hostile or unfriendly hands.

I mention this, Mr. Chairman, not in particular criticism of any officer of the Army of the United States, but I think that it is due to the Committee on Military Affairs of the House that this statement should be made to the Congress, for such facts have developed in the hearings before our committee.

But to return specifically, Mr. Chairman, to the bill. There has been some criticism in some quarters that this bill is too small; that we have not legislated in such a manner as to But to return specifically, Mr. Chairman, to the bill. There has been some criticism in some quarters that this bill is too small; that we have not legislated in such a manner as to properly take care of the Military Establishment. That criti- ter of guns that should be purchased and used in the Army.

cism naturally followed by reason of the fact that this committee has found a way to largely reduce the estimates made by the War Department. Take, for instance, the question of pay of the Army. The committee reduced the estimates for pay of the Army by something over $15,000,000. Now, let us see just for illustration how the committee arrived at its figures upon that subject. The committee very carefully ascertained from the Quartermaster General's Department what the per capita cost of the Army was. We took the figures given by that department itself as to the per capita cost of the Army, as to the pay of the Army, as to the subsistence of the Army, as to the regular supplies of the Army, as to transportation of the Army, as to clothing and equipage of the Army, and what did we find? We found that the pay of the average enlisted man of the Army is $227 a year, $237 a year when given extra pay for superior marksmanship and the like; whereas when you consider the entire enlisted strength of the Army of all departments, the line and staff, Quartermaster Department, the Medical Corps, and the line of Army, it averages $267. What then did the committee find? It found that the War Department was estimating upon that per capita basis for an Army of practically 170,000 officers and men.

We then investigated the present and past conditions in order we then investigated the present and past conditions in order to ascertain the size of the Army we really ought to appropriate for. We found that the largest Regular Army that this coun-try has ever had was on the 31st day, I think, or the 30th, of last October, when they had 92,000 enlisted men of the line and 112,000 of enlisted men and staff corps combined, so that the largest total of the Army of all the various branches of the Regular Establishment was 112,000 men. We found another thing in making the investigation, because we saw no reason for making an appropriation for an Army of 170,000 men when the War Department had no prospect of getting it. We recalled that about a year ago this Congress adopted a joint resolution increasing the strength of the Army from 100,000, the strength under the old statute prior to the national-defense act, by 20,000, increasing it to an Army of 120,000 men. That resolution was adopted under pressure here in Congress. The resolution was passed when the situation in Mexico was acute; and yet, although that resolution has been on the statute books for nearly 12 months, the Army has failed to fill its ranks up to the number authorized by the resolution by something like 6,000 men. So that this committee felt, with the past experience of the Army and with the present conditions confronting us, we would be very liberal indeed if we appropriated for the increase of 20,000 men of the line over the 92,000, the highest number we have ever had, and then allow 20,000 for the staff corps, making something like 132,000, thus giving a margin of something like 3,000. We then estimated for an Army of 185,000 men, a very liberal estimate, and that is how we reached the conclusion by which we reduced the amount by $15,000,000. [Applause.]

Now, I repeat, we have pursued the same process, the same method of calculation, when we came to appropriate for the subsistence of the Army, because we had the per capita cost and we had agreed on substantially the number of men we should appropriate for. The same reasoning and the same rate was applied with reference to the regular supplies, incidental expenses transportation, clothing, and equipage. This comexpenses, transportation, clothing, and equipage. This committee, when it came to the subject of barracks and quarters, water, sewers, and hospitals for the Army, have been, we think, exceedingly liberal in giving the department a fair proportion of the estimates which were called for. We have provided of the estimates which instruction on rifle ranges. We have provided abundantly for civilian training camps. We have approvided abundantly for civilian training camps. priated freely for vocational training in the Army. All of these things provided for by the national-defense act have been taken care of by this committee, I repeat, in such a manner as to give to the War Department freely and ungrudgingly all that they needed to carry out the purpose of the act adopted last June. When it came to the subject of aviation we appropriated $9,000,000, and when there is added the $4,800,000 which the Fortifications Committee appropriated for hydroplanes for coast defense, there has been allowed nearly $14,000,000 for that service. It must be remembered also that it has only been a few months since the last appropriation bill of August 29 authorized $13,000,000. We feel we have been exceedingly liberal in this branch of the service. Of course, as suggested, that does not include what is carried in the naval appropriation bill for similar purposes. We have appropriated $3,000,000 for the Regular Establishment and $2,500,000 for the National Guard

Our committee reached the conclusion that that was purely an administrative matter, and even if we had the authority we could not fairly undertake to pass upon the character of automatic machine guns which should be used in the Army. But we have given to the department an appropriation which will enable them during the next year to add a supply of something over 2,000 automatic machine guns to the Army, even conceding the purchase of the highest priced guns that are on the market; whereas if we purchased some guns of higher price and some of lower price, then they will be able, perhaps, to add to their supply something like 4,000 additional guns.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman explain in regard to the type of machine gun and the reason why the department would probably not appropriate all of the money for the more expensive, which is a heavier type of machine gun?

· Mr. DENT. Well, in response to the suggestion of my colleague on the committee, as I recall the testimony before the committee, the department is still investigating the different types of gun, and they propose to try out several different types, and the board is to meet, I believe, in May to make some final tests on the subject.

Mr. TILSON. That is especially true as to light guns. They have already arrived at a conclusion which they think is satisfactory in regard to the heavy gun, namely, the Vickers gun, but as to the lighter type of gun, which is just as necessary, they have not arrived at any conclusion.

Mr. DENT. That is true, as I understand.

We have also provided, Mr. Chairman, an appropriation of something like $600,000 for armored motor cars, which the committee thinks is ample for the purpose. Then we have placed in this bill for the first time in any Army appropriation bill—

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman indulge me just a moment on the motor-car proposition?

Mr. DENT. I will.
Mr. KAHN. Does not the testimony before the committee disclose the fact that the Bureau of Ordnance has only experimented with two motor cars up to the present time?

Mr. DENT. That is very true. They have experimented with only two, and they have found one, I believe, to be too heavy and the other to be too light.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee to what extent they have experimented with motorcycles?

Mr. DENT. I do not know that I can answer the gentleman definitely as to what extent, but they have experimented with motorcycles down on the border to a considerable extent, as testified to before the committee.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The purpose of the bureau is to buy quite a number of armed motorcycles with a side car.

Mr. DENT. That is the idea.

Mr. KAHN. I think something like three or four hundred

Mr. DENT. I have forgotten the number, but they purpose to purchase a number of those with side attachment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman recall the testimony, if there was any, as to whether the motorcycle with the side van is successful or whether those without were more preferable or

Mr. DENT. I do not recall whether there was any contrast between the two, but they said the one with the side attachment had proven very successful.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression that the one without was more serviceable than the one with the side van in use on the Mexican border.

Mr. DENT. I do not know that there was any contrast between the two.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will yield, the intent of the bureau is to buy 230 motorcycles at $1,000 each; 690 with side-car attachment, at $500 each; and 115 with side-car attachment, at $450 each.

Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe I stated-and if I did not, I intended to do so-that while we have largely reduced the estimates submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs in all essentials, this committee has not been at all parsimonious.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will.
Mr. McKENZIE. I simply wished to suggest to the chairman that I think it would be well, while he is explaining the bil, if he would mention the different details in the law; that is, the I the National Guard status under the law of last year? That is, new legislation that will be offered either by amendment or that is now contained in the bill.

Mr. DENT. You mean the new legislation that is incorporated in the bill?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. DENT. I will get to that in the latter part of the bill. I will refer to that as soon as I finish the details. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for his suggestion.

For instance, Mr. Chairman, on the subject of supplying field artillery and ammunition for field artillery for the National Guard the department asks us originally for $10,600,000, and this committee allowed $10,000,000 for each one of those items in the bill. So I might go on and enumerate the different substantial and essential things that we have appropriated for and that are taken care of in order to effectuate the purposes of the national defense that was enacted at the last session of Congress.

Mr. LONGWORTH, Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not know that I understood the exact number that the gentleman stated we were now short in enlisted men of the full amount that was allowed under the nationaldefense act.

Mr. DENT. I do not know whether I understand the gentleman to mean under the first or the second increment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman made a general statement under which I understood him to say that there were about 6,000 short.

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that my statement in that connection was made relative to the joint resolution that we passed here about a year ago-I think some time last March-increasing the enlisted strength of the Army from 100,000, which it was then under the law, to 120,000, and we were 6,000 short. We got only about 14,000 men under that call for the additional 20,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. We are now about 6,000 short?

Mr. DENT. Short of that; but we are very short of the increments authorized under the national-defense act.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Let me ask the gentleman to state the exact number. How many enlisted men are authorized in the Army to-day?

Mr. DENT. They are estimating for about 134,000 for the first increment and about 170,000 for the second.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And how many have we actually in the service?

Mr. DENT. We have in the enlisted strength, the highest the committee has been able to find, 92,000. That is the latest report The Adjutant General gives us.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. GARDNER. Has not the gentleman confused the enlisted strength of the line with the total enlisted strength? I have the exact figures here, if the gentleman will allow me to state

Mr. DENT. I am perfectly willing to have the gentleman state them if I have not stated them correctly.

Mr. GARDNER. The authorized strength of the Army up to July, 1917, is 133,166 men, but that includes enlisted men of all sorts. We had in the Army on December 31 last 109,959 enlisted men of all sorts. In the enlisted strength of the line-that is, the fighting force-we had on December 31 last approximately 84,771, while the total authorized strength of enlisted men of the line for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, is 100,083. So we are short 15,000 enlisted men of the line. But we are short 23,000 enlisted men, altogether. I think when the gentleman gave his first figure he gave the number of enlisted men of the line. When he gave his second figure he referred to the entire enlisted force.

Mr. DENT. That is the fact. The figures I gave were based on the report given in October from The Adjutant General.

Mr. GARDNER. This information bears the date of February

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman state how enlistments are going?

Mr. DENT. Gen. McCain states to the committee that they were getting 2,000 a month.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is that a net gain?

Mr. DENT. That is a net gain, because the Secretary has suspended the operation of the law allowing a man after he had served three years to go into the reserve on account of the Mexican situation.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DENT. Yes.
Mr. DILL. Can the gentleman give us any information as to have the National Guard of the different States supplied their quota? Are they enlisted up to the requirements?

Mr. DENT. Well, it is very difficult for me to answer that question except in a general way. The National Guard had a strength at one time in mobilization camps and on the border of something like 144,000 officers and men, and as I recall the national-defense act under the second increment provided for the increase of the National Guard the total strength next year will be something like 160,000.

Mr. DILL. Do you know what it is supposed to be for this year?

Mr. DENT. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. DILL. I mean for the past year.
Mr. DENT. It is enlisted up to its full strength this year;

absolutely, and even more than its full strength.

Now, Mr. Chairman, without going into further details, I may state in a general way, having mentioned the National Guard, that the committee has made liberal appropriations for carrying out the national-defense act, so far as the exception of the National Guard features are concerned, with the end in view that the National Guard should have a fair opportunity to be thoroughly tried out, in order to determine whether it was to be a success or a failure. This bill, of course, was written for times of peace. It is not a war measure. It does not go into operation and effect until the 1st day of July next. Therefore it is intended solely to carry on the Military Establishment in times of peace and not in times of war.

We have incorporated some additional legislation in this bill. mainly of minor importance. It may be only fair that at this point I should call attention to the fact that the committee did adopt a proviso that the increase in the officers of the Army provided for in the national-defense act in five annual increments should not take place except as to one-fourth of those officers until the enlisted force in the Army would require the officers. We think this is a wise provision in the law. In other words, we are 1,700 men short in second lieutenants, and do not propose and do not think it is fair that under the national-defense act on the 1st of July each year for the five years therein provided for you should promote the first lieutenants and captains and majors and colonels until you would have three colonels for one regiment and several captains for a company that have not men. We have offered it for the purpose of providing that promotions shall not be made until the enlisted strength keeps some pace with the increase of officers.

There is another feature of this bill that has created a great deal of comment, and I think it is perhaps the most important general feature of the legislation that we have incorporated in the bill, and that is the amendment relating to the assignment of the number of staff officers to duty in the District of Columbia. The law passed last June provides that the number of those officers shall be limited to 55. It further provides that not more than one-half of those 55 shall at any time be assigned to duty within the District of Columbia.

The Secretary of War spoke to me and wrote me a letter on the subject, in which he did state that perhaps we had better increase the number. I stated in the personal interview that I had with the Secretary that I thought it would be a mistake to undertake to radically change that provision at the present session of Congress, and I made the suggestion to him that I was going to submit to the committee a proposition authorizing the President of the United States to suspend that provision of the act during war, actual or threatened, or during any similar public calamity. The committee unanimously agreed to that provision, and, in my humble judgment, it will accomplish everything that is necessary in case of any emergency. Under it the President can bring the whole 55 officers of the General Staff here to Washington if he needs them, whereas if we had adopted the suggestion of the General Staff and increased it to 92 and left the law to read as it was written he could bring only 46.

Now, there are some other minor provisions in the bill relating to legislation that I do not deem it necessary at this time to call attention to.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of New York. I would like to ask if the committee took up the question of providing for compulsory train-compulsory service?

Mr. DENT. The committee did not. I stated at the outset of my remarks, I will say to the gentleman, that the committee early in its hearings came to the conclusion that we would not suggest any material or radical changes in the legislation provided at the last session, and therefore we did not go into that,

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to amplify his statement? Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. KAHN. During the hearings, when Gen. Scott, Chief of Staff, was before the committee, he was asked whether the General Staff of the Army had prepared a universal training bill. He said they had not completed it. He was asked whether it would be possible to complete it in the near future, so that it might be introduced. He said he thought he could get it ready in about 30 days. He has not sent it to the committee as yet, although it was fully six weeks ago when he agreed to have it before the committee in 30 days.

Mr. SMITH of New York. I understand that the General

Staff are in favor of compulsory training.

Mr. DENT. Yes; they are, if Gen. Scott has a right to speak for them.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Let me ask this further question: Suppose we should have a serious emergency at the present time and require a great number of men-a million or two million men-how would they be raised under present condifinns?

Mr. DENT. They would be raised, of course, first, by increasing to war strength the Regular Army; second, by increasing to war strength the National Guard; and, third, by calling for volunteers. And I want to state to the gentleman in that connection that Congress in the last few years-I believe it was in April, 1915—passed a volunteer officers' bill that was reported to the Congress by the Military Committee of the House. law is now on the statute books, and provides all the machinery necessary for a volunteer army in the event that Congress declares war; so that all the Congress would have to do would be to declare war and provide the means, the machinery for the President to execute the volunteer bill being already provided.

Mr. KAHN. The national defense act in such an emergency would also permit the President to call immediately to the colors all of the increments.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Did the committee take up the question of raising the pay of the enlisted men?

Mr. DENT. They did not.

Mr. SANFORD. One question to complete that thought. Then is it the policy of the committee—are we forced to the policy practically that if we had an emergency and had to raise a million or two million men we would have to rely for our defense, for the bulk of our Army, practically on untrained men, this measure, of course, being, as the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has said and as his predecessor, Mr. Hay, said, I think truthfully, only a peace program? For a war program we rely on untrained men practically wholly, do we not?

Mr. DENT. It depends altogether on what the gentleman means by "practically." Of course, we have a large number of men, practically small compared to an army of 10,000,000

Mr. SANFORD. We have in our Regular Army for home de--that is, in the United States-surely not more than 40,000 men.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, yes; we have more. Mr. SANFORD. The gentleman would not call that an army for any modern purpose.

Mr. DENT. We have more than 40,000. Mr. SANFORD. Not more than 42,000.

Mr. DENT. I think 60,000. Mr. SANFORD. I think the gentleman is in error as to that. think if we had our full increment under the national defense act we would have only 50,000.

Mr. DENT. Be that as it may, suppose we should change the policy now, and we should be precipitated into a war right away. ertainly whatever policy we change would not get into operation in time to accomplish any good.

Mr. SANFORD. If we changed it immediately, would we not have the advantage of beginning to train now instead of beginning to train after some emergency arose, at least a few months' advantage?

Mr. DENT. We would have that advantage, if we are not getting it now under the legislation adopted.

Mr. SANFORD. I realize that we are not. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Of course the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD] will recall that in every war in which this country has been engaged, and in the war now in Europe, after a few months the Regular Military Establishment, so to speak—that is, the normal peace military establishment precipitated into that war-has practically been wiped out, and all the rest of the war conducted by what were raw levies of volunteer troops only a few months before. That was the story of the Civil War, and the story of all the great wars of the country.

Mr. SANFORD. May I ask just one question? The gentleman does not mean to say that is the modern condition? admit that England's Army, which was very much like ours, was wiped out in a few days.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is what I said.

Mr. SANFORD. But was there any army except England's that was in a condition similar to ours

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think the old regular army of France has pretty well disappeared.

Mr. SANFORD. France had had training for years and

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am not talking about the system. I am heartily in favor of the gentleman's idea as to the system, but I was referring to present conditions.

Mr. SANFORD. The gentleman is making it clear that we are practically in the same condition that we were a century ago. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not think there is any question about it.

Mr. DENT. That depends altogether on whether the act passed in the last session is going to accomplish some good. Most of us believe it has not had a fair trial.

Now, I believe in a general way I have covered this subject, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. EMERSON. Did the committee consider at all the advisability of furnishing arms to and training the students in the higher schools and colleges of the country?

Mr. DENT. I really neglected to mention that. There are so many items in this bill, I did not cover them all. The nationaldefense act provides for a Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and the War Department asked us for an appropriation of something over $3,000,000-

Mr. KAHN. Four million dollars. Mr. DENT. Practically $4,000,00 Practically $4,000,000, and we gave them every cent they asked for for that purpose and for ordnance supplies.

Mr. McKELLAR. We appropriated the money to secure the training of 50,000 men in that Officers' Reserve Corps this year, and I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sanford] that we have appropriated money for the training of 158,000 of the National Guard. We have appropriated money in another committee for 26,000 young men in the agricultural schools. We have appropriated money in this bill for the training of 50,000 men in the civilian training camps, and, together with the Offi-cers' Reserve Corps, with the National Guard, and those that are trained in the Regular Army, we are training in the neighborhood of 300,000 men in this country to-day under this bill. is not proposed under compulsory service to train over 400,000, and all we need do is to go on with what we are doing.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. What military training do the young men get who attend the agricultural schools provided for in the Agricultural bill that the gentleman from Tennessee speaks of?

Mr. DENT. That is prescribed by the department, but they must have at least two years.

Mr. BRITTEN. Of military training?

Mr. DENT. Certainly. Mr. McKELLAR. The War Department requires them to have so much training

Mr. KAHN. And they are trained by officers of the Regular Army detailed by the War Department for that purpose.

Mr. BRITTEN. How much time per week is given to military training?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know that.

Mr. DENT. That is a matter of regulation by the War De-

Mr. EMERSON. Has the gentleman any figures as to how many men would be trained if all the students of the high schools of the country were furnished arms and equipment?
Mr. DENT. And an officer to train them?

Mr. EMERSON. Yes.

Mr. DENT. I could not give the gentleman the figures, because, as a matter of fact, the War Department, informs us that they have received applications so fast that they have been unable, as the legislation is new, to carry it into operation.

Mr. McKELLAR. They have estimated for $50,000 for the young men and boys to be trained in schools, academies, and colleges or universities.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman asked how many there would be if all were trained.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman's question was confined to students in the high schools.

Mr. EMERSON. But I meant in colleges. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But the gentleman did not include colleges in his question. The training of the high-school boys would not add much to a serviceable army in time of war, because the ages of the high-school boys are from 13 to 17 or 18.

Mr. EMERSON. If we took them at the ages they served in the Civil War, at least half of them in the high school would be available.

Mr. KAHN. I might say for the benefit of the gentleman that there are approximately 900,000 boys every year who attain the age of 19 years and about 600,000 who attend the high-schools.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

[Applause.]
Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER, Mr. Chairman, when Congress, on March 17, 1916, authorized the President to recruit the Regular Army up to its maximum strength there were in the Army 75,830 enlisted men of the line. On December 31, 1916, there were 84,771 enlisted men of the line. In other words, in a period of over nine months we had gained only 9,000 enlisted men of the line. By the terms of the national-defense act in the present fiscal year, which ends next June, we should properly have 100,083 enlisted men of the line. The second increment of officers and men under the national-defense act will be due in the next fiscal year. are now appropriating the money to pay the bills. second increment added, we are supposed to have in the Regular Army about 120,000 enlisted men of the line; but, as a matter of fact, we are not getting recruits quickly enough to give us anywhere near so many.

It is true that we have been getting recruits more quickly than we have been losing men from the ranks by death, discharge, or otherwise. We must not, however, overlook the fact that to a serious extent this is the result of the device which the War Department has adopted of holding men in the service who under ordinary circumstances would be furloughed to the reserve.

In December—and December and January are about the best enlistment months, I am told—there were 4,372 men enlisted for all branches of the service. Four thousand recruits per month was about the average for the year before last. I think there were about 48,000 enlistments in that year, but that number was exceptionally high.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes. Mr. SMITH of New York. I would like to ask whether the gentleman knows how many men have been retained beyond the period of contract of service.

Mr. GARDNER. The last I heard, they are all being retained beyond the period of what they thought was their contract of service. Last summer there were called back into the service from the reserve a little less than 3,500 men. Christmas time, I think, about 3,000 had reported for duty. By

Mr. SMITH of New York. I wanted to get at the exact status of the matter.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does the gentleman say that 4,000 were included in the reenlistment?

Mr. GARDNER. In December, 1916, 4,372 was the total number of enlistments in all branches of the service; that is to say, in the line, Hospital Corps, Qaurtermaster's Corps, and— Mr. BRITTEN. What percentage was the first enlistment?

Mr. GARDNER. I can not tell the gentleman. Now, Mr. Chairman, just before election in November there came back to my district from the border three batteries of Field Artillery and three companies of Infantry of the Massachusetts National Guard. We politicians received them with open arms, as you We had receptions for each one of these batteries might guess. and companies. I made six speeches or, to be more accurate, I made the same speech six times, and on each occasion I tried the audience out to see what it thought about compulsory military training. Invariably the response was most enthusiastic and the applause was the most hearty which any of my remarks elicited.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

What was the class of audience that the Mr. EMERSON.

gentleman had?

Mr. GARDNER. It was composed of enlisted men of the National Guard, of course, and of their uncles, their sisters, their cousins, and their aunts. Of course, there were a few officers and city or town officials. It was a one-sided audience, I admit. I questioned about every returning soldier and officer whom I met. I found that most of them were enthusiastic whom I met. about the quality of their border training, but here and there I met some National Guard general or other high officer who was convinced that the Regular Army did not know its business. So I went down to the border to find out all I could on my own hook. I went beyond the border. I went down into Mexico.

The Secretary of War was good enough to give me an escort, so I went down to Colonia Dublan to see Gen. Pershing's force

I went down to the border and into Mexico for two purposes. One of my objects was to find out why young men do not more rendily enlist in the Regular Army. My other object was to find out the true relation between the National Guard and the Regular Army from the point of view of the junior officers and the enlisted men of the National Guard. I first took up the question of the relation between Regulars and Guardsmen. fore I began I consulted Gen. Bell, who commanded the district of El Paso. I found that on October 7, 1916, an order had been issued by Gen. Funston to all the regular officers who were serving with the National Guard as inspector-instructors or otherwise, directing them to report upon the merits and defects of the National Guard system. That order had been followed by a letter of instruction to the effect that mere criticism was not wanted, but that constructive suggestions were desired. read over 50 of the reports which were received in reply to that circular order from Gen. Funston. Almost without exception those replies were unfavorable to the National Guard system and its results. I was perfectly well aware that when the mobilization reports were published, and when these other reports were published—and, by the way, so far as I know, these reports have never been published—I knew that at once there would be people saying-as indeed they have been saying-that the Regular Army is trying to destroy the National Guard

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. GARDNER. Yes. Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I understand the gentleman to say that the report of these officers has never been published?

Mr. GARDNER. The inspector-instructors' reports have never been published.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. There is a long report-

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman is referring to Col. Brown's report, is he not?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.
Mr. GARDNER. That is the mobilization report. These reports of which I am speaking were made in response to an order of the Department of the South issued on October 7, 1916. I think they have never been published, and, if the gentleman considers the date on which the mobilization report was made, he will see that in the nature of things these reports could not then have been ready for publication.

I knew perfectly well that Regular Army officers were human, that naturally they might have some feeling, being human, because of the amount of praise bestowed on the National Guard and the paucity of praise which we politicians bestow on the Regular Army. I noticed that in some few instances the reports were petulant in tone. But many of those officers I knew personally. Some of them I had worked with. I knew that they honestly meant to report the plain truth. The unanimity of these reports would have struck anyone who was prepared to look at the question with an open mind. I therefore went to Gen. Bell and I said, "General, those reports are going to make a lot of trouble." I told him that there was one thing which I should like to have him do for me. I said, "I know what the generalissimos of the National Guard think of the Regular Army, but I want to know what the enlisted men of the National Guard think of the Regular Army." I got in touch with the Young Men's Christian Association down there, had interviews with the enlisted men of the National Guard. and I came to the conclusion that their opinion of the Regular Army was entirely different from that of the generalissimos. So I said to Gen. Bell, "I am going to ask you to send out a series of questions to the first sergeants of the National Guard, because the first sergeant, an enlisted man himself, is the buffer between the enlisted man and the commissioned officer." I asked the general whether he would send sioned officer." I asked the general whether he would send out to every first sergeant in his command a list of questions which I would prepare. At first he demurred. He said that it was very irregular, that the questions ought to go through the officers. Furthermore, I said, "I wish that those replies might come back to you direct, without passing through the hands of a series of officers." Finally, Gen. Bell said, "I must send out those questions to officers as well as to enlisted men." So he sent them out to all his colonels and to all his captains and to all his first sergeants, with instructions that none of the individuals to whom the questions were sent should consult with anyone else, officer or enlisted man, but should answer in an official envelope mailed direct to the general. There were at that time 16 regiments of National Guardsmen in Gen. Bell's command. There were also 4 independent battalions of Field Artillery or squadrons of Cavalry, making 20 different commands with 20 different commanding officers. There were 296 company commanders and 296 first sergeants, making, in all, 612 officers and enlisted men to whom this list of questions was Gen. Bell received 572 replies.

Here are the questions and answers:

No. 1. Question. Would the instruction of the National Guard proceed more rapidly if more Regular officers and noncommissioned officers were detailed for service with the National

Answer. Yes: Colonels, 18; captains, 190; first sergeants, 180; total yes, 388. No: Colonels, none; captains, 41; first sergeants, 53; total noes, 94. Conditional: Colonels, 2; captains, 50; first sergeants, 38; total conditional, 90.

Note.—The noes were qualified in about half of the replies by the statement that there were "already enough," meaning that one Regular officer and three Regular noncommissioned officers, as at present detailed for the instruction of each regiment, were ample.

No. 2. Question. Are the officers and enlisted men of the National Guard desirous of the instruction from the officers and noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army? If not, what is

Answer. Yes: Colonels, 16; captains, 217; first sergeants, 205; total yes, 438. No: Colonels, none; captains, 12; first sergeants, 30; total noes, 42. Conditional: colonels, 4; captains, 49; first sergeants, 17; total conditional, 70.

No. 3. Question. Can you suggest any way in which the officers and men of the Regular Army can cooperate more fully with the National Guard in the development of a citizen army?

Answer. The answers to this question may be roughly classified as follows: More cooperation by friendly intercourse and a closer relationship, 122. More careful selection of Regular Army instructors, 28. More instruction from Regular Army, particularly at home stations, 83. Sundry suggestions, 50.

Note.—Over 70 replies to question No. 3 desired one Regular officer with each regiment or separate battalion and one noncommissioned officer with each company, instead of only three for the whole regiment.

No. 4. Question. Have you formed any opinion on the question of universal military training? If so, what are your ideas?

Answer. In favor: Colonels, 16; captains, 250; first sergeants, 234; total yes, 500. Against: Colonels, 1; captains, 5; first sergeants, 4; total noes, 10.

No. 5. Any additional remarks you may have to make bearing on the above.

Many of these remarks are most valuable. They will be made subject of special study at Gen. Bell's headquarters.

Now, some may think perhaps that this classification of the replies is one-sided, but at all events it was intended to be absolutely fair. This classification was made up by Capt. Pratt, one of the finest and most conscientious young officers in the service.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. I will. Mr. SHALLENBERGER. When the gentleman refers to compulsory military training, does the gentleman mean that a man shall be trained with the option left with him whether he shall serve his country when needed?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; it has always been my idea that the training is really a privilege granted by the Government to each individual. It is in the line of democracy. As to compulsory service in time of war I might agree to that in order to get compulsory military training, but hitherto my inclination has been in favor of voluntary service in time of war. When I was a boy an inspiration came to me from the fact that the veterans I saw around me had voluntarily and not under compulsion offered their services to the country.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman understands a compulsory measure has been proposed by the General Staff and a bill has been introduced in the Senate which not only requires training but compulsory service in time of war?

Mr. GARDNER. I understand that. I shall vote for that bill. Mr. GORDON. Which one?

Mr. GARDNER. I shall vote for any bill which will compel our young men to get ready to defend their country. I prefer the General Staff bill, if that is what the gentleman meant. I have discussed this matter a good deal in the last two years. Hitherto I have taken the ground that if it looked to me at the outbreak of war as though we could not get a sufficient number of our compulsorily trained young men to volunteer their services, then I should cheerfully vote for conscription; but I preferred not to do so unless it was necessary. However, there is one strong argument in favor of compulsory service in time of war which ought to receive pretty thorough examination. In order to get quick mobilization you must have equipment ready and transportation arranged for. The individuals to be equipped and transported must know exactly where their own equipment and transportation is to be found. This circumstance would seem to make it imperative that the authorities should know beforehand the names of the individuals whom they could depend upon. Otherwise mobilization must be delayed. But under a volunteer system individuals can not be enrolled long beforehand in the organizations in which they are to serve in war time. The authorities must know beforehand that Jones and Brown and Gardner are going to serve in time of war in order that Jones and Brown and Gardner may have their tickets to their uniforms and equipment and a knowledge of where to report for transportation.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The reason I asked the gentleman that question was because I tried to ascertain from all the authorities who appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs whether there is anything to show that a man who is trained as a soldier, say one who has had such training as the gentleman, myself, and others-whether that training resulted in his responding to the call of his country when he is needed, or whether a compulsory military training inspires a man to respond very quickly. There has been so much talk about universal military training and universal military service I would like to have the gentleman explain upon what he bases his remarks.

Mr. GARDNER. Out of the Civil War draft we finally secured 46,347 men for service, besides substitutes for 73,607 more, in all 119,954 men. Of course, Great Britain has raised the greater part of her army under the voluntary system, and perhaps I might be a little sorry that she did not raise all of it in that way.

There is a feeling abroad that it is not fair for you to take my job while I am doing my duty as a soldier in time of war. Advocates of compulsory service, in time of war, argue that it is wrong that I should risk my life for your protection while you make no sacrifice. I admit the unfairness; but, speaking for myself, I should rather have it so. I should rather fight voluntarily and suffer the unfairness rather than feel that I was fighting because I was compelled to do so.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does the gentleman think there is anything in the experience of either to show that they would have gotten more soldiers if they had been trained men?

Mr. GARDNER. The British would not have been so much food for cannon if they could have gotten their trained men sooner and put them in the line earlier.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does not the gentleman think that if a man has been marching and tramping around in the mud he is not quite so apt to respond to the call?

Mr. GARDNER. But when he does respond, he is trained. Mr. KAHN. Both the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLEN-BERGER] speak of the General Staff universal training bill.
Have either of the gentlemen seen it?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman misunderstood me.
I said the plan that is advocated and the bill that has been in-

I said the pian that is advocated and the bill that has been introduced by Senator Chamberlain.

Mr. GARDNER. I think that Senator Chamberlain's bill is based on Capt. Moseley's bill. The ideas of the General Staff are fairly well known. I suppose that they will be incorporated

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It is a matter of record in the hearings that Gen. Scott does not believe in any other kind of compulsory military service than that which compels the soldier to go when he is called.

Mr. McKELLAR. The gentleman stated that the British soldiers would have been less food for cannon in the event they had been trained. Has the gentleman got any figures that there have been more British soldiers killed in this war than French soldiers or German soldiers?

Mr. GARDNER. I suppose that not nearly so many British soldiers have been killed. But my point is that until they have had a year's training the British soldiers have not been put in the trenches except when immediate military necessity has absolutely required it. The plan, as I understand it, is that recruits shall be sent for six months at least to the training camps in Great Britain, and then be transported to France. last part of the preparatory training period I think that the new officers, without their men, are sent as supernumeraries to the front line of trenches. Many young British officers have been killed before they were ever in a fight-at least so I have

Mr. McKELLAR. My question is, under this compulsory plan in England, have more of the English soldiers been killed than French soldiers or German soldiers?

Mr. GARDNER. I suppose not in actual numbers. I know nothing about the percentages of loss in the different armies.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is not this the important thing, that as the result of their not being trained England was not able for nearly a year to put anything like the number of men she needed to do the work?

Mr. GARDNER. Precisely; and when she first sent her new lines to the trenches I understand that it required 10 men for her to maintain the same front which 3 completely trained men could have held.

Mr. McKELLAR. How does the English Army compare to-day with the Armies of Germany and France? One is voluntary and the other is involuntary.

Mr. GARDNER. The English Army is not voluntary at the present moment.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman tell us how they compare with the soldiers from Canada and Australia, who are voluntary soldiers?

Mr. GARDNER. I know nothing about the Australian soldiers, but I know a little about the Canadians. I went to the Canadian camp at Valcartier twice last summer and I heard a good deal of talk. I think they are doing remarkably well. I do not think that Canadians who have had a year's training I do not think that Canadians who have had a year's training I would be some Parities. are showing any substantially different results from British soldiers who have had a year's training. But now, you see, gentlemen, I mean one thing by military training and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McKellab] means something entirely different. By military training I mean largely discipline, the yielding of a young man's mind to somebody else. As for this marching up and down in line, I have seen a marching line of young ladies on the stage who would have made Stonewall Jackson's line look as crooked as a ram's horn. These young ladies were splendidly drilled, but they had no discipline. That sort of thing is not military training. That is "hay foot, straw foot." That is the kind of military training you get in your agricultural schools. It is only military drill and it amounts to mighty little. I was chairman of the committee on military affairs in the Massachusetts Legislature.

We have a State agricultural school in Massachusetts, and I used to go up there in my official capacity as chairman. drill of the students was in charge of a Regular Army officer. They could drill to beat the band; they could execute movements beautiful enough to make your mouth water, but the moment they got their tunics off they were not soldiers trained to obey. That is one of the things which takes time-learning obedience. If you choose to put it that way, it is the breaking of a man's will in the sense that Ulysses S. Grant's will or Robert E. Lee's will was broken at West Point.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes. Mr. GORDON. Neither of the gentlemen just named, Gen. Grant or Gen. Lee, were ever subjected to compulsory military

Mr. GARDNER. No; but they were subjected to West Point training for four years, and that beats anything else in the world.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GARDNER. I will. Mr. GORDON. You are the first intelligent man I have ever known who has undertaken to distinguish between compulsory

Mr. GARDNER. Last year, in a colloquy with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. Hay, I tried to explain the distinction.

Mr. GARDNER. I will find it for you. The colloquy appears on page 4491 of the Congressional Record for March 20, 1916. Now, Mr. Chairman, how much of my time have I exhausted? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 26 minutes.

Mr. GARDNER. I want to discuss this failure of our young men to enlist in the Regular Army. I want to tell you how I arrived at my ideas—good, bad, or indifferent—on this subject. In the first place, I talked to a great many enlisted men of the National Guard whom I met at home and in the Young Men's Christian Associations on the border. Then, at Fort Bliss I got hold of Chaplain Axton, a chaplain of the Regular Army, and I said, "I want to be put in touch with some noncommissioned officers who have been on recruiting duty. I want to talk with the men who have actually stood on the cold street corners and tried to persuade young men to go into the Regular Army while the Industrial Workers of the World had a sentinel stationed near by trying to get those same young men to stay out of the Regular Army. I have already talked with the commissioned officers who do the office work. I want to talk to the men who actually do the recruiting, and I want to talk to them without their knowing beforehand what I am going to talk to them about."

So the chaplain arranged for me to see a group of the men without their having a chance previously to consult together. I think there were five in the first group I met, all noncoms except one private. All of them had been on recruiting duty. went down to Colonia Dublan, and I asked for a similar opportunity down there. At Colonia Dublan I saw noncoms and privates who had been on recruiting duty. Altogther at El Paso and in Mexico I saw 11 noncoms and privates, and they represented five different organizations. With those 11 men I went as rapidly and as thoroughly as I could into the question of why young men do not enlist in the Regular Army

They all agreed upon one thing, and that was that the two principal reasons why young men do not enlist are, first, because we do not pay them enough, and, second, because there is too long a contract of service. Young men do not care to mortgage their future so many years ahead. The 11 men with whom I talked did not all agree as to which of these two reasons carries the more weight, but 10 out of the 11 expressed the opinion that the principal cause for the difficulty in getting recruits arises from the fact that we do not pay men enough, and that the second principal cause is the long period of enlistment, or contract of service as it is called. One man out of the eleven felt that the principal cause was the long contract of service and that the second cause was the low pay.

Now, mind you, all these men who were talking to me had been engaged in recruiting at the time when it was supposed that a recruit when he enlisted would serve three years actively with the Regular Army. It was supposed that his fourth year would be served with the colors or with the reserve, as he might choose. The fifth, sixth, and seventh years it was supposed that he would serve solely in the reserve. Unfortunately, the re-servists last summer were all called back for active service and that has made a great deal of ill feeling.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Did the gentleman hear anything referring to the mess

Mr. GARDNER. No; the quality of the food is excellent and the regular cooks are good. There was at first some trouble of the sort in some of the National Guard messes, but that was There was at first some trouble all straightened out as soon as the cooks had a little experi-

I have given you the evidence of 11 men. I tried honestly to get those men to tell me things which I did not want to hear, just exactly as if I were trying to find out the real political situation in a ward in my district. When I want to know the facts, I do not go into a ward and say, "Everything is going all right, is it not?" If I put the question that way, I should always get the answer, "Sure, Congressman." Probably I might say something like this, "I understand that there is a whole lot of Wilson talk here in this ward." If everything was right, some one would say, "Well, Congressman, I have not heard it." If things were wrong, some one would say, "Well, of course, there are some of the unthinking ones who are talking that way, but they will come around all right by election time." [Laughter.] The only way to get information by asking questions is to lead off with the wrong foot, so to speak. Ask your question as if you wanted to get the answer which you really do not want to get.

I said to these 11 enlisted men, "Tell me all about this caste business between officers and men. When you get down to it, is not there a social snobbishness in these officers that galls the life out of the enlisted men?" Invariably I got the answer, "Oh, no; that is only talk." And, honestly, it surprised me to find them so unanimous on that point. Another reason for nonenlistments, according to my informants, is the amount of heavy nonmilitary manual labor required. They said, for instance, that many of the duties to be performed at Jefferson Barracks, near the city of St. Louis, were not duties which should be required of a soldier. I talked to a noncom who had been having a joint debate about every day with an I. W. W. sentinel-outside the recruiting office in St. Louis. The noncom described how he would tell some young fellow for whom he was angling all about the advantages of being a soldier at $15 a month, with clothing, board, lodging, and medicine thrown in. Perhaps the would-be recruit would say, "Well, that does not seem to be very fine." Then the recruiting noncom would say, "Look at your chance for promotion. Think of it; you might go to West Point in a year and become a commissioned officer." A young man who could scarcely do much more than read and write might not think that was much of an inducement. But perhaps after a while the fish would begin to show signs of taking the bait. By and by an I. W. W. man would get hold of him and say, "Don't you go believing what that soldier is telling you. Do you suppose they mean to make a soldier out of a fellow like you? Not on your life. What they want you for is to do grading out around Jefferson Barracks."

It was quite clear to me that the prospect of this heavy civilian duty is a deterrent to enlistment, even if only to a

I think this seven-year enlistment period is entirely wrong. A young man of 21 is not anxious to mortgage his existence until he is 28 years old, even if four years of his service is to be passed in the reserve. This year's experience shows that reservists are quite likely to be called back to active service, in many cases to the very great detriment of their family affairs. For the Infantry I should be willing to cut down the term of enlistment to a single year, with perhaps a short service in the reserves. I have not, however, looked into the question as to whether it is practicable to have different periods of enlistment in the different arms of the service.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman think there ought not to be any civilian labor of enlisted men?

Mr. GARDNER. That depends on its nature. Of course, they have got to dig trenches in warfare. There is a good deal of labor by enlisted men that could perfectly well be cut out.

Mr. BORLAND. Under modern conditions of warfare there is a great deal of trench digging and other construction work, is there not?

Mr. GARDNER. I understand; and to the extent that civilian labor is valuable military training it ought to continue, but to the extent that it is merely an economy for Uncle Sam, I am inclined to think that it ought to be stopped.

Mr. BORLAND. That is what I want to get at. Does the gentleman think there is any real evil in compelling soldiers to do what civilian labor they can do around their own barracks and quarters

Mr. GARDNER. It depends on the nature of the work. Such work as I understand has been done at some of the posts I believe to be a real evil, because it discourages men from enlisting. Mind you, imagination plays a great part in this business of soldiering. Unemployment plays a greater part, of course.

Mr. BORLAND. I am anxious to get the gentleman's idea.
Mr. GARDNER. Here is my idea: The field from which we draw our enlisted men to-day is largely made up of these elements: First, there are the adventurous young men who want to see the world's wheels go round. That is quite a big propor-Then there are young men who come from the country to the city, expecting to find good jobs on every bush. When they do not find good jobs some take poor jobs and some enlist be-cause they can not find any jobs at all. I think that young men out of work constitute the greatest percentage of our recruits. Then there is a third element, composed of men who, though not out of a job, are tired to death of their own particular job; for instance, a bricklayer who is tired of laying bricks and wants a change. A fourth class is made up of what is known as "snowbirds," men who enlist in cold weather, with every intention of deserting when spring comes. That class is small. The largest class comprises men whose necessities compel them to take $15 a month and all found, because they do not know where to look for better pay. The second largest class comprises the adventurers. I believe that the adventurous class would be larger if it were not for this heavy civilian labor.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman think we will ever have really large, efficient Army composed of these snowbirds or other classes he speaks of?

Mr. GARDNER. No; but if we fix a base pay of $25 a month for privates and have high pay for first sergeants and other noncoms, in my opinion we can raise a really large, efficient Army. If we had a high rate of pay—call it $75 a month, if you choose, and all found—for first sergeants and other noncoms of high standing, the bill would not be very large; but it would give the recruit a much more attractive picture to look at. A first sergeancy is within any man's power of atttainment; but a com-mission is out of the reach of everyone who has not received a fairly good education. Most recruits realize perfectly well that they never can attain a commission. So the fact that many men rise to commissions from the ranks is no special inducement to enlist, if the man who is considering that step is aware that his education is deficient. On the other hand, high pay for the best noncommissioned places could not fail to please a recruit, even if his education had been neglected. Everyone knows that many an uneducated man makes a prime first sergeant.

Mr. BORLAND. And yet the gentleman would exclude them from doing what they can do, to wit, the civilian labor around the barracks and quarters?

Mr. GARDNER. I should, with limitations. Mr. BORLAND. Let us take this concrete example: We are being compelled now, under the enlargement of the Army, to enlarge most of the Army posts.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes. Mr. BORLAND. That involves the expansion of quarters and the building of roads, and a great many other things of that kind around Army posts. Now, does the gentleman think none of that labor should be done by the enlisted men under present

Mr. GARDNER. As little as possible.

Mr. BORLAND. I can hardly say that I agree to that. Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman believe in the Army as a place for vocational training?

Mr. GARDNER. Except on special lines, I am against it, as the Army is now constituted. I am possibly in favor of it in connection with compulsory universal training of the citizen; but even then, if it is adopted, I should want the training period extended far beyond anything now contemplated. For the regular soldier I believe in intensive training. I doubt whether he would care for it, however, at $15 per month. He has not been getting enough training, and neither have our young line officers, in my opinion. You could get a great deal more intensive training if you had a shorter period of enlistment.

Hon. A. P. GARDNER, House of Representatives

My DEAR MR. GARDNER: Referring to your letter of the 14th instant, in which you request to be furnished with certain information relative to the enlisted strength of the Army, I have the honor to advise you

as follows:

1. The actual enlisted strength of the eatire Regular Army on December 31, 1916, based on the best data now obtainable, is approximately 199,959, not including 5,549 calisted men of the Philippine Scouts.

2. The statutory authorized enlisted strength of the entire Regular Army upon the passage of the joint resolution of March 17, 1916, was 126,956 men, which did not include the then authorized enlisted strength of 5,733 Philippine Scouts.

3 (a). The authorized enlisted strength of the entire Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, under the provisions of the national-defense act, is 133,133 men, not including the enlisted strength, 5,733, of the Philippine Scouts.

(b). The total number of enlisted men of the entire Regular Army for whom pay is provided for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, under the appropriation bid, is 115,200, which number does not include the enlisted strength of the Philippine Scouts, 5,733 men.

Very respectfully,

Hon. A. P. Gardner,

House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. Gardner: Referring to your letter of the 13th instant, in which you request to be furnished with certain information relative to the enlisted strength of the Regular Army, I have the honor to advise you as follows:

1. The actual enlisted strength of the line of the Regular Army on December 31, 1916, based on the best data now obtainable, was approximately 84,771 men.

2. The statutory authorized enlisted strength of the line of the Regular Army as provided by the joint resolution of March 17, 1916, was 103,294 men.

3 (a). The authorized enlisted strength of the line of the Regular Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, as provided by the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916 (first increment included), is 100,083 men.

The figures above given include the strength of the organizations of the line, viz, Infantry, Cavalry, Engineers, and Coast and Field Artillery; but do not include the strength of the miscellaneous organizations composed of men detached from the line, viz, guards at disciplinary barracks, disciplinary companies, recruit companies, school detachments, and unassigned recruits. Under the joint resolution of March 17, 1916, the total number of recruits authorized was 5 per cent of the total authorized enlisted strength of the line, while under the national-defense act it is 7 per cent.

(b). The total number of enlisted men of the line of the Regular Army for whom pay is provided for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, under the appropriation bill is 96,424. Included in this number are the men belonging to the miscellaneous organizations (guards at disciplinary barracks, disciplinary companies, recruit companies, unassigned recruits, and school detachments) composed of men detached from the line, but, as before stated, not included in the strength of the line given above.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, December 4, 1915.

Hon. A. P. GARDNER, House of Representatives.

House of Representatives.

Sin: In further response to your letter of the 27th ultimo, in which you request to be furnished with any information which would indicate the numbers of northern and southern soldiers who received pecuniary inducements to enlist, either in the form of national bounties, State bounties, or substitute money, and of the number of men who were drafted to serve as soldiers, the number who responded to the draft, and the number who furnished substitutes, I am directed by the Secretary of War to submit for your information the following statement:

SOLDIERS OF THE UNITED STATES ARMY-NATIONAL BOUNTIES,

In an estimate of the number of men to whom United States bounty has been paid from May 3, 1861, to the end of the war, printed in the final report of the Provost Marshal General (Ex. Doc. No. 1, House of Representatives, 39th Cong., 1st sess., vol. 4), the total number of such men is given as 1,722,690 and the total amount of bounty paid to them as $300,223,500.

STATE AND LOCAL BOUNTIES.

This department has no data regarding State and local bounties prior to 1863. Such information as the department has been able to obtain from the State and local authorities on the subject is contained in the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies, series 111, volume 5, pages 740-749.

DRAFTED MEN AND SUBSTITUTES.

The records show that the number of men drafted from the States and Territories during the Civil War under the enrollment act of March 3, 1863, was 776,829, and that this number is accounted for as Such information as is in the possession of the department in regard to bounties paid to Confederate soldiers has been published in the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies, series 4, volume 1, pages 825-827, 903, 944, and 1096; volume 2, page 205; volume 3, pages 184 and 1000. From what is there shown it appears that a bounty of $50 was provided for in an act of the Confederate Congress, approved December 11, 1861, and that in another act approved February 17, 1864, it was provided that at the expiration of six months from April 1, 1864, a bounty of $100 in 6 per cent Confederate Government bonds was to be paid to every enlisted man then in service, or, in case of his death previous to such payment, to his legal heirs.

The publications hereinbefore referred to are no doubt readily accessible to you in the Library of Congress.

Very respectfully,

Henry P. McCain,

The Adjutant General.

HENRY P. McCain, The Adjutant General. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. I reserve the balance of my time.
Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar].

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, I am a sincere believer in peace. I am in no sense a militarist. At the same time I am not what is commonly called a pacifist. I believe in preparedness, but I believe in a safe and sane preparedness along lines of common sense, and not that kind of preparedness that comes from fear or military hysteria.

At this time, when apparently we are on the very verge of war, I believe that we should all exercise the greatest conservatism in speech and action, for war is a serious thing, and our country should avoid it if given any honorable way to avoid it. For that reason I am not going to talk on the war situation except to say that I heartily indorse the action of the President in the submarine controversy with Germany, and I stand ready to uphold him and our country all along the line, in peace if we can, and in war if we must. There should be no hesitation and no faltering. We should all be simply unqualified, undiluted, and unterrified Americans. As much as I abhor war, there is but one thing worse, and that is the loss of our national selfrespect.

America has a unique position in the world. It is peculiarly situated and has tremendous natural advantages in the way of defense over any European nation, or any eastern nation. Our situation means that if we now or ever hereafter get into a war with any first-class power that it will be a war on the seas. Our Navy must be removed from the seas entirely before we will ever have any use for a land force. We might have 10,000,000 men thoroughly trained and under arms in this country, but we could not move them to any other continent unless we had control of the seas; and I mean by this, unless we had removed all our enemy's ships from the seas.

Under these circumstances, what is our manifest duty on the subject of preparedness? Surely it is not that we should keep a tremendous standing Army on hand at all times at an incalculable cost, which Army we may nor we may not need, and which we could only use in any event after our Navy had been swept from the seas. Under these circumstances, in my judgment, it is our manifest duty to build up and maintain the greatest Navy in the world. There are a number of reasons why this should be done. Among these are the following:

First. We have built the Panama Canal, and we are obliged to protect it.

Second. We have a great number of island possessions, many of them several thousand miles from our borders, and whether it is a good policy to keep them or not, we are keeping them, and as long as we do keep them it is our duty to protect them.

Third. We have innumerable coast cities of the greatest wealth and large populations, which cities can best be protected

The Monroe doctrine is a part of our unwritten Constitution. It is to the best interest of our Nation that this doctrine be upheld and maintained. We would be powerless to uphold and maintain the Monroe doctrine unless

Fifth. We have recently authorized the building of a great merchant marine for the purpose of building up our foreign Our private merchant marine has grown up to large proportions recently, and there is no reason why we can not resume our rightful position as ocean carriers; but in order to do so we will be obliged to have a great Navy to protect our merchantmen wherever they go and our citizens wherever they Sixth. We are now committed to the doctrine of upholding the freedom of the seas.

These reasons are so manifest that it is hard to see how they can be refuted.

Now, what is the condition of our present Navy? I am not an expert in these matters. I understand that at present we do not stand greater than third, Great Britain and Germany both coming ahead of us. However, last year we authorized 157 new war vessels, and I am informed that when the program of last year is completed our Navy will easily be second. After this war is over England, struggling under the greatest national indebtedness she has ever had, and Germany almost, if not wholly, in a condition of bankruptcy, will be unable to go forward with their naval program as heretofore.

On the other hand, the United States is vastly richer than ever before, and she can keep up her present appropriations for our Navy for a generation if she so desires to do. There is no reason why we may not in the near future continue our building program until we have the largest Navy afloat, and, in my judgment, for the reasons above stated, it is our best and cheapest protection, and we should make it first at the earliest practicable moment. [Applause.]

TO DISCUSS CONSCRIPTION.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose to-day to discuss only one phase of preparedness, and that is, Should the United States adopt a policy of universal conscripted military service in times

In approaching this subject I do so with some degree of diffidence in that I am not a professional military man. However, I am not without military training. For four years I was a cadet at a State military institution. For two years I served in the National Guard, and during my service in the House, now more than five years, I have been on the Military Affairs Committee, and in that capacity, taken in connection with my early military training, I feel I have learned something about the military affairs of our country, though in no sense do I claim to be an

CONSCRIPTION PROPAGANDA BORN OF THIS WAR.

Before the beginning of the present European war there were few men in this country, in the Army or out of it, who would hazard the opinion that the United States ought to adopt in times of peace a military conscription program. I use the word "conscription," for that is the real meaning of universal compulsory military training or service. We should not be misled by the use of words.

Since that war began the militarists have been constantly carrying on a propaganda for it, and many newspapers and other periodicals, and other citizens, and especially those from our large coast cities, have given wide publication to these views, and frequently hearty indorsements to them.

In view of our history as a Republic, our Constitution and laws, the wars that we have waged, our protected geographical position, the wonderful adaptability of our people to meet all crises, the predominant belief of our people in personal liberty, our abhorrence of monarchy and militarism, our lack of incentive to wage wars of conquest, and over and above all, our jealous desire to preserve the integrity of our free institutions it is inconceivable to me how anyone inside or outside of the Army, even under the stress of great military excitement, such as now exists in the United States and in most of the great nations of the world, could be apprehensive enough or unwise enough to desire to establish in our country a system of military conscription in times of peace. Conscription in times of peace is the dividing line between vassalage and freedom, between monarchy and free government, between autocracy and democracy, between the divine right of kings to govern others and the divine right of men to rule themselves. Wherever we find compulsory military service in times of peace we find castes and classes, we find centralized government in the hands of a few, we find either tyranny or revolution. In other words, we find everything that every true and patriotic American must abhor with all his soul, with all his mind, and with all his might, and with all his heart.

WHAT DOES COMPULSORY MILITARY SERVICE MEAN?

Compulsory military service means conscription pure and simple. Some militarists of more or less prominence say we should have an Army of at least 3,000,000 men, but preferably eight or nine millions, a portion with the colors and the other portion in reserve; but all ready to be mobilized at a moment's notice. Whom are we imitating if we adopt this plan? We are imitating Russia, Germany, Italy, Austria, Spain, France, and Japan. What are we doing when we agree to imitate them? We are saying that when our forefathers in 1776 and 1789 established a free government in this country they were mistaken; that when they brushed aside all examples of European Governments and started out on a theory that all men were born free and equal and have a right to govern themselves, they were mistaken; and that after 140 years of trial we must forsooth admit our Government has been a failure, and agree to go back to the autocratic and despotic governments of Europe for our guidance and say to them that we have been wrong for 140 years; that we now acknowledge it; and that we are going into a contest with you to see if we can not build up a greater military autocracy than you have ever done.

The militarists are not satisfied with anything less, so they say, than to have seasoned veterans equal to any seasoned veterans of any European nation that may be sent against us in any possible war. Why, Mr. Chairman, if we were to adopt this plan and create an Army in this country of 10,000,000, or even 3,000,000, men in times of peace, it would not be 25 years before this country would be ruled by the most despotic and autocratic militarism that any nation has seen in the history of the world. Even now, with a little Army of a little over 100,000 men, the militarists are seeking to take away the powers of Congress, they are disregarding the mandates of They are declaring that Congress is not capable of Congress. dealing with military subjects. They are losing sight of the first principle of military training-obedience to superior authority. Some of these gentlemen, and I am glad to say for the sake of our country they are few, are openly avowing the incompetency of Congress to deal with the military system of They are openly in rebellion to the higher constituted authority of Congress. They treat with contempt the mandates of Congress, and surely, if they are willing to do this when they have an Army of only 135,000 men, what must the plain people of this country expect when those men, or men who believe as they do, have control of an Army of 8,000,000 men, or even 3,000,000 men?

THE FORMER AND PRESENT CONTENTIONS OF THE MILITARISTS,

The militarists of this country before the outbreak of the European war were always claiming that a large standing army was an insurance against war and an assurance of peace. They were constantly citing the great military establishments of Germany, France, and Russia as being the most effective insurance against war. Of course, we all now know that these great military establishments instead of being an insurance against war were the causes of the greatest war that has ever been known among the children of men. If Germany had never had her great military establishment to back her she never would have declared war against France and Russia. If Russia had never had her great military establishment she would never have mobilized her forces on the German border. What has been the result of these military policies? Why, for example, if Germany should survive, or even if she were to gain all the territory there was in Europe, she would still be loser by reason of the loss of 3,000,000 of her young men, the loss of property, and the loss of her resources especially. Germany can not regain in 200 years what she has lost by this war, which, I believe, is the very result of her intolerable and inhumane system of militarism. The Savior of mankind once said:

For what profiteth a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?

In the loss of 3,000,000 of her young men she has indeed already lost her soul. The same arguments apply with equal force, but in a lesser degree to the other nations of Europe having relatively large standing armies.

So that, confronted with the obvious facts, our militaristic friends can no longer point to Germany, France, Austria, and Russia as the nations whose example we ought to follow in building up a great standing army to insure us against war. God forbid that this Nation, this great free Nation of ours, shall ever follow in the footsteps of European militarism. [Applause.1

THEIR PRESENT CONTENTION.

Their present contention is that while we should not follow the example of Germany and France and other militaristic Governments, yet, because at the end of the present European war our country will be the richest country in the world, as it already is, that it would be easy enough for a great nation like the German, with a great standing army, trained and seasoned, to send that army over here and take our country. I for one have no such fears. If Germany is able to retain her own integrity at the close of this war she will have done well. Her Government and her people will be more in debt than the people of any country ever before. They would be certainly unable, financially, to conduct a war for several generations, and the idea of our building up a great standing army in times of peace by means of conscription to prevent such an attack seems

However, in order to carry out their present views, there are some people in this country who believe, and perhaps very honestly believe, that it is our duty to have conscription in times of peace and create a great centralized standing army thereby They no longer point to Germany and France as furnishing the systems they would copy, but in order to more easily accomplish their purpose they have sugar-coated the provision by changing the term "conscription in times of peace" to "universal military service," and changing the term "military autocracy" to "democratic obligation of all persons to serve their country.

They at first told us we should copy the Swiss system of compulsory military service, but upon examination they found that that system was not just what they wanted, and then they veered off to the Australian system of conscription, which was just put into force in 1909 or 1910, and has never been tried. Recently, however, their ardor for the Australian system seems to have cooled, and the latest pronouncement was that our militaristic friends have concluded that we should adopt the military system of Argentina in South America! Is not it marvelous that we red-blooded Americans, that we fighting Americans of this great Republic-of this dominating Republic, of this greatest and strongest of all nations—should be called upon to follow in the military footsteps of a South American republic that has in effect neither army nor navy, and who but a short time ago emerged from the despair of revolution! If these suggestions did not come from such high sources, I should not even refer to them, but coming as they do I want to take them up. I have given them all some study, and I will take them up in their

THE SWISS MILITARY SYSTEM.

Our militaristic friends in talking about universal conscription formerly invariably suggested the Swiss military system of conscription as the one that we should pattern after. In doing this these gentlemen put themselves in one of two attitudes: Either they did not know what the Swiss military system was or they were not dealing frankly with the American Congress or the American people. There is not one of these gentlemen who would want our country to pattern after such a system as the Swiss system. The Swiss system is precisely the system these gentlemen do not want. They claim that they want a democratic system—one that where there is equality of service, and all are treated alike-rich men and poor men share the common lot. Class distinctions based on wealth or inheritance are for a time abolished, sharing the common service shoulder to shoulder, and so forth. But when they came to look into the Swiss system they found that it was too democratic, because the Swiss system not only conscripts the enlisted men without pay, but it conscripts the noncommissioned officers and commissioned officers without pay in times of peace.

Of course, if the militarists want absolute equality of burden and service, they can not complain if the Government conscripts officers as well as the men.

I do not think that the Swiss system is suitable to our conditions or to our country. I do not believe that their system of conscription of officers is right, nor do I believe that their system of conscription of enlisted men is right. The officers of our Army ought to be paid and the men when they are employed by the Government ought to be paid. And that is not all; you can depend upon it that they will be paid, whether they are brought into the Army by conscription or as volunteers. This Government will never take the services of its citizens without paying for those services. We might as well look that fact squarely in the face; and whenever we talk about raising an immense standing Army in times of peace by conscription without pay we are talking about a condition that will never exist in this country, and should never exist.

COST OF CONSCRIPTION.

If the country is to have this immense standing army that the If the country is to have this immense standing army that the militarists would force upon us by universal conscription, then it must be ready to pay the price of that army, and we can depend upon it that the price will never be less than it is at present—about $1,000 a year for each average soldier. If we have an army of 3,000,000 men drafted into the service under a conscript military law it will cost us $3,000,000,000 per year, and if we have 10,000,000 men it will cost us $10,000,000,000 a year, a sum so fabulous that it would take all the earnings of the people excused from Army service to pay for such a system. But, they say, if you do not pay the conscripts the cost will be lessened. It would be lessened by one-sixth. Without pay an army of 3,000,000 would cost $2,500,000,000.

THE BEGINNING AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE SWISS SYSTEM.

But I was talking about the Swiss system. Switzerland is a little country, not much larger than one of our States It is not much bigger than one county, is it?

Mr. McKELLAR (continuing). And not as large as some of them, exceedingly mountainous, having only about 3,000,000 people, and surrounded immediately by four powerful warlike nations-four nations that have conscript military service Germany, France, Italy, and Austria. This has been her situa-tion for generations. Military conscription in Switzerland has grown up by common consent rather than established by law. Their first compact was in 1393, and since that time, owing to their situation, they have felt that every person should be trained as a soldier. Conscript service was an actual condition before the law was passed providing for it. They have felt that they were obliged to train themselves in order to prevent the aggressive designs of their more powerful neighbors immediately surrounding them.

As a matter of fact, their present military system is patterned after that of the United States. The central government virtually has no standing army at all in times of peace. The Cantons, which are the same as our States, have, except in times of war or threatened war, authority over the military forces. The military instruction and equipment of troops are under the control of the central Government, just as our Government performs a like service for the State National Guard. The organizations under the control and supervision of the Cantons are precisely like our National Guard organizations under the control of the States. The Swiss system is in no sense a national one, except when called into service when war is imminent or when war has been declared. The system is purely a confederative one.

The Swiss Government being poor, it was early found that they could not pay their troops, and, if they were to have an army at all, it must of necessity be a conscripted service. At present they have an army of some 200,000 in active service in times of war and 250,000 in a so-called-but paper-reserve: and yet they have only one general, and only have him in time of war. They pay that general $3,650 a year when in actual service, and, substantially speaking, he is the only paid officer or man in the army. The entire expenditure of the Swiss Government for military service is only $7,000,000 a year. In so far as the cost of subsistence and equipment is concerned, the average Swiss soldier costs his Government about $30 a year. The average American soldier costs our Government over $1,000 Think of our Army of 135,000 men with only one a year. general!

Mr. SMITH of Michigan rose.
Mr. McKELLAR. Will the gentleman excuse me for a moment, and I shall yield later. After I finish my main argument I shall be glad to yield.

It will thus be seen that not only is the Swiss system copied after our National Guard but the only distinguishing characteristic between it and ours is that Switzerland, being a poor country, the services of officers and men are taken by the Government without pay, while our country, being a rich country, takes the services of both officers and men with liberal pay.

It will be noted again that the distinguishing feature of both systems is the concentration of military power in times of danger and the decentralization of military power in times of peace.

A truer military policy was never devised by man. The rock upon which the ship of a republican Government has always foundered in the past was the rock of centralized military power in the nation in times of peace.

The result is, when taunted with the Swiss system, our reply is, We have the Swiss system. But they say that the Swiss system is more democratic than ours. If by that is meant that the officers and men are both placed upon an equality of service under conscription without pay, I say that is true; but when they say that in Switzerland all men have to serve, I say that is not correct. Even in Switzerland not over 25 per cent of the male population bear arms. There can be no such thing in Switzerland or any other country as universal conscription where each male as he arrives at a certain age is required to perform it.

In order for the Swiss system to be exactly like ours we would have to simply add but one small amendment to the national-defense act of June 3, 1916. This amendment is:

That hereafter all officers, noncommissioned and commissioned, and enlisted men shall be drafted into the service of the United States without pay, but with subsistence and equipment, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War,

If our militaristic friends want democracy of service, equality of obligation of defense, and all the other isms that they have been putting forth lately, this simple amendment will give it to them, and their so-called democracy of service would be complete. Of course, they will not favor such an amendment, nor will I, because I believe that officers and men whose services are demanded by the Government should be paid for by the Government, and, to my mind, it is ridiculous to claim the con-

SWISS SYSTEM WHOLLY INADEQUATE.

Again, it is idle to talk about the Swiss system producing an effective army. They are conscripted for so many days for 12 years; or, in other words, between the ages of 20 and 32 years. The infantrymen are required to serve 65 days the first year and 11 days each year thereafter, or 186 days in all. The artillerymen are required to serve 75 days the first year and 11 days each year thereafter, or 196 days in all. The cavalrymen are required to serve 90 days the first year and 11 days each year thereafter, or 211 days in all. In other words, under this conscription system the soldier is trained a little over 6 months during a period of 12 years. I am not a military expert, but any military expert who tells me that you can make a seasoned, hardened soldier by training a man 6 months during a period of 12 years is only making himself ridiculous, and, in my judgment, a citizen thus trained would not be effective for any pur-Such soldiers are play soldiers. Such armies are toy armies. As compared with our National Guard system our men have to serve 576 hours in 3 years, while the Swiss guardsmen serve only 1,488 hours in 12 years.

In addition, the Swiss system has never really been tried except once, and it was then found wanting. Napoleon went through Switzerland like water through a sieve. time no other nation has ever invaded Switzerland, and I doubt if any has thought of doing so. No other country wants to. It is a mountainous country that offers no advantages to those seeking conquest. Expert Army officers in the United States, including many of those who are in favor of universal conscription, have frequently testified before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House that you can not make an infantryman in less than a year, and that other branches of the service require at least two years. So that we see the much-talked-of Swiss system is only, after all, a weak imitation of our National Guard and wholly unsuited to the military demands of our country and wholly inefficient to bring about a real defense to our

THE AUSTRALIAN SYSTEM.

For a while our militarist friends were greatly enamored of the Australian military system, and I have investigated that system somewhat and want to tell the House briefly about it.

The Australian system is so new that nobody knows what may come of it. It was only authorized in 1910. Australia has a little more than 4,000,000 people. Her territory is larger than the United States. It is an island, and has more coast than any other country. Her people are nearly all of British origin. It is virtually a white man's country, and in no place in the world, not even perhaps in the southern part of our own country, is the idea of a white man's country more prevalent than it is in Australia. They fear the Japanese very much, and in the last few years they have feared very greatly the growing power of Germany, and especially the menace that lay in Germany's building up a great naval armament. Their idea was that if Germany should at any time catch Great Britain where she could not use all of her sea forces against Germany that Aus- for anyone to understand what would be the effect of this protralia would be unprotected and that she would fall an easy prey to Germany. This, in addition to the Japanese menace, caused Australia a great fright, and for a number of years she has been considering various methods of protection and defense. She, of course, has no navy and neither has she an army. Doubtless, she has furnished a number of troops to Great Britain in the present war, but even now, substantially speaking, she has no real army. She has adopted a system of compulsory service or conscription which she believes will be of great good, and yet it is untried. It is hardly in working order yet, and instead of being a democratic measure it is the most undemocratic measure that could possibly be imagined.

Senator Chamberlain has introduced a bill in the Senate which substantially carries the provisions of the Australian system, and in discussing the provisions of that bill, which I now propose to do, the Australian system will be explained. I understand this bill has been changed in some respects and reported favorably. I have not seen the bill as reported.

THE CHAMBERLAIN BILL.

The Chamberlain bill, or Australian system, is quite a remarkable product. It takes every boy in the United States, upon his reaching the age of 12 years, except certain favored classes, and trains him at the expense of the United States Government for a period of 12 years, 6 years as a part of a cadet army and 6 years as a part of the citizen army. This bill would train the boys 90 hours a year for the first 6 years, and 120 hours a year for the next 6 years. This would mean but 6 months of actual training at 8 hours per day, scattered over a period of 12 years. If our Army officers' contention that you can not make a soldier in less than from one to two years is correct, then this training is wholly inadequate and probably would only be a farce.

But this is not the principal objection to this Australian system. Attention only need be called to three exemptions from military service provided for in the bill that destroy the whole so-called democratic idea of conscript service. In the very first section of the bill it is provided, among other exemptions, the following:

(a) Members of the permanent military or naval forces of the United States.

(b) Those excused by the President in the interest of the public service by reason of employment therein.

(c) Temporary exemptions for periods not exceeding one year, and renewals from time to time will be granted to persons whose compelled attendance at the prescribed training would impose great hardships, either by reason of excessive distance or other cause, provided that the district commandant of each training district shall have the power to issue permanent and temporary certificates of exemption for the above-mentioned causes.

These three exemptions are so vicious as even to destroy the idea that the bill might be considered by a free people. militarists say: "Nothing could be more democratic than compulsory training or service, rich man and poor man alike sharing the common lot. Class distinctions based on wealth and inheritance for a time are absolutely lost." And yet, this bill at the very outset has a provision that exempts every boy who is or who may be so fortunate as to be a member of the permanent military or naval forces of the United States. There are two classes created by the bill, the patricians, or the governing class, and the plebelans, or serf class, the only object of which latter class is to be controlled by the ruling class. If we are to have compulsory service, it should be compulsory alike upon the officer and the man. It should not make fish of one and fowl of the other.

The next exemption offers a very wide field for abuse. It is doubtful whether any President that we might elect would so far forget himself as to allow abuses to arise in connection therewith, but at the same time it offers to the administration of each President the right to build up an unlimited favored class by the use of this power, unless such President be very careful.

The third exemption must be taken in connection with section

17 of the bill, which is as follows:

That each congressional district and the District of Columbia shall constitute a registration and training district, and in each of such districts units of the citizen cadet corps and of the citizen army shall be organized and trained, and for the purpose of registration, organization, and training each of said districts shall be under the charge of an officer of the Regular Army, designated for the purpose, who shall have an office permanently located in the district, and who shall be assisted by the necessary commissioned and enlisted personnel, and by such other assistants as are duly authorized herein as instructors for imparting the prescribed training.

Now, when this section is considered in connection with the third exemption, which provides that the commandant have unlimited power to issue permanent and temporary certificates of exemption for any cause, it requires but a most casual thought

There would be thousands of parents in each congresvision. sional district besieging the commandant to exempt their children from the provisions of this bill. All kinds of political influence would be brought to bear upon the commandant by powerful and influential parents to exempt their children from this act, and the immediate result would be, as every man acquainted with politics in this country knows, that an alliance would immediately be formed between the political leaders of each district and the commandant of the district, having for its object the mutual interest of the parties. The local party bosses would work with the commandant to secure two things: First, exemptions for favored parents, and, second, control of the local offices. The commandant would only want to be allowed to name the Congressman and Senators from such district and State, and within a short time after the establishment of such a system there would not be a Congressman in this House who would not bear the stamp of approval of the commandant of his district. The unlimited power to grant exemptions from military service would be a greater power and more effective political power than any ever exercised by a Roman proconsul in the days when the Roman Army was supreme and the Roman Republic was but a name.

Again, section 8 of the bill provides as follows:

That the training prescribed by this act for the citizen cadet corps and for the citizen army and citizen navy may be given in public and private schools, academies, colleges, and universities, in the Organized Militia or Navai Militia of the several States, in organizations of the Boy Scouts or similar organizations, provided that it conforms to the prescribed training for the corresponding years, is of equal annual duration, and is so certified by the district commandant of the district in which such instruction is imparted.

This section divides the citizen cadet corps and the citizen army into two classes, the poor and the rich. The rich who can have their children attend public and private schools, academies, colleges, and universities form one class; the other class are those who are not thus able to be educated, and the latter class, if they do not attend, are arrested and forced to do so with this humane proviso of section 15 of the bill:

That the total duration of confinement of a person in respect to offenses committed in any one year or of costs awarded in proceedings for such offenses shall not exceed 60 days.

In other words the rich would get their children exempted by sending them to the necessary school. The poor would turn their children over to the military authorities or see them sent to jail.

It seems to me that I need not further discuss the provisions of this bill. There are other provisions quite as vicious. It is opposed to every American principle of government. I can not conceive of a military system more undemocratic, more antagonistic to the customs and traditions of our people, or more fraught with danger to the Government itself than this kind of a universal training.

The military commandant of congressional districts would become the proconsuls of the military leaders here in Washington and altogether the militarists would rule this country with a rod of iron. We would have elections, perhaps, just as before, but the political bosses in each congressional district would flock to the standard of the commandant, and no official, either State or National, could be elected without the consent of this military commandant stationed in that congressional district under the provisions of this bill.

Again it would precipitate the race issue in the South and in the far West, because under the provisions of the bill the Negro, the Japanese, and the Chinese would all be trained shoulder to shoulder with the whites. The negro boys and the white boys would serve in the same companies, wear the same clothes, eat at the same tables. To that extent, at least, it might be claimed by those who are partial to the colored races that the bill was democratic.

I next come to the Argentina system, which seems to be the latest fad of the militarists.

THE ARGENTINE SYSTEM.

I quote the following excerpts and statements from a recent history of Argentina:

After a half century, following the 25th of May, 1910, the history of Argentina has a record of wars, revolutions, and other disturbances. It was the unavoidable conflict between centralizationists and autonomists, between military and civil principles of government. (Winter's History of Argentina, p. 321.)

In 1880 they had a great revolution. There was another considerable revolution in 1905 (p. 358), and quite a number of lesser ones in the meantime.

Mr. Winter, on page 400 of his book, says:

It is a mistaken view to think that Argentina is governed by revolu-tion alone. It is true that in the past quarter of a century there have been three more or less serious revolutions, as well as minor disturbances. Two presidents were compelled to resign by these malcontents. As a rule little blood was shed and it was simply their method of introducing a change.

From these it would seem that Argentina, a country more than one-third as large as the United States in territory, and having some seven or eight million people, is a country that has been beset all its life with revolutions. Naturally, it is a very rich country, and but for the revolutions no doubt it would have grown much faster than it has.

It has not now, and never has had, a national army that could insure the Government against the success of the revolutionists. It has a standing army of only 5,000 men, and it has an additional so-called compulsory service army of about 18,000 more.

It has in name a compulsory military service. A recent history of the Republic by Mr. Fraser has this statement on page 81:

There is a compulsory military service. The period of continuous training does not exceed one year, and this only in the case of a proportion of the annual contingent. The others are released after a three months' drill. With varying periods of training every Argentine from the age of 22 to 45 is liable to be called upon to defend his country. Though years may pass without any call to attend military drill, every man in the country must learn to shoot.

As stated above, the standing army of Argentina consists of 5,000 professional soldiers. To this is added 18,000 picked conscripted men, making an army of 23,000 men. Then they have a reserve composed of classes between 21 and 30. The militarists of the United States, who are trying to fasten the Argentine system on us, tell us, in a recent article in World's Work, "that in an emergency Argentina can mobilize 180,000 soldiers," As a matter of fact, their army is simply an army on paper. The entire appropriation for military purposes in 1914 was $13,065,000. The law has been in force only a few years and nobody knows whether it is successful or unsuccessful. They have not had a revolution down there in several years, and the question is still undetermined until the next revolution. As is usual in revolutions in South America, it will be found that about one half of the army is on one side and the other half on the other side when the revolution comes. All the fit men of military age enter training, but after a general training of three months they choose a small percentage by lot to go into the Army.

I am just a little in the dark as to why our militaristic friends desire that the United States should copy a military system of a South American Republic that has in substance no military system except that of revolution. Whether such a system has been suggested in humor or not I am unable to say. Doubtless, however, some of our militaristic friends are inclined to be humorous, and have suggested this system in a spirit of fun. Surely no serious-minded man who knows what kind of a military system they have in Argentina would want the United States to copy such a system. In saying this I do not reflect upon Argentina as a nation. It has the making of a great nation if it ever gets out of the hands of the militarists and revolutionists. Her militarists and revolutionists go hand in hand, and have done more to keep back the progress of that country than all else combined. In the years to come I hope she will get out of the hands of the militarists and revolutionists and take her rightful place among the great nations.

WHAT IS A PROPER MILITARY SYSTEM FOR THE UNITED STATES?

Not even our militaristic friends now claim that we ought to pattern after the military systems of Germany, France, and Russia, which systems, as all men know, have brought such horrible disaster to those three countries in the last three years.

It will be seen from what has been said by me as to the Swiss, Australian, and Argentine systems that it would not do Swiss, Australian, and Argentine systems that it would not do for a great Nation like ours to copy after those systems. The question then arises, What is a proper military system for the United States? My answer to that question is that we should retain our present system. It is a system instituted by the fathers of the Republic. It is a system that has carried us safely through five wars. It is a system under which we have never tasted defeat. It is a system centralized in times of war or the imminence of war when the country is in danger, and after the danger is passed it at once becomes decentralized. is the system that is in harmony with the history, traditions, and customs of our people. It is a system that gives us protection, and at the same time it is not a menace to our republican institutions. It is truly and purely an American system, and I for one believe with all my heart, with all my soul, and with all my strength that a truly American system is better than German militarism; it is better than Swiss inefficiency; it is better than Australian negativeness; and infinitely better than the systems of South American revolutionism.

As an American citizen, I am proud of our military system and I want to see it built up and made more efficient, so that it will ever be ready to protect America's interests and in times of peace forever incapable of threatening the integrity of the American Republic.

This system has reached its best stage under the operation of the national-defense act of June 3, 1916. By that act the military forces of our country can be centralized and mobilized upon a week's notice, if the officers of the Regular Establishment are efficient, and constitute an effective defense force. Under it we have a standing army now of 135,000 men. It can be expanded to 225,000 men. We have appropriated money for 135,000 this year. In addition to that, we have a National Guard of 158,000 men. It can be expanded to 400,000 men. This National Guard has just been through a splendid military training on the Mexican border. The two together give us now an effective military force of 293,000 men, and the President has the right under this act to conscript in times of war or threatened war enough men to fill up all National Guard organizations to full strength.

In addition to the above we have rifles and rifle ammunition, field guns and field-gun ammunition, Coast Artillery and coastartillery ammunition, aircraft and air rifles and ammunition, to equip almost instantly an army of 1,000,000 men, and we have made immense appropriations last year and this year for the purpose of adding to our reserve of arms, ammunition, equipment, and supplies all along the line.

At the same time we are building up a reserve for both the Regular Army and the National Guard. We have doubled the capacity of West Point and Annapolis. We are training every year about 30,000 young men in the land-grant colleges and furnish them with all the paraphernalia with which to make Under the national-defense act we have provided a soldiers. Under the national-defense act we have provided a Reserve Officers' Corps in the various schools, colleges, and universities of our country, and it is expected that there will not be less than 50,000 students trained for officers in these various institutions. We have appropriated $4,385,000 for this purpose in this year's bill. Under the national-defense act the number of students thus trained should at an early time be increased to not less than 200,000 a year.

Again, we are appropriating $2,500,000 for civilian training camps, and it is claimed that there will be not less than 50,000 men trained in these camps.

Again, we are appropriating $2,300,000 for target practice and rifle ranges to teach the young men of the country how to

It will thus be seen that the national-defense act of June 3, 1916, provides for the training of not less than 160,000 of the National Guard, of 50,000 in the Officers' Reserve Corps, of 30,000 young men in the agricultural colleges, and 50,000 in the training camps. In all our Government is now providing for the training each year of 290,000 men. It is only claimed that 400,000 can be trained by conscription. (Gen. Scott, p. 793.)

We are training these men on a volunteer basis. The men who take the training are so situated as to their finances, their dependent families, their employment, their methods and habits of life, that they can thus be trained with least interference to their business pursuits, and surely the annual training of this large number of men will produce in this country within a short time a body of trained military men that will be sufficient to protect our country against any invasion which may come anywhere it comes from.

In 10 years under this system we will have in this country not less than 2,900,000 trained young men to serve their country in case of need.

In addition to all this we still have the law providing for the call for volunteers, and in a case of necessity these volunteers may be called upon at any time and would come, no doubt, for the most part from these men who have been thus trained in our schools, colleges, and in our military training

In my humble judgment, this system of military training is the very best and most effective training that this country of ours could have, and I am opposed to any change in it, except to build it up and make it stronger and better and more efficient. As an amendment to it I have a bill now reported out from the Committee on Military Affairs, providing for the establishment of national military academies in each State in the

In this connection I want to urge my militaristic friends to leave off complaining of our military system and abusing it, but to join all patriotic citizens in saying a good word for it, and building it up and making it more efficient as the years go by for our common good and protection, at the same time seeing to it that our system shall never become so centralized as to menace the integrity of our Republic.

THE NATIONAL GUARD,

I can not close these remarks without having a few words to say about the National Guard. The national-defense act of June 3, 1916, went into effect a few days before the National Guard was called out. That law provided for pay to the National Guard and was intended to make it, and, in my judgment, does make it, an effective national force. Although it was called out immediately after the passage of the act, the success of the call has been remarkable. In a reasonable time, and, indeed, a shorter time than could have been expected, 158,000 of the National Guard was mobilized on the Mexican border. Up to the time that the National Guard was called to the border there had been frequent incursions upon the part of Mexicans into Texas. While the Regular Army was stationed on the border we had the unfortunate raid upon Columbus. Mex., and afterwards came the unfortunate episodes of Parral and Carrizal; but after the National Guard was stationed on the border there was no further trouble. The Mexicans came no more, and now for nearly eight months the National Guard, or a very large portion of it, has been busily engaged in defending the border and in training to make themselves more efficient soldiers.

Notwithstanding the perfect service which they have given, notwithstanding their long and arduous training, notwithstanding their being taken away from their ordinary occupations and deprived of their positions in many cases, these patriotic men have stuck steadfastly to their duty, and in my judgment have rendered to their country a service which every patriotic American citizen should commend and applaud.

However, notwithstanding the fact that the mobilization of the National Guard on the border has been an entire success and has accomplished effectually the purpose for which they were sent there, still our militaristic friends, and I regret to say some of these are in the Regular Army, having made up their minds before the passage of the national-defense act that the National Guard should not be made a national force, have constantly undertaken to find fault with the guard and to criticize it in every conceivable way, and some have gone even so far as to say that it has been a failure. A partially anonymous report was gotten up which casts reflections upon the entire National Guard. In this report, or by whom it was made, or to what organizations it refers, the report itself does not show, mention is made of a number of criticisms of the National Guard. Some of the more important of these criticisms are as follows:

1. The mobilization was not quick enough.

2. That all of the organizations were not up to peace strength

3. That recruiting was not active enough.

4. There were changes in the points of mobilization after the President's call.

5. There were mistakes made about mobilization camp sites. 6. That the shipments of reserve supplies to mobilization points were not carried on as it should have been.

7. That many of the men did not have clothing, shoes, and extra clothing for the surplus kits.

8. That they did not have the necessary equipment.
9. The transportation was not up to the standard.

10. The necessary horses were not furnished.

Now, it will be seen that each of the foregoing criticisms are really to be directed to the Regular Army organization, because the Regular Army organization under the national-defense act had control of all these matters.

On the other hand, there were some criticisms made that are proper criticisms of the National Guard: 1. The failure of a small part to take the oath as required by law. 2. A great many of the guard were found physically defective and were discharged.

3. Some few of the National Guard failed to respond to the call. 4. Some sought discharges from service on account of dependent relatives and other causes.

5. Some sought discharges on account of being students in educational institutions.

6. Some sought discharges because they were Government employees

7. Lack of training.

8. Recruiting.

It will thus be seen that to those who are inclined to be critical the mobilization of the National Guard on the border may be criticized. Some of these criticisms apply to the National Guard. Some of them apply just as strongly to the Regular Army. I have no doubt that taken as a whole it has tried to do its full measure of duty on the border. I believe that the same is true of the National Guard.

To illustrate: They claim that there has been difficulty in recruiting the National Guard, and yet, it is admitted, they have the same trouble in recruiting the Regular Army. It is claimed that they have desertions from the National Guard, but the remarkable fact is the desertions from the National Guard as compared to the desertions from the Regular Army in the same period of time were many less.

All these criticisms about the National Guard not being "first-line" troops are unjustified. The Regular Army men have never been "first-line" troops yet. They have had no more experience as "first-line" troops than the National Guard, and no one knows until they are tested on that "first line" which will make the heat. I have no doubt that will make the best. I have no doubt that whenever it comes, should it ever be so unfortunate for either body of troops to be put on the "first line," they will conduct themselves in a manner befitting the American soldier, and both organizations will make real fact line coldiers.

make real first-line soldiers.

Gentlemen of the committee, we settled our military policy on June 3, 1916. It will not be changed in your day or mine, but, of course, it will be modified from time to time as may be found necessary. It is the very best policy of which this country is capable. That it will be a successful policy in the event of trouble I have no doubt. Under it we can train as many men as it is claimed we can under the so-called military service plan, as heretofore pointed out by me, and I trust that in the future our Army officers, our newspapers, our magazines, and all patri-otic American citizens will be willing to stand by this truly American system and give it their loyal, unwavering, and enthusiastic support, and when that is done we can rest assured that the American armies will continue to have that marvelous success in the future that they have always had in the past

Mr. SANFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.
Mr. SANFORD. I have a great deal of confidence in the gentleman's judgment, and I want to ask him if there is any officer of the Military Establishment that came before the gentleman's committee, either at this or the last session, that assures the gentleman's confidence in reference to the reliability of our present system?

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to say this about it, and I am glad the gentleman asked the question-

Mr. SANFORD. I want the information.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will give you the information. You take the politicians of the Army, the swivel-chair soldiers, you take the after-dinner calamity howlers, you take the dress-parade gentlemen, in the Army and out of the Army, and they all want a greater dress-parade Army, and they hope to secure it through the way of universal service. Here is what the Secretary of War said before our committee recently, in substance, namely, that he had heard absolutely no criticism of the National Guard from any officer of the Regular Army who was down on the border with troops. Think of it. There was not a scintilla of criticism.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Actually serving with troops.

Mr. McKELLAR. Actually serving with troops. The men who were there, the men who know how to fight, the men on whom this country has to depend when it comes to trouble, make no criticism of the National Guard. They tell you that the National Guard system is a splendid organization. They do not make any complaint of it. But the gentlemen who sit back at home in the offices and at the desks find it easy enough to

Mr. SANFORD. I want the gentleman to answer my question one way or the other. I do not want the gentleman to think that he has answered it.

Mr. McKELLAR. If I have not done so, I shall be glad to

Mr. SANFORD. I want to ask if there was any officer of the Military Establishment who has been before the gentleman's -and the committee had the right to call all kindseither at this or last session, that assured the gentleman's confidence in reference to our present system under the National Guard?

Mr. McKELLAR. The only one I recall is Gen. Mann. He said the National Guard had not had a fair trial. We know our office men here. They are all in favor of universal service; but only a very few of them thus testified before our committee.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Gen. Mann was asked if he was willing to say that the system was a failure, and he said that he thought that, considering the fact that there had been no real trial under this system-and I am referring to the National Guard under the national-defense act-he could not say, inasmuch as the system had not been tried yet. That is the substance of it.

Mr. SANFORD. They were universal in condemning it in advance?

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will permit me, Gen. Mann said that in his opinion the National Guard as provided for in the national defense act had not been given a fair trial.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Can anybody who has some time give me Mr. McKELLAR. five minutes more?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman five minutes. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for five minutes more

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. McKELLAR. In a moment. Some of these officers do say the National Guard has been a failure. They said that before the defense act of 1916 was passed, and their testimony shows that they are simply holding to their former opinions. Let me say in regard to that, in conclusion, that there is no real proof of any such fact. The National Guard has done everything in the world that could be expected of them. They have done everything that has been required of them. all remember the episode at Columbus, N. Mex.; our National Guard was not there. You all remember the episode at Parral; the National Guard was not there. You all remember the episode at Carrizal; the National Guard was not there. You will remember that before the National Guard was sent to the border there were depredations on the part of Mexicans almost every day or week, but have you heard of any depredations since that National Guard has been there? Not one. They have measured up to everything that was expected of them. They have conducted themselves in such a way down there that in my judgment they have earned the commendation and praise of every fair-minded man in this country for the service that they have done.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. Mr. EMERSON. You do not charge the affair at Carrizal to.

the Regular Army?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I do not. It was an unfortunate episode. These things will occur. It might have occurred with the National Guard, but it did not. I am not charging the Regular Army or the National Guard with any derelictions. They are both splendid organizations of men, and I believe that whenever they have a real fight, they will not be found wanting. I say it is the duty of Congress to stand behind these men in the field, to build them up, to make them more efficient, whether they are in the Regular Army or in the National Guard; to build them up along the plans that we have now. I do not believe in criticising them or either of them, and especially at this juncture of our history. I am for a more efficient Army. I would get rid of all this bickering about the Regular Army on the one side, or the National Guard on the other. No patriotic official or officer ought to indulge in such criticism. I think we ought to get rid of it in the Army. I think we ought to get rid of it outside of the Army. We ought to come to the conclusion that there is but one system of militarism in this country, and that is the one that was established by our forefathers, and that one we will stand by and uphold.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. KREIDER. I want to ask the gentleman a question for information.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. KREIDER. In reference to the Swiss system, which has been referred to so often, do I understand the gentleman correctly to say that the Swiss system provides for only 60 days' training?

Mr. McKELLAR. Sixty-five days training the first year and 11 days thereafter for the infantry, 75 days for the cavalry, and 90 days for the artillery during a period of 12 years, Mr. KAHN. The 65 days is only for the infantry? Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; 65 days the first year for the infantry, 75 days for the cavalry, and 90 days for the artillery, and 11 days thereafter each year. It is not anything like the amount of training that is given in the National Guard of your own country. When men talk about the Swiss system being a more efficient system than ours they do not know what they are talking about.

Mr. KREIDER. The 65 days' training is given at the age of Mr. McKELLAR. They get 65 days' training the first year and then thereafter 11 days.

Mr. KREIDER. For how many years?

Mr. McKELLAR. Eleven more years; 12 years in all; and then they do not drill any more.

Mr. KREIDER. Do they have colleges or anything similar to our Military Academy at West Point to train their officers?

Mr. McKELLAR. They have some military schools, of course, but they are not of any great consequence.

Mr. GORDON. It would not be correct to say that that is all the training. They have some training at schools.

Mr. McKellar. Yes. They have some military schools. Mr. GORDON. No; I mean in their public schools. Furthermore, the Swiss constitution contains an absolute prohibition against a standing army.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; absolutely. But before I close, Mr. Chairman, I desire to add another word about the National Guard.

In closing I desire to quote the words of Secretary Baker on this subject before the Military Affairs Committee of the House:

Secretary Baker. I think that the call to the border coming inopportunely, so far as the transition from Organized Militia to National Guard is concerned, has enormously strengthened the National Guard both in its personnel, in its fitness as soldiers, and in its esprit de corps, and I look for very great improvement in the National Guard as a result. (Hearings, p. 725.)

And again:

Secretary Baker. So far as I know, Senator, no ranking officer who is actually in control of those troops on the border or concerned in their conduct there has made no such criticism.

Mr. McKellar. I am glad to know that. (Hearings, p. 718.)

I am proud of the fact that the real soldiers in the American Army, that the officers who were with the troops in the field, who know the National Guard, have not joined in this condemnation of the guard, and that the only criticisms that come from officers of the Army come from those officers who are far removed from the scenes of any impending conflict, and for the most part are men who have never seen, and who will probably never see, the smoke of battle. Swivel-chair soldiers, political soldiers are ever most critical of those who serve on the fighting

The criticisms come, for the most part, from that class of men whom we always have to relegate to the rear when a real conflict comes, the political soldiers, the Miss Nancys in uniforms, the after-dinner calamity howlers, the common scolds of the Army and Navy, the military old maids who see a dozen mice under every strange military bed-these we always have with us except in times of war. But red-blooded Americans need not mind them. Thank God, these fearful ones are few, and when the real conflict comes they all disappear until the war is over, when real men have more time to listen to their carpings. They even criticize those who have fought all our wars from the Revolutionary War down to the Spanish War.

Ah, my friends, it is easy enough years after the event to talk about what an army might have done or what it might not have It is easy enough to point out mistakes that have been made, but what we look to and what the world looks to is success. And I say that the American Army has never met a defeat and never will, in my judgment. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio

[Mr. GORDON

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I simply ask leave to extend my remarks in the Record by inserting some correspondence which I received from Gen. Crozier and from a gentleman by the name Alifas, on the subject of the time study and premiumpayment proposition which is involved in this bill, and also the testimony before our committee on that subject. If I can obtain the time later, I will address the House on the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks leave to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Saunders, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20783) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. Blackmon, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

EXCUSED FROM ROLL CALLS.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, I was here practically all day yesterday, as I have been during this session of Congress. Late yesterday afternoon I went over to Baltimore to act as best man for a friend of mine, Dr. McKinney, of Memphis, who married there last night. It is one of those services that every gentleman likes to perform for a friend when possible. There was nothing going on in the House when I left that would indicate there would be an all-night session. While I was away last night a point of no quorum was made in the House, and there were six roll calls before midnight. I was paired with Mr. Crago, of Pennsylvania, who was present and did not vote; but there was a misunderstanding about his asking that I be

I want to ask of the House unanimous consent that I be excused from the several roll calls under the circumstances, nunc pro tunc.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to be excused nunc pro tunc as of the roll calls of yesterday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a request to be excused nunc pro tunc. I accepted an invitation to make an address on the Government shipping bill, and in discharge of the acceptance of that invitation I was unavoidably absent yesterday afternoon and thereby missed several roll calls. I prefer the same request that was made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request is granted.

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORBOW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 16, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 16, 1917.

(Legislative day of Wednesday, February 14, 1917.)

The Senate reassembled at 10.30 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

names:
Hollis
Hughes

Williams Hitchcock Smoot

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to ask for a unanimous-consent agreement. I send it to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 1 o'clock on Saturday, February 17, 1917, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of H. R. 9533, a bill to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, and during that day shall vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 1 o'clock on the 17th day of February, 1917, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than five minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may be permitted a word, the bill, I understand, is substantially completed. It is a very important bill and ought to pass; but there is pending to it a prohibitory amendment which, without a referendum, will give rise to a great deal of debate, and properly so. I am not prepared at this stage to consent to a unanimous-consent agreement.

I will state to the Senator that every amendment has been disposed of except this one.

Mr. OVERMAN. I shall have to object.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I did.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I know; but it does seem to me that if I do not get in the bill before the revenue bill I can not get it up at this session. That is the trouble. That is the reason why want Senators to agree that a final vote shall be taken.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Colorado knows that if the referendum is accepted as to the prohibitory amendment, the bill will pass in a few moments, but if the referendum is not accepted, I feel I shall be compelled to object to the unanimousconsent agreement.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have been struggling for some time to get the Senate to agree to some proposition for fixing a time for a final vote on the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts why he is so fearful of allowing the Senate to vote on the amendment referred to?

Mr. LODGE. Because, Mr. President, I am firmly of the conviction that prohibition ought not to be imposed on any community without their having an opportunity to pass upon it.

Mr. GRONNA. Then, if that be true, is it not reasonable to believe that the Members of the Senate have sufficient intelligence to vote the proposition down?

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator from North Dakota mean the referendum?

Mr. GRONNA. I refer to the proposed amendment.
Mr. LODGE. As I said before, if the referendum could be attached to the bill, I would not have one word of objection to make; but if the referendum is in doubt, it will lead to a great deal of discussion. Therefore, I object to the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19410) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator mean an amendment to the amendment now pending?

It is an amendment to the amendment? Mr. NORRIS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment

will be stated.

The Secretary. Commencing on page 4, line 23, it is proposed to strike out, after the words "shall be," down to and including the word "thereof," in line 4, on page 5, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

The zone system now applying to parcel-post matter to be adapted also to second-class matter at the following rates, to wit: Local, first and second zones (under 150 miles), one-half cent per pound; third zone (300 miles), 1 cent per pound; fourth zone (600 miles), 1½ cents per pound; fifth zone (1,000 miles), 2 cents per pound; sixth zone (1,400 miles), 2½ cents per pound; seventh zone (1,800 miles), 3 cents per pound; eighth zone (over 1,800 miles), 3½ cents per pound.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary in-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania

will state his inquiry.

Mr. OLIVER. I should like to have the present parliamentary situation explained. It seems to me that this amendment to the amendment which is proposed by the Senator from Vebraska is not in order as an amendment to the proposition that is now pending, as I recollect it.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to was reconsidered and the amendment is now before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President. Mr. OLIVER. And it was defeated, as I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. The motion before the Senate is to adopt the

Provided, That on and after July 1, 1917, drop letters shall be mailed at a rate of 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrier and rural free-delivery offices.

Mr. NORRIS. That is not a motion; that is a right, as I take it, the Senator has. I do not want to interfere with his right to ask for a division of the question; and when we come to vote we will have to vote on that question; but that does not preclude amendments either to that part or to any other part of the pending amendment. The pending amendment, Mr.

President, is the entire matter commencing on line 15, page 4, and ending on line 9, page 5. That amendment contains more than one proposition or, at least, that is the theory of the Senator, and I agree with him that it is perhaps subject to division. It seems to me that it is, and I think the Senator has a right to demand a division. I am not objecting to that, but he does not get that right to demand a division by making a motion; there is no motion pending-

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; there is.

Mr. NORRIS. There is no motion pending to divide the question. Any Senator has a right, if the question is divisible, to have a separate vote; but any part of the amendment is subject to amendment, and, I take it, we will not vote until the amendments are disposed of, at least so long as there is one pending. Therefore, it seems to me that the amendment I have offered is in order now. If it is adopted or if it is defeated, it does not interfere with the right of the Senator from Utah or any other Senator to make any demand in regard to a division of the question that he may desire to make.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on page 3776 of the Congres-SIONAL RECORD, after the vote was taken on the motion to reconsider, and it was agreed to, the Senator from Utah made this statement:

Mr. Smoot. Mr. President, I now ask for a division of the two questions in the amendment now pending, the first vote to be taken upon the following part of the amendment:
"Provided, That on and after July 1, 1917, drop letters shall be mailed at a rate of 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrier and rural free-delivery offices."

Mr. NORRIS. That is not a motion; that is a right the Senator has.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no doubt about the right to amend this amendment and there is no doubt that the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is in order. When the matter comes to a vote the Senator from Utah has a clear right to have a separate vote on the first branch of the amendment, but that does not prevent an amendment being offered to the amendment

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, another parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania will state it

Mr. OLIVER. I ask whether, the question being divided, a point of order will lie against a part of the amendment without lying against all?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the chair has heretofore decided that the proper decision is to sustain the point of order to the entire amendment, if it is sustainable, and then that portion of it subject to a point of order can be presented by a new amendment. That has been the uniform ruling of the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire briefly to address myself to the question. I should like to say to the Senator from Utah that I am compelled to be absent from the Senate to attend a conference meeting that is in session now, and I should be glad if I could have permission to say what I have to say now, and then attend that meeting.

Mr. President, I listened with a great deal of interest to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] last night before we adjourned. I had given to this subject some little consideration, and it seemed to me that the Senator from Georgia stated the principle properly in his argument. The amendment that I have offered carries out that idea, with the exception, of course, that men may disagree as to the charges that ought to be made in the various zones.

To begin with, it is conceded that second-class matter costs a great deal more to the Government than the Government gets out of it. I believe the experts say that it involves a loss to the Government of some $80,000,000. I think it is conceded also that within a comparatively small radius of the place of publication, if the Government carries the second-class matter at the rate provided by law, to wit, 1 cent a pound, it makes a profit out of the business. Then, I presume it will be conceded also that no one desires to make a profit out of the business, and I think it will be conceded by a large proportion, at least, of Senators and others who have given the question consideration, that it would not be wrong as a matter of governmental policy if we did grant to newspapers and other publications in the second-class list some subsidy. I think it is also conceded, however, that we ought not to grant the large amount of subsidy that the present law grants.

Newspapers and magazines, as I understand, do not use the mails for the transportation of their publications within a small radius of 100 or 150 miles from the place of their publication, because they can send them cheaper by express. therefore, no economy in their using the mails. They do not use them because they can do it cheaper otherwise. We do not get that part of the business, no matter what the rate is. If we fix a rate that is higher than the express companies will charge, the business will go, and properly go, to the express companies.

I am willing that there should be some loss on the matter. It seems, therefore, if we want to provide for the most economical method of handling this business that it is absolutely necessary to divide the country up into zones and take distance into consideration.

Why should we not take distance into consideration? Why, Mr. President, we had it discussed a great many years when we had the Parcel Post System before us; and it finally resulted, after a great deal of consideration and debate, in the adoption of what is known as the zone system. Wherever the weight is sufficient to be a material item in the transportation of an article, no matter what it may be, then distance becomes important. It is not so important in a letter; and we have a universal rate extending over the entire country on a letter, because the weight is so small that it would cost more to compute a mileage and a weight basis than it would save. But when we come to carrying bulky articles, tons of articles, when we come to carrying publications by the ton, by the carload, then distance ought to be considered. The express company, whose rates are made up entirely on the theory of a business proposition, considers distance on such articles. We consider it on everything else. So that when the weight becomes a material matter we ought to take distance into consideration, because that is a part of the cost. We can not eliminate it, as a matter of fact, when we come to pay the bill. Why should we eliminate it when we come to make the charge?

I hold in my hand one copy of the publication known as the Iron Age, issued January 4, 1917. It weighs 4 pounds and 14

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Nearly five pounds.
Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President—
Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.
Mr. BRYAN. Right upon that point I want to make this suggestion to the Senator: The present rate is 1 cent per pound in any zone

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. Mr. BRYAN. The Senator's amendment would make it half cent a pound—— Mr. NORRIS. For the first 150 miles.

Mr. BRYAN. In the first zone; that is, up to 150 miles.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes

Mr. BRYAN. That is reducing the present rate.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRYAN. Now, here is what will happen unless the Senator allows the rate to remain at least 1 cent per pound. Here is exactly what will happen: That document, and others like it, will be shipped by freight into the zone, and then it will be mailed out from there; and the Government will suffer twice the loss it is suffering now on that kind of a publication within

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not agree with the Senator. Take this very publication: I do not suppose, within the first 100 or 150 miles, that they send it by mail. It goes by express.

Mr. BRYAN. No; the Senator does not get my point at all. Mr. NORRIS. Just let me finish; then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator. It goes by express. There is a profit in it. We do not get the profit. Wherever they are going to send it a distance that the express company will not carry it, we get the business, but there is a loss in it. Now, I have no objection to the publishers sending it by freight and then putting it in another zone and letting it be mailed there. I suppose we would have to change the law before a publication could do that; it must be mailed at the office where it is published, but I have no objections to that.

Mr. BRYAN. I will suggest this to the Senator: Let the present rate stand up to 300 miles—up to the end of the second zone—and then begin the Senator's addition, instead of cutting it down, because that will happen, and that is the very thing that has happened in the parcels post. That is the thing that happens in connection with these great catalogues, weighing several pounds, gotten out by the mail-order houses. They ship them into the zone in which they will be delivered, and the Government sustains the loss. If the Senator puts this rate at half a cent a pound, there will be an inducement to do that. The Senator can very easily leave it 1 cent up to the 300 miles, and then begin his increase, without putting in jeopardy the revenues that are now obtained by the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. I have discussed that question to some extent, and I will return to it again before I close. I was not quite through with the general explanation I wanted to make.

Mr. BRYAN. Just one other suggestion. I notice that the Senator's amendment puts in parentheses the mileage contained in the zones. For instance, he says, "third zone (300 miles), * * * fourth zone (600 miles)." I suggest to the Senator that he modify his amendment by striking out the number of miles, because, of course, the third zone is from 300 up to 600 miles, and just leave it "third zone." The law fixes that.

Mr. NORRIS. No; the third zone is from 300 miles down.

The Senator refers to the language in the parentheses?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes. Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to striking that all out. Mr. BRYAN. I suggest that the Senator leave that out. Mr. NORRIS. I only put that in as a matter of explanation to Senators who might read the amendment. That is the only reason why I put it in.

Mr. BRYAN. That is a very good purpose, but it ought not to be incorporated as a part of the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is a good suggestion.

fectly willing to strike that out. Now let me proceed.

I was taking this particular publication as an illustration. It is estimated that 10 per cent of the edition of this publication goes by express. Why? Because they can send it cheaper in that way. Wherever there is a pront in it the express what I will carry it; and I am not complaining of that. That is what I would do. Wherever there is a profit in it the express company would do if I were publishing. That is what anybody would do. The publishers are perfectly justified in doing it; but it seems to me that we ought to fix the law so that we would not get a profit, and yet so that we would get the business. It would be advisable, if we could, to send these publications for a less rate than that I have named in the amendment. We do not want to make money out of it. It is also stated here, however—I think I got this information from the Senator from Florida; I think probably he has already read it to the Senate—that the Government received $614 for distributing this publication, and that it cost the Government $4,300 to make that distribution.

It is estimated, I do not know that it is a correct statement or not, that the price for advertising matter in this publication is $50 a page. There are 636 pages of advertising matter here, and at $50 a page it would amount to $31,800. There are 132 pages of other matter, reading matter, so called, in the publication.

Mr. President, it may be an exaggerated instance, but there are thousands of other illustrations that could be given, daily newspapers, Sunday editions particularly, that only in a smaller degree illustrate the same proposition. I do not believe that the Government ought to carry that at the rate we are compelled under the law to exact now. It is not unjust to make the charge somewhat commensurate with the service.

There would be a loss undoubtedly if this amendment were adopted; the Government would not get out whole; I am not expecting or asking that it get out whole, but it would base the charges somewhat on the cost the Government is put to in making the distribution of these publications.

Now, I want to say just a word about the rates I have named. I am not an expert. These rates may not be high enough, some of them may be too high, although I doubt that. I have tried to make them, if there is anything varying, too low rather than too high. This is going to conference. The Post Office Department has its experts. If there is something wrong with the rate I propose to charge here it can be remedied when we get the evidence of experts before the conference committee. In other words, it seems to me that it is the fundamental principle involved that we ought to enact into a law so that we can base the charges somewhat upon the cost.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President-

I yield to the Senator from California. Mr. NORRIS. Mr. WORKS. The principal objection I see to this zone system, if I may call the Senator's attention to it, is that it very evidently discriminates in favor of the large dailies in the cities, for example, and against the fraternal and religious publications that go out all over the country, because of their extended membership. I have received many telegrams from publications of that kind, as I suppose every other Senator has, calling my attention to the injustice of the zone system as applied to that kind of a publication. I think it would be utterly because the large daily newspaper circulates only a short distance away from home and almost all such publications would fall inside the first zone and would not be called upon to pay the additional amount that would result from this zone system, while the fraternal publications and religious publications go out all over the country, and their members would be subjected to the higher rate of postage. That seems to me to be unjust.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to say in answer to the Senator from California that I have given that matter some attention, and I have received the same kind of protests he is making. I would be glad to be more lenient if I could to the kind of publications the Senator mentions. I do not see how it is possible, however, to do it unless we would base it on the proposition of advertising. If we base the charges on the amount of advertising that a concern does and charge them a higher rate for the advertising part of it than for the other, we might reach that somewhat, but these publications would not agree not to carry advertising matter. After all, however, if we come down to a matter of absolute justice, has any proprietor of a newspaper or magazine the right to ask the Government to do something for him for nothing, or do so much more for nothing than it will do for its other citizens? If the daily newspaper circulates within 150 miles of its place of publication it costs the Government less to transport it and deliver it to subscribers than if it traveled 5,000 miles. So we have to take into consideration the interests of the taxpayers of the entire people of the country somewhat, and they ought to be given some consideration, because they have to pay the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice the Senator proposes 3½ cents per pound on second-class mail matter going to the eighth zone. Of course the eighth zone embraces all distances over 1,800 miles. If that were the case, then second-class mail matter that came from anywhere in the East going to any place, say, 300 miles west of Omaha, would have to pay 31 cents a pound?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that that is an exceedingly high rate to be imposed upon the papers of many of the religious and other organizations, farmers' journals, and so forth. If it is to be applied to the second-class mail matter, if we are going to charge 3½ cents a pound on second-class mail matter and make a zone system for second-class mail matter, why should not the same principle be made to apply to first-class mail matter? We make no zones for first-class mail matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me answer that, Mr. President. I thought I did answer it. First-class mail matter consists of letters. It would be impracticable to make a zone system of letter mail because the weight is an infinitesimal matter, it is too small to be taken into account, whereas a newspaper or magazine sending out tons on every publication day it can easily be and must be weighed at the time it is sent out. It is an easy matter to apply the zone system to that, but it would bring infinite confusion to apply it to every letter, so that every time you mailed a letter you would have to inquire of the postmaster how much postage you would have to put on it. In other words, while in theory the zone system would be all right in the letter mail, in the matter of practice it would be impracticable. It would take too much time to work it out, cause too much confusion, and do much more damage than it would do good.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator yield to me just a moment? The two elements of cost to the Government are han-The letter is so light that the hauling cost dling and hauling.

amounts to practically nothing to the Government-

Mr. NORRIS. That is right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. While the handling cost is 80 per cent of the expense to the Government. So distance does not substantially affect the cost to the Government of handling firstclass matter. The bulk comes as to second-class matter, and that is why the zone system is right as to one and wrong as to the

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator. I think what he states is correct. I want to call attention, however, to the criticism of the Senator from Utah. I have fixed for the eighth zone 31 cents. He says that is too high. The Senator from Florida complains that the first zone is too low. Of course, we will always disagree as to those rates. Other Senators will say that the eighth zone is too low. It has cost us more than 31 cents to handle second-class mail in the eighth zone. We must reach a compromise somewhere. The experts of the department say it costs 8 cents per pound. So if I am proposing to charge 3½ cents a pound, and it costs 8 cents to do the work, certainly the owners who are circulating their publications in the eighth zone ought not to complain. It seems to me that we are treating them liberally.

Mr. President, as I said, I am called out to attend a conference committee and I will now yield the floor. I think this matter should go through in some form. I am not so much impressed with the particular rates I have attached here. My own idea is they are right, but I know it is a matter of compromise, and I know that to some extent it is a matter of expert knowledge. The conferees on the part of the Senate and the conferees on the part of the House can have, and will have, before them the assistance of all the experts that the Government has in the Post Office Department. It seems to me if we once adopt the fundamental principle we will be able to work out a system that is fair, and if it should be found on trial that some rate is too low or some rate is too high it could be easily modified, even if a mistake were made, at a subsequent Congress.

Mr. BRYAN. Before the Senator concludes—
Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. BRYAN. I ask him if he will not modify his amendment so as to fix the rate at 1 cent per pound in the first and second zone?

Mr. NORRIS. No; Mr. President, I have not been impressed with the argument, much as I usually admire the logic of the Senator, that that rate ought to be 1 cent a pound. I do not think there is anything sacred about a 1 cent a pound rate. We are making a profit in that part. We ought not to do that. We ought to do it just as economically as we can.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator says he is about to leave the Chamber?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes?
Mr. BRYAN. I am going to move before the Senator's amendment is disposed of to raise the rate from one-half cent to 1 cent, and I give notice of it so that no one can come back here and say that any advantage has been taken of him.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator, or course, or any other Senator, can move any modification he pleases, and I can vote against it; although even if that modification were made I would still favor the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask my colleague if he reserved in Committee of the Whole the privilege of offering this amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I did not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I make the point of order that the right to offer that amendment was not reserved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Chair advise me on what ground?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A Senator does not have to reserve anything in Committee of the Whole. Any Senator has a right to offer any amendment in the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. It is a common occurrence and happens nearly every time we get a bill into the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This was passed upon in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. NORRIS. This amendment was not passed on in Committee of the Whole. It was not offered in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I make a point of order against the amendment now before the Senate to which my colleague offers his amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This whole thing is going to be settled in the Senate and the Chair is going to save time. On the amendment which is now under consideration the point of order was sustained in Committee of the Whole. There was no right to offer it in the Senate. Therefore, by unanimous consent it came in the Senate; no one raised the question. The Chair believes that it is now before the Senate by unanimous consent and overrules the point of order. An appeal can be taken and we can get along very rapidly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I make the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the one the Chair has just ruled on.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

The amendment before the Senate to which the ruling of the Chair just made was directed, relates to that part of the amendment which concerns first-class postage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No.

Mr. STONE. The part upon which the Senator from Utah demanded a separate vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair knows that the Senate is going to settle this question, and for the purpose of expediting matters the Chair rules: First, the Chair has uniformly held that a point of order goes to the entire amendment and not to the right of a Senator to have a vote upon certain portions of the amendment; therefore, any point of order raised goes to the amendment and not to a part of the amendment. from that ruling no appeal has ever been taken. Secondly, this entire amendment was ruled out in Committee of the Whole upon a point of order.

When general legislation subject to a point of order has been presented by amendment and the point of order has been raised and sustained as in the Committee of the Whole, and it is subsequently introduced in the Senate and passed by the Senate, it can not be reconsidered for purposes of raising a point of order to it, but only for purposes of amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. I beg to correct the Chair. It was not ruled out on a point of order. The Senate refused to waive the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It went out on a point of order. The Senate refused to set aside the rule so that it might be in-

Mr. BRYAN. That is right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was not therefore competent in parliamentary practice to introduce it in the Senate except by unanimous consent. When it was presented and introduced the view of the Chair is that it came in by unanimous consent, and therefore a point of order can not be sustained to it unless by unanimous consent. That is the ruling of the Chair, and there can be an appeal from it; it is very easily settled.

STONE. What is the immediate question before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska has just raised two points of order; one, as the Chair understands it, that this is general legislation.

Mr. STONE. My inquiry is not directed to the point of order. Waiving that for the moment, on the bill itself what is the amendment pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The entire amendment with reference to postal charges

Mr. STONE. The entire amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. But the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] has asked that a separate vote be taken upon a certain clause.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly. The Chair has ruled on that this morning and no appeal has been taken.

Mr. STONE. What was the ruling of the Chair?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The ruling of the Chair was that the entire amendment is before the Senate for amendment.

Mr. STONE. That is perfectly plain, but as to the part upon which a separate vote is asked?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That rule only applies to the vote. It is only applicable when we get down to a point where there is nothing to be done but to vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.
Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand the situation at present, the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] has asked for a separate vote upon his drop-letter 1-cent postage proposition?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.
Mr. WILLIAMS. The amendment contains three separate and distinct propositions. One is to raise the postage upon newspapers, one to raise the postage upon magazines, and one to reduce the postage upon drop letters. The parliamentary inquiry which I wish to propound is this: Is it in order now for any Senator to demand as a matter of right a separate vote upon each of the three propositions? Thus far a separate vote has been demanded only upon one of them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any doubt about the right to a separate vote upon the propositions as they may finally be in the amendment when it has been perfected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I wish to give notice that I demand now a separate vote finally at that stage upon each of the propositions-the drop-letter proposition, the newspaper proposition, and the magazine proposition.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. There are only two propositions in the amendment. One is as to firstclass mail matter and the other as to second-class mail matter.
